"Even though the library is open there won't be any undergraduates in there," Knesel said. "All the graduate students study in the carrels where you can't hear a thing."

Archie Copeland, assistant to the head of Graham Memorial, told Knesel that "this is where we had originally planned to hold Jubilee, and from the lay of the land there is not as much space . . . as at the other end."

Copeland also said the move would "put the stage in a hole."

Knesel countered with: "Any way you look at it, a downward slope is better than an upward slope or level ground."

At this point the meeting was adjourned to go down to Polk Place and "see the site." The entire board took their lumbrellas and "checked it out" during yesterday's late afternoon drizzle.

Standing under the dripping Oaks near the library the Board took a vote of hands and sloshed home to dinner.

Would You Believe . . .

By Bill Hass

Whenever someone asks me what my favorite baseball team is, I bow my head and mumble, "Waszt'n." Upon further investigation, the questioner will finally get a clear answer of "Washington."

"The Senators? Man, you must be kidding!"

Unfortunately, no. Having lived next to Washington for 18 years and having no other team nearby, the natural thing to do was cheer for the Senators. So I became a died-in-the-wool fan.

It wasn't always easy. During the 1950's the Senators had a habit of bringing up the rear of the league or finishing next to last at best. Suddenly, in 1960, they astounded the baseball world by finishing fifth, barely nosed out of fourth by the Cleveland Indians. Harmon Killebrew, Camilo Pascual, Eart Battey and Jim Lemon formed the backbone of a solid team.

So what happened? Calvin Griffith thumbed his nose at D. C. and took his young, exciting team to Minnesota where he could make some money. Last year, of course, the Twins won the pennant, and it was impossible not for me to think of it as "the pennant Washington should have had."

They kept Washington in the major leagues with an expansion team. But what a team. A bunch of rejects, castoffs and borderline players from other clubs. This crew achieved an impossibility in futility one day. Leading Boston by 12-5 with the Red Sox at bat in the ninth, two out and nobody on, they proceeded to blow the ball game. It was simply incredible.

The poor souls finished ninth that year, then staggered home last for two years in a row. They struggled through abominale 17 and 16 game losing streaks, playing dull, atrocious baseball. They had no colorful players except Jimmy Piersall one year, and he soon caught the spirit of things by having one of his worst seasons.

It was enough to try the patience of a longtime fan. Then, miracle of all miracles, Gil Hodges guided the Senators to ninth place two years ago and eighth last year. Optimism abounded in spring training this season. There were even wild thoughts about the first division.

So Washington has roared off to a 2-8 start. They are playing with a shortstop who hit .185 last year and a catcher who did not exactly terrorize pitchers with a .200 mark. A regular outfielder, Don Lock, is swatting a hefty .095 so far his year. How bad is that?

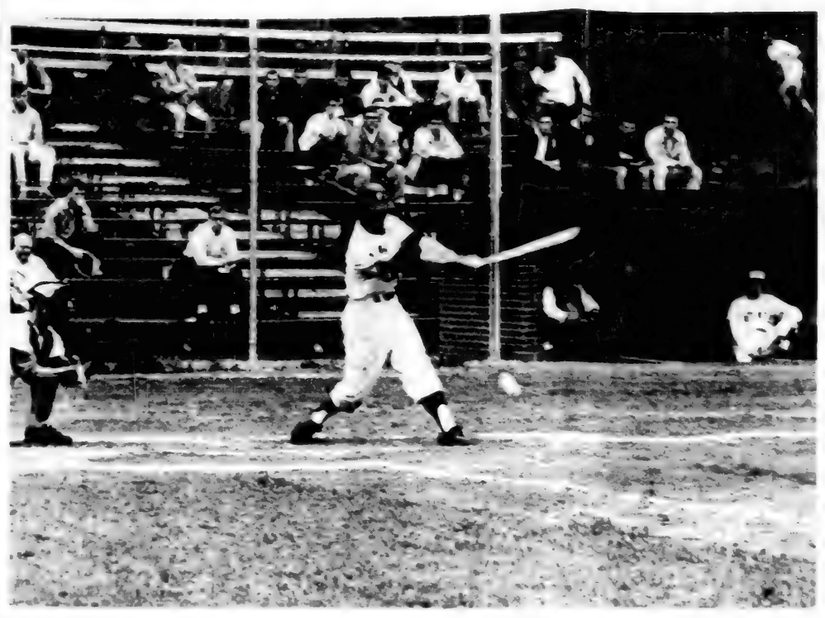
Heels Shoot Down Pack, 11-4



RODNEY THOMPSON IS an easy out on this particular play, but his teammates came through often enough to clobber the State Wolfpack by 11-4 for their fourth consecutive victory.

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

If North Carolina wins the ACC baseball title — and baby, after yesterday's 11-4 win over State we're in good shape now — a big assist will have to go to Ehringhaus College.

Last Saturday as usual the Ehringhaus gang lined the six balconies of their seven-story dormitory beyond left-center field, and came out with a big "Go Moonbeam Go" sign which helped Beattie "Moonbeam" Leonard pitch a 3-2 win over Virginia.

Yesterday they REALLY did it up big, hanging a three - story - tall animation of a refreshingly - clad young lady over the seventh-story railing. And their Tar Heels responded to that and numerous outbursts of vocal enthusiasm with a come-from-behind win over N. C. State U. which kept them solidly atop the league standings with a 6-1 mark (12-8 overall).

It was Carolina's fourth straight win, all against conference foes.

An intermittent rain fell during the game, and it was a big factor in the looseness with which the contest was played. There were nine errors, 19 hits, eight walks — and no pitcher was effective until Carolina's Danny Walker entered the game at the start of the fifth inning and gave State just one hit and two walks the rest of the way.

Walker Stars

Walker (4-1) got the win, and tossed in some dramatics to boot.

Danny was hitless in 13 trips this season before he came to bat with two on base in the seventh inning. But then he lifted a drive to left which just barely edged over the big screen for a three-run homer — and you've never seen anyone run the bases so slowly! Danny says that his pulled thigh muscle is "all right." He is Coach Walt Rabb's logical choice to face Clemson there on Saturday.

Talbott . . . 4 RBI

Danny Talbott had another big day at the plate with a pair of two - run doubles. Bob Hume and John Shaw each cracked three singles.

Buddy Cahoon made his second shaky start in succession being knocked out in the third although he picked two men off base in the first.

State scored three runs in that third, with a double by Jerry Price and a triple by Freddie Combs being the big blows. George McRae relieved and yielded an unearned run in the fourth before Walker took over and controlled the 'Pack through the final five frames.

Talbott shot his first two - run double into right field in the third to plate courtesy runner Larry Mills and the singling Bob Hume. In the fourth, the Heels rallied from a 4-2 deficit to take charge of the game.

Heels Take Charge

Bob Bonczek walked to lead off and Shaw singled. Charlie Carr dropped down one of two perfect sacrifices he made during the game to move them up, and Bonczek scored as Rod Thompson grounded to second and Fred Combs threw wildly to the plate.

Charlie Thomas walked to load the bases, and then Wolfpack loser Buck Johnson (4-3) passed McRae to fill the sacks. Hume looped a single to left to score Thompson and keep the bases loaded, and then McLaughlin drove a foul fly to left, with Thomas scoring after the catch. Talbott reached on an error to re-load the bases, but no more runs scored.

Talbott unloaded another two - run double in the sixth, this one bouncing against the left field fence, following a walk and Hume's third single. Then Danny Walker rapped it up with his homer in the seventh.

The Heels play at South Carolina (Friday) and at Clemson (Saturday) this weekend, and both games will be broadcast by WCHL radio. Duke is here next Tuesday.

Hill, Lemonds, Hull

Charlotte Trio Pace Frosh

By JOEY LEIGH
Special to the DTH

The original Three Musketeers may have come from a Dumas novel, but the Carolina freshman baseball team has their own version of this famous trio.

The Three Musketeers on the Tar Baby squad are Garry Hill, Skippy Hull and Ronnie Lemonds. All three of these baseballers came to Carolina from Garinger High of Charlotte. For the last four years, Hill, Hull, and Lemonds have been playing baseball for the same team.

With Hill doing the pitching, Hull the catching, and Lemonds the fielding at third base, Charlotte baseball teams have experienced a great deal of success these last four years.

In these four years, the Charlotteans had national finishes each season. They finished third in Babe Ruth ball, first in the Colt League, second and first respectively for the past two years in American Legion ball. Garinger High School also won the State 4-A title last year, when Hill, Hull and Lemonds led the team.

SOUTH AFTER

Garry Hill, the highly sought and publicized youngster, chose Carolina over numerous scholarship offers, some of which came from Clemson, Florida State, V.P.I. and Wake Forest. In the professional draft, the Washington Senators chose Hill last year.

Skippy Hull, the husky catcher and clean-up hitter for the Tar Babies is talkative and fun-loving on and off the baseball field. Joking about his size and lack of speed, Hull said, "They timed me running to second base and sun dial move a couple of inches."

Ronnie Lemonds combines his hitting ability with aggressiveness in the field to become a complete third baseman, a la Brooks Robinson. Lemonds was runnerup for the American Legion batting title in the playoffs last year. Said Garry Hill of his comrades, "Ronnie and Skippy are always up there in batting."

COACH GETS CREDIT

Hill credits his high school coach, Joe Tomanchek, with teaching him "a lot of baseball". Hull, his battery mate, said, "Garry has always been able to throw hard. His main fault was in his curve ball. Bill Haywood worked with him and really helped his curve."

Hull attributes his teams' successes to the pitching of Hill and the coaching of Tomanchek. "Joe made you want to win," said the burly catcher. "The most runs that I've seen scored off Garry in any one game in four years is four. When I go out to catch Garry, I never expect him to allow more than two runs. I'm even used to his pitching one, two and three hit ball games. Most people are amazed at his performances, but they are old hat to me."

Lemonds, in addition to base ball, played halfback on Garinger's football team. For the next five years, a Lemonds will be in Carolina baseball circles. Ronnie's younger brother and southpaw pitcher, David, has already been signed by UNC for the coming year.

Hull related an amusing incident which occurred at an American Legion game with Statesville last year. "I went up to sports announcer, Bill Currie's booth. He let me announce one-half inning. Boy, was I nervous. When I got home, I found out that I had given the score nine times."

"We never have any trouble getting along after four years," stated Lemonds. "On the field, owe know each other's moves and have developed confidence in each other's ability."

Hill, the hard - throwing righthander, has had such a tremendous career that it was hard to pick out the highlights. Hill pitched a perfect game in his senior year of high school and in an American Legion game, he struck out 19 men. In his brief debut as a college pitcher, Hill has allowed no runs and only four hits while pitching three complete victories.

The motto of the Musketeers, "All for one, and one for all", is likewise the motto of Hull, Hill and Lemonds. They don't care about glory or publicity. They just want to be a part of victory and success.

Alcoholics Beat Apathetics On Grubar's One-Hit Job

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Dick Grubar, Carolina freshman basketball star, turned his talents to softball Monday and threw a one - hit shutout as the Avery Alcoholics beat the Avery Apathetics, 4-0. King got the only hit off Grubar in the second inning. Grubar walked five men in the seven innings he pitched, but was never in trouble. Dillard had two hits to lead the Alcoholic attack.

The Craige C Killers pounded the Craige A Zonkers, 18-4. Boger and Yeargen cracked home runs and Melvin had four hits in four at bats. Six runs in the first and third did the most damage. Grindstaff socked a home run for the Zonkers.

Navy Dolphins scored seven runs in the third inning and went on to pummel Med Blue, 16-7. Greenamyer had a home run among the Dolphins' 17 hits. Med had 16 hits but couldn't use them to score as well as Navy did.

The Ruffin Rebels blasted the Mangum Sluggers, 12-2. Sutton had the only Slugger hit, although they picked up two runs on walks. Blaylock, Leafe and Skeen had two hits each for the Rebels.

Chandler of the Carr Wheels scattered five Old East Dud singles as his team won easily, 11-0. Welling was the big man at bat with two home runs and a double. Whitaker added another homer.

The Mangum Mugs rallied for five runs in the last inning to beat the Ruffin Roadrunners, 11-7. Conner's home run put the icing on the cake for the Mugs. Wilson had one for Ruffin.

Morrison G also came from behind to defeat the Morrison F Falcons, 6-5. Two walks, two errors and a single by Stuart Bull proved to be the winning margin for Morrison G.

Charles Cranford socked two home runs as the Morrison B Bucs downed Morrison E, 10-3.

The Church Steer Crusaders edged the Stat Grads, 9-8. The Church boys scored four runs in the last inning on three walks, two singles and two errors to clinch the win. Poole spanked a home run for the losers.

Burnette and Evans had home runs to lead Dental IV over the Public Health Hellcats, 4-3.

Everett Rogah won a protested 4-3 decision over the Aycock Aardvarks.

The Stacy Lizzards beat Lewis White, 12-7. McKinnon had three hits for Stacy, including a home run.

Playmakers To Do Three One-Act Plays

The three plays to be presented are "The Actor" by James Layton of Chapel Hill; "Kilroy Was Here" by William E. Watson of Sanford; and "The Captain" by Mel Hutto of Birmington, Ala. All three plays are products of Professor Thomas M. Patterson's playwriting classes this semester.

Curtain time for the triple bill is scheduled for 8 p.m. on Wednesday and Thursday, and each production will be followed by a short discussion and critique of the play led by Professor Harry Davis. There is no admission charge, and the public is invited to attend either performance.

"TO DIE IN MADRID is a classic elegy on a bitter war. To ideologists it was the first war between the raised palm and the clenched fist, Fascist and Communist. Right and Left.

To literature, it was Hemingway's war more than anyone else's — and to have fought against Franco was for a generation of intellectuals an impeccable union card that got some of them into trouble later. For Frederic Rossif, his documentary film on that war is, above all, a film of remembrance. It seems a strange thing to say about such particularly brutal subject matter, but Rossif's film is elegiac and almost tender. Shots and footage are manipulated, fused, given an authorative sweep—as if that bloody footage had been shot just for his purpose. It is almost as if Rossif had directed that war. . . .

This dispassionate gift for comment is what makes the film so moving. There is no sensationalism . . . For those to whom this war meant something, the film sweetly and terribly revives passions in the light of irreversible distance. For those who know nothing about it, Rossif has provided a compassionate and clinical model of the human animal in the last romantic war. 'TO DIE IN MADRID' is not just a documentary, an informational piece of cabbage. It is a work of art and a masterpiece."—Brian O'Doherty (Life)

Racy Cobra Draws Crowds To Fastest Car On Campus

By JACK TATE
Special To DTH

"This car's solid up to about 135 miles per hour, but after that you begin to feel like you don't want even a fly to hit you," David McDonald, a junior from Tryon, says of his 1965 A. C. Cobra, one of the world's fastest sports cars.

Whenever McDonald's rich blue Cobra is parked on campus, inevitably a small group of students gather around and start speculating about how fast it will go and how much it cost.

There's no doubt that this just isn't the car for little old grandmothers. In 4.7 seconds the 330 horsepower Ford engine can have the Cobra moving at 60 m.p.h. In 5 or 6 more seconds the car hurtles along at 100 m.p.h.

The most impressive thing about the car is its phenomenal cornering ability. I road in the Cobra as it sailed at 90 to 100 m.p.h. over a winding road where every major curve was marked "35 m.p.h." At no time did I feel in danger of the Cobra's leaving the road or going out of control.

McDonald finds that most people don't even know the name of his sports car. "Most of the girls," he said, "seem to think it's a little MGA or triumph."

Frankly, any girl who thinks an A. C. Cobra is an MGA should be immediately banished to Outer Mongolia. In the sports car world that's about as bad as mistaking a Cadillac for a Volkswagen.

New Cobras cost between $6,500 and $8,500, depending on the amount and type of speed equipment and general accessories requested. All are built by Carl Shelby, Inc., in Los Angeles, Calif., and usually the company takes about seven months to fill an order, according to McDonald.

The 1966 Cobras have an even bigger engine than McDonald's 1965. So instead of a top speed of 145 m.p.h., these new Cobras run up to 175 m.p.h. However, McDonald points out that the new Cobra's performance is mainly better at high speeds. "Acceleration in the first and second gears," he says "is very much the same. The new Cobra is about 600 pounds heavier than mine and this hurts its acceleration up to about 90."

McDonald's car, which has an all - aluminum body and engine, weighs only 2,000 pounds and, because of this light weight, gets almost 18 miles to the gallon on the highway. "But I doubt that it gets half that around town," McDonald points out.

For Carolina Gentlemen with about $8,000 who would like to have a rare breed of automobile (three in North Carolina) with almost enough horsepower to fly, the Cobra's quite an investment.

Just don't hit any fies as you roar down the road at 150 m.p.h.

Jay And Americans Reach Top After Spiral Career

Success has not been overnight for Jay and the Americans, nor has it been without hard work and heartache.

The Brooklyn born and raised group will appear in a Saturday afternoon concert of Jubilee in Polk Place.

The group, which comprises Jay Black, Marty Sanders, Sandy Deane, Howie Kane, and Kenny Vance was formed in late 1961. They grew up in the same section of Brooklyn, and they played together at various times, were on teams together, dated the same girls and finally, through their mutual interest in music, came together as a singing group.

Their first record, "She Cried," came out in the spring fo 1962. It was an immediate smash and went to No. 2 in the country. At that point the boys proceeded a pattern that has become a cliche in the business. Unprepared, they went out on the road, thinking stardom lay immediately before them. Of course they fell on their faces. Each personal appearance became a trial, tempers frayed, and the group almost broke up.

Dispairing for a direction to their careers, they went looking for a manager. Early in 1963 they found one, and, with his help, worked out a plan for really developing their talents. With singing, dancing, and acting lessons every week, as well as daily rehearsals, Jay and the Americans began to come into their own. After a few months spent breaking in their act in a Greenwich Village club, out on the road they went.

Since a new hit, "Only In America," was breaking, jobs were plentiful. This time, though, each appearance was both a challenge and a pleasure. With the audience and the promoters responding enthusiastically, the boys found more work coming in than they could handle.

The following two years found Jay and the Americans working at every opportunity to further the development of their talents. While preserving their youthful exhuberance and their feel for the sound of the 60's, they broadened their scope and began adding show tunes, standards, and quite a bit of comedy to their act. This led to college concerts, night clubs and television appearances, in addition to the normal one-nighter circuits.

This record opened up even more doors for the group. They appeared in the musical theatre rendition of "Bye Bye Birdie" and received great reviews for both their singing and their comedy ability. Recently they have appeared in the full length motion picture, "Wild, Wild Winter."

The hard work and the many heartaches have been worth it to Jay and the Americans. For now they're well on the way to establishing themselves as one of American's most excitint acts.

Moore: AG Staff Too Busy For Case

By ALA BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

RALEIGH —Governor Dan K. Moore said here yesterday that a private law firm was employed to prepare a defense for the Speaker Ban suit because the Attorney General's staff isn't large enough to handle the case.

Answering questions at his weekly press conference, Moore said the Raleigh law firm of Joyner and Howison was contracted because "Col. W. T. Joyner is an excellent lawyer.

"He has served on the Britt Speaker Ban Study Commission, which drafted the compromise law, and is familiar with the facts involved in the case."

Moore added that he had gone before the legislature to ask that the law be amended. "It is the law of the state. Legislature passed the amendment in good faith, and the state has the obligation to see that the case is properly defended.

"The Attorney General's office handles many cases and is not efficient enough to handle them all," he said. "The state does employ private counsels to assist the Attorney General, because he does not have a large enough staff to handle all the legal matters involving the state."

Moore called "a general practice" the hiring of the private firm.

Asked after the conference whether there was much chance of the defense answering the case with a motion of dismissal — in essence, not challenging the validity of the plaintiff's facts, Moore said, "I don't know. It's up to the lawyers."

Moore predicted that the answer will be filed "within the next two weeks, according to the latest information given him.

The governor also reaffirmed his approval of the one-university concept. He added that he hadn't discussed East Carolina College's campaign to become a university with ECC President Leo Jenkins.

Bulletin

The Ways and Means Committee of Student Legislature voted 4-3 last night to report unfavorably on the appointment of Frank Hodges as Attorney General by Student Body President Bob Powell. See tomorrow's DTH for further coverage.

Quarterly Looks For New Writing

Have you ever read the Carolina Quarterly? If you have and your response was negative, have you decided to give it up as a lost cause?

Michael Paull, graduate student in English, recently assumed the editorship of the Carolina Quarterly. After a brief talk with him, it is obvious that he is sincere in his desire to interest people in reading the Quarterly and to possibly convert those who do not care for its material, by giving it a "new face."

Paull, who attended the University of Michigan and obtained his masters in English at Cornell, above all is interested in getting UNC students to contribute to the magazine. He believes in the potential of a nationally recognized publication such as the Quarterly. It affords students the opportunity to gain national recognition.

Plans for next year are underway, but still in the formative stage. Thursday night at 8 p.m. in 308 Bingham an organizational meeting will be held. A staff for next year will be set up and Paull hopes that all interested students will attend the meeting.

One thing that is definite about next year is that student material will be solicited to a greater extent than ever before.

"That's the usual mail," Paull said, indicating five large manuscripts on the desk from such places as England and Iowa, "but the material from UNC students is good and sometimes even better than material received from around the country. Since this is a Carolina Quarterly, students should have the opportunity to publish—professors, also."

The two basic goals of the Quarterly as Paull sees them are to raise the standard of quality of the publication and provide a stage for the appearance of new, young writers, especially N. C. writers. A combination of these two hopefully will result in a publication of good, fresh, stories, poems and articles.

Paull says his philosophy concerning the Quarterly is based on working with quarterlies elsewhere, and in talking with former editors, such as Jerome Sterne (1961 Quarterly).

Next year the Quarterly will sponsor poetry and short story workshops every two weeks. Submitted materials will be discussed by editors, staff, and interested students. "This will afford an opportunity to find out what is going on in the mainstream of American literature."

MRC To Name Granville Dorm Governor, Aide

The newest, most luxurious residence college in the University is looking for a Governor for summerschool and next semester.

West Granville, the independent men's hall behind big fraternity court, will house 1,040 students beginning this summer.

The University has approved complete affiliation of the hall with other residences in the college system, so a temporary governor and social lieutenate governor must be selected.

The only qualification necessary for application is a willingness to live there. The requirement of a "C" average does not come into effect until next spring, so it does not bind this decision.

Male students wishing to apply should contact Brown this week at 933-1282.

The new college will become the fourth to be associated, formally or informally, with a women's hall. East Granville will be considered a part of the college and will have representatives in the senate.

The two selected for the positions will serve until the middle of October when formal elections will be held. Their major duties will be setting up of the formal college structure and organizing the fall election.

West Granville provides suites of four students, each room having a tub - shower combination, wall - to - wall carpeting, built - in desk, full length mirror, private telephone, weekly maid service and individually controlled heat and air conditioning.

Brown and Fred Schroeder of the Dean of Men's Office have estimated the cost of living in Granville to be approximately $40 per year more than university housing, including three meals daily.

'Time' Cites Hardison Among Nation's Best

Professor O. B. Hardison

English Professor Named Among 10 'Top Teachers'

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

English Professor O. B. Hardison has been selected by Time Magazine as one of the 10 best college professors in the country and may be featured in a cover story in the magazine in two weeks.

Hardison, 37, has taught here since the summer of 1957. He received his bachelor's degree here in 1949 and master's here in 1950.

Hardison was born in San Diego, Cal., and attended high school in Washington, D. C. He received his doctoral degree at the University of Wisconsin in 1956, then taught at the University of Tennessee and Princeton.

He said yesterday that he was notified of the honor some three weeks ago and was "delighted to be selected." He warned, though, that the story could be killed or postponed if big news stories break between now and May 3, when the story is scheduled to appear.

Hardison added, "Some two dozen people on the faculty are every bit as good as I and probably better. I am very flattered by their selection."

He has published four scholarly works including "Practical Rhetoric," a textbook; "English Literary Criticism: The Renaissance," "Modern Continental Literary Criticism," and "Christian Rite and Christian Drama in the Middle Ages."

The last book was written under the sponsorship of a Guggenheim Fellowship.

Hardison has also written poems published in "Poets of Today" and another anthology containing works by North Carolina poets.

In 1962 he wrote "The Enduring Monument" a study of Renaissance literary criticism and has since written an unpublished novel, "The Last Drop."

Hardison teaches courses in literary criticism, in Renaissance literature and on Milton, on both the graduate and undergraduate level.

He is "known for his enthusiasm, his ability to make very difficult concepts easily understood, his warmth, his fine sense of humor and his readings of poetry," according to one of his students.

Hardison "can make bad poetry so funny that it is enjoyable and make good poetry so rich and full of meaning that it is unforgettable," the student continued.

The professor is the editor of "Journal of Philology," which is published by the UNC Press. He is past chairman and present vice - chairman of The Southeastern Institute of Medieval and Renaissance Studies.

Hardison says he is "very fond of Time-style and amused by it." He has subscribed to the magazine for several years and "looks forward to it every week."

"But I don't think they picked the professors on the basis of whether they subscribed to the magazine or not!

Skits Spice Lively Show In Big Valkyries Program

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON
DTH Staff Writer

The lights went out. The curtain rose, and the 1966 Valkyrie Sing was on.

McIver took top prize in the small group competition with a medley entitled "The Four Seasons." The group, backed by three ukeleles, entertained with their "um-pah-pah" interpretation of spring as UNC's Campus Chest Carnival.

Alpha Delta Pi won the large group sing with another medley, but this time of Irish songs. The entire sorority was present, dressed in blue, and singing such old-timers as "Wild Irish Rose" and "Sweet Molly Malone."

The men entered in a separate sing competition. St. Anthony's Hall's "Thirsty Thirteen" took the top prize with several folk songs. "Follow me to the Green" and "The Lion Sleeps Tonight" were belted out by the madras and blue-jeaned crew.

Skits held the audience's attention for the rest of the evening. Among the most professional performances was the Kappa Delta's "Uncle Dan's Ban." The whole group went Broadwaying across stage in dress to represent every element on campus. "Up, Up with Students" was the theme as they called for less pickets and more student action for the Speaker Ban case.

Tri Delta went the "Old-fashion" path with their knickers, canes, long skirts, parasols and large ruffled hats. The couples quibbled over a marriage with or without a "Bicycle Built for Two," and finished up "Stomping Through the Tulips."

Prizes fell to Smith Dorm for their original theme "Never Be an Artist". It was an unusual topic for the dorm of the arts, but they completed the title by "unless you want a happy and sculptor came in second life." The parts of dancer, poet only to the live Grecian statue who winked when carried off stage.

Pi Beta Phi's "Mother Goose Goes to College" came complete with Mary Contrary, Mary (of little lamb fame), and the three blind mice. The mice sang out the sentiments of many seniors in the audience with "3 q.p.'s, — that's all we need."

Harmon — Forever Pres.

Need A Job?

Director J. M. Galloway of the Placement Service, 204 Gardner Hall, has announced that College Life Insurance Co., Wohl Shoe Co. and Dan River Mills will be interviewing today on campus.

Tomorrow, John Hancock Mutual Life Ins. Co. and Jefferson Standard Life Ins. Co. will be here.

Singleton Is Winner

His television script "A Day Like Today," will now be entered in a national contest sponsored by the World Law Fund.

The script concerns a man's trying to reconcile allegiance to his country with membership in an anti-war organization in a situation concerning nuclear war.

Single, of Morganton, N. C., spent three years in Army intelligence before coming to Carolina.

Summer Interns

Students interested in serving a summer internship in a municipal government in North Carolina should contact Dr. Donald Hayman, Room 226, Institute of Government, (telephone 933-1304).

Students will work from early June until the middle of September and will receive approximately $75 a week. Preference will be given to juniors and seniors and to students interested in permanent employment in municipal government.

Students have already been placed in Charlotte, Greensboro, High Point, and Rocky Mount. Additional internships are available in Charlotte, Greensboro, and Wilmington.

NSA Conference

NSA Coordinator Eric Van Loon announced that anyone interested in attending the spring NSA Regional should contact Phil Kirstein in the Student Government offices either this afternoon or tomorrow afternoon.

Carolina may send six delegates and six alternates to the conference.

Honor System Week–Third In A Series

Honor Courts 'Given' Authority– Watch Abuse Of Privilege Well

By TAYLOR BRANCH
Special To The DTH

Each student has a responsibility under the Honor System to himself, other students, and to the University as an institution. The limit and meaning of these responsibilities need to be more clearly defined, especially as they relate to the enforcement of rules by the judicial branch of Student Government.

The need is evident when one considers such problems as the applicability of rules during vacations away from school and the role of the student judiciary as an interpreter of University attitude.

The general theory of responsibility under the Campus Code is that students may act freely unless their actions impinge upon the rights and privileges of others or unless their deeds reflect badly upon the name of the University. This second restriction is under fire from several quarters and staunchly defended by others.

Some maintain that it is impossible to determine what does reflect badly upon the University because one must consider such factors as press coverage and the people who determine public opinion. For instance, is an unpublicized event, say destruction of a phone booth in Richmond, Va., a violation of the campus code? Does the actual or potential damage to the reputation of the University gauge the seriousness of the action?

There is an argument that distance from Chapel Hill must be considered and that the degree of publication will vary directly with the gravity of the offense, rendering publicity an accurate yardstick.

Others maintain that the association of a student with the University in the public eye is vastly overestimated, especially when the student is off campus. They argue that no one expects the University to be homogeneous and pure, devoid of extreme points of view and radical action.

Opponents respond that the University should never sanction these elements by denying that they are within the University community. UNC must claim them, but repudiate their actions.

The question involved here is one of the individual student versus the responsibility of the student to maintain the reputation of the University and the University's responsibility to insure the welfare of its students.

Is the University bound to impress the accepted moral values of the taxpayers upon its academic children in loco parentis? Should the University be a leader of social and ethical mores, or merely a reflector?

Does the University exist to train only the mind, or the whole person? Does a student agree to accept administrative scrutiny of his character when he signs a registration form? These are difficult questions, whose answers would more clearly define the roles and rights of student and University in the academic community.

To make the situation more complicated, one must consider the precarious system we have for maintaining and enforcing behavioral standards. The Administrative Deans have the right to determine "rules of conduct" just as it has the right to set up academic requirements for entertainment and staying in school.

This right is, of course, subject to ratification by the Chancellor, President, Trustees, Legislature, and so on in a hierarchy of both power and responsibility. But the enforcement of these rules has been given to the student judiciary, whose responsibility is protecting the rights of the defendant within the constitutional framework, while fulfilling an obligation to University standards at the same time.

The problem is that often these two responsibilities seem mutually exclusive to troubled members of student courts. This is due partially to the vagueness of the rules and partially to honest disagreement with them.

If ultimate authority is vested in the student courts, then the University is disfranchised. If this is not the case, (which is certainly is not), then the appearance of its being so should not be allowed. Provisions should be made for administrative review without appeal and student court decisions should be recognized as recommendations. This would soundly establish the student body at the bottom of the hierarchy mentioned above.

The problems I have outlined here are numerous and somewhat unrelated. It must be kept in mind that they arise in only a small percentage of cases today, and that the student judiciary and administration are in accord on most decisions. However, potential crisis should not go unrecognized. This is an area in which much understanding may be gleaned from an open, frank exchange of views.

David, della Rosa, Brooks 'Transcending Mediocrity'

Tired of hearing, "This is the greatest new group?" Well David, della Rosa and Brooks are not the greatest new group, but they do possess a musical creativity which transcends the mediocrity of today's market.

This self-contained musical act consisting of Hod David, Jr. (six-string guitar), della Rosa, and Skip Brooks (12-string guitar) will appear in concert at Saturday afternoon's Jubilee.

The group uses a bass accompanist and all instruments are amplified. The group is formally attired which in itself makes them sound pretty classy. Just as the ragged, somewhat unkept appearance of many of today's popular groups is a reflection of their music, so David, della Rosa and Brooks' appearance reflects their music — smooth, smart and tasteful.

You'll be happy to know that they do not fit into any musical category. Instead, their music is a skillful blend of true voices and excellent musicianship. They sing rhythm and blues, jazz, ragtime, gospel, pop, comedy and something that no other group has successfully attempted — medleys from Broadway shows.

The group was formed so that they could experiment musically. They wanted to sing their own style of music. Hod David, Jr. was a member of the Just IV group when he met Skip Brooks. And musically speaking, it was love at first sight. They decided to form their own group and prevailed upon Dianne della Rosa to join them. She proved to be quite an addition. Her voice range is nothing short of astonishing.

Aside from being a prolific song writer and accounting for much of the group's material, David's talents are more than musical. As a teenager, he was a nationally ranked tennis player in addition to excelling in football and basketball.

The music of David, della Rosa and Brooks is an exhilerating and joyful experience. It makes only one demand of an audience—an appreciation of good taste and originality.

UP Selects David Kiel As Chairman

Other officers elected were John Strickland, vice chairman; Ken Day, treasurer; Harry Wilson, sergeant at arms; and Tom Manly, John Civils and Tom Craver, executive committee members.

He said, "Let's show cooperation in the best interest of the Study Body.

"We must present a con-

"We must present a constructive and thinking opposition. We have controlling forces Student Legislature and have power but we must use the power with responsibility."

He said the UP was the larger, more representative student political party on campus.

"We must continue our tradition of leadership on campus," he said.

Less than twenty people attended the meeting in Gerrard Hall.

If The Rain Stops...

It should be a warm and sunny weekend for Jubilee . . . if the rain stops.

This attitude of uncertainty was one which could not be readily escaped yesterday afternoon as the rain drops played turn-about with the scanty sunshine. That's April in North Carolina.

But the workmen hammered and sawed away on the Jubilee stage on Polk Place yesterday with all the faith in the world that old Sol will show favor on our happy weekend.

And we believe theirs is faith well-placed. After all, what weather man would dare defy the State ABC Board to the extent of squelching the festivities of UNC's Jubilee Weekend by bringing in rain.

Earlier this week we voiced a plea that Graham Memorial officials take it upon themselves to move the Jubilee stage from the spot behind South Building to the opposite end of the Polk Place quadrangle in front of Louis Round Wilson Library.

At that time we cited several conditions that would detract from the pleasantness of the performances and which we felt could be eliminated by changing the location of the stage.

But Tuesday's decision of the GM Activities Board — a committee of students who themselves will be participating in Jubilee — was to leave the spotlight where it is. Needless to say, we were disappointed in this decision. However, this in no way should keep the weekend from being a success.

In a man-on-the-street type article appearing in the DTH a few weeks ago, several students indicated that they were not impressed—in fact, that they were disappointed — with the entertainment lined up for this coming weekend. It was interesting to note that many of those students who found this year's schedule to be such a let-down compared with those of previous years were freshmen — students who have never seen a Jubilee here.

We are reminded of the Sunday afternoon appearance of Lester Flat and Earl Scruggs two years ago. Everyone knew it would be terrible. Imagine, having these hillbillies on this campus to play for the Pepsi Generation during their Jubilee Weekend.

Nevertheless, the students dragged themselves out onto the lawn of GM Sunday afternoon. (What they dragged onto the lawn with them has been the point of some controversy.) The result was surprising. Everyone had an excellent time.

Why? Because the students wanted to have a good time.

This year, there should be little complaint about the caliber of entertainers lined up.

But if there is any, just remember Flat and Scruggs. This is Jubilee. This is Carolina. It can be great. It will be great . . .

Not Yet

In Sunday's editorial concerning proposed changes in Women's rules, we implied that the new policies would take this week if ratified.

This is not the case. The rules are to be approved this week, but they will not become effective until next fall.

Girls, please heed this, and don't go prancing across the campus in shorts or slacks this spring.

It's Your Problem

Raleigh News and Observer

Certainly few should be surprised that Senate hearings about safety defects in automobiles have had little if any effect on the auto-buying public. Everybody knows that automobiles can be dangerous to life and limb. They might properly be marked: "Caution: Auto Driving May be Hazardous to Your Health." But just as people are continuing to smoke cigarettes from packages which bear a similar label, so they will continue to buy and drive.

In the unending effort to increase highway safety, there should be insistence that cars produced and sold be built for safety as well as power and speed. In the long run, however, most hazards are built into the people who get hurt. Many of them are actually in the market for danger. The tough job of safety like that of health depends more on people than on products.

Support Hodges' Appointment As AG

It's happening again.

At least twice a semester, the local second banana politicians get involved in a dispute that can only end in a shouting match which obscures the very issues they claim to be discussing.

Tonight in Sutdent Legislature, you can be sure this bi-monthly rite will occur in characteristic fashion, for the appointment of Frank Hodges as attorney general of the student body will be sent to the floor for approval.

The composition of legislature is most unusual this session. Both the Student Party and the University Party hold 25 seats in the assembly, and in a purely partisan vote the deciding ballot would be cast by Speaker Bill Purdy. Purdy, of course, is a long-time member and candidate of the UP.

According to the by-laws of Student Government, the Student Legislature may reject any appointment made by the president of the student body. The proper and adequate reasons for rejection are not innumerated, but out of custom it may be assumed that the incompetence of the appointee must be proven before a truly legitimate rejection occurs.

This is the procedure used by all legislative bodies, and it allows appointees of varying experience to take over key jobs. Were this not the case, individuals of ability such as Postmaster General O'Brian and Defense Secretary MacNamara would never have been allowed to take office because they had not previously held office in precisely those departments which they were slated to take over.

The president of any organization is given wide powers of appointment over his administrative officials for the simple reason that he should be allowed to work with those individuals who he feels can work with him best and who can best get the job done to his satisfaction.

It is a very rare and serious thing when a legislative body threatens to reject a presidential appointee for the simple reason that they would prefer another fellow.

Unfortunately this seems to be the crux of the reason behind the opposition to Hodges' appointment.

Hodges is not very popular with certain factions of the University Party, and for obvious reasons. He was at one time an SP legislator and chairman of the Student Party. In the course of his party duties he has had occasion to disagree with some of the UP on many important issues.

The UP would much rather see unoffensive Jim Aplin take the office. Besides his past experience as an assistant attorney general, Aplin's regulations with the UP are pretty good.

One can only try to guess the reasons why the UP is so afraid of Hodges. One old-line UP official speculated recently, slapping his palm against the table, that Hodges would be "Bob Powell's brick-bat to use against South Building."

What these people don't seem to understand is Powell has been elected to do the job as he sees fit, and he must necessarily have the assistance he feels is ncessary.

Hodges has had nearly as many qualifications to his credit as some attorneys general have had in the past. He is well acquainted with judicial procedure, he served as a public defender for the accused in several trials. Hodges defended Paul Dickson in last summer's famous trial, and he served as a defense councelor in the Morrison "skin flick" trials. He is a past chairman of the Judicial Committee of the legislature.

Possibly Hodges' opponents are afraid he will not prosecute some individuals fully under the limits of the student codes. When informed of this conjecture, Hodges readily stated his intention to uphold the codes in all prosecution. This in fact was one of the criteria he had to agree on before Powell would consider him.

It is also possible Hodges is being criticized because he has advocated reform of the judiciary and the Attorney General's Staff. This is true, but it does not mean that he will create instability within the AG office or within the judicial structure. Many of his suggestions, such as having an official list of defense councilors and establishing the power of the investigator to recommend a punishment, have been supported by many members of the AG Staff.

Every day around Graham Memorial one learns of a new and even more petty reason for the opposition to Hodges' appointment, and clearly those who oppose him are now merely grasping at straws.

In this most amazing of controversies many members of the legislature should search themselves to recall the qualities of Hodges the individual. From the morass of purely partisan opposition, they may come to realize that Hodges is both fair minded and intelligent, and that he is possessed with that uncanny power of seldom being wrong on a given issue.

When they vote tonight, the members of the legislature might also try to remember one more thing: Hodges is President Powell's choice for this office.

"I just hooked that big jerk down the hall into buying two Jubilee guest tickets!"

Otelia Speaks On Symposium Smorgasbord

"Clarity and symplicity of statement—the watch-words of the thinker." They are the watch-words of the writer and speaker, also, if you ask me.

After all the hullabaloo about the big name speakers for the 1966 Carolina Symposium, I didn't know any more about Mind, Man, and Myth, when the symposium was over, than I did before it started. I listened through about three of the lectures, the rest I cut off (TV) after 15 or 20 minutes.

The best of all the speakers, to my way of thinking, was Ralph Aldo Ellison, the Negro.

I agree with Ellison that the race problem has a better chance of being solved amicably in the South than in any section of the nation, because of the personal relationship between the two races, which is totally lacking elsewhere. There is no discrimination by law in the North and West but except when the whites read of the riots in Harlem and Watts, they hardly know the Negro exist. While we in the South have had a real affection for the ones who worked for us.

This relationship between the two races in the South is what Mr. Ellison bases his assumption for future progress in Southern race relations. He says, "We need a past." "Unless upon itself, it can construct itself, what a vain thing is history (is man). We were always devoted to our domestic help, and I still have many good friends among the Negro race. While I think it a good thing for the Negroes to be more euqally distributed through the nation, I should be very sorry indeed, if they all left the South, and there weren't any more around to spoil me.

SMORGASBORD AGAIN

I went to the Chase smorgasbord Sunday. It was wonderful! And I didn't have to use my umbrella!

There was so much food, in abundance, and such a variety that it was more than I could eat, going through the line one time. However, I noticed many returned for more food, partly because your plate isn't big enough to hold it all, and because they could eat more food. I don't know where they put it. Their capacity evidently is bigger than mine.

I reminded some students to slow down, relax, and enjoy your food. There will still be plenty when you go for more. I sat by a picture window. It was really a pleasure to view the beautiful spring scenery as I ate.

I think the Sunday smorgasbord is a great addition to the dining accommodations of the University. Congratulations to the manager and his staff who are putting it on. The smorgasbord was well patronized.

If you haven't been, try it. I am sure you will like it too.

Letters To The Editor

Reader Blasts Kay's Column

Satire Misdirected

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Rarely has the gift of satire been so poorly directed and abused. But then, in the case of Mike Kay of the famed Phi Lam house, perhaps it can be understood. Kay has leveled his two-bit pea-shooters once again at the residence college system and apparently specifically at the Morrison pin. I, for one, am pleased to note that Kay believes it merits a three-column editorial spread, even satirically.

The residence college has never claimed (nor will it ever be able to claim) that it intended to overshadow or take the place of the Carolina fraternity system. Rather, it wishes to give each member of the residence college a certain degree of social life—formerly to be found only in the fraternities and sororities of our campus. It was not long ago that the fraternities had their immanent right of choosing their new brothers threatened by those who would claim that equal rights were being violated by the fraternity system itself. The residence college now reinforces the right for each person, and each fraternity, to choose his own friends—and thus its own new members.

It is in the cause of giving every Carolina student the opportunity, if he wants it, not only to learn and study, but also to relax and advance his own social environment, that the residence college system was advanced.

And it was Maverick which thought of the residence college pin as a means of instilling further unity and loyalty to a concept represented by tall Carolina blue stetsons. It is this loyalty that the officers of Mighty Mo display in wearing their pins. Many of them are, too, fraternity members. Few of them consider the two, the residence college and the fraternity, as incompatable or in competition with each other.

The fraternity pin, too, represents pride and loyalty. It represents friends and friendships, both social and academic. It represents a right too dear to be violated by the removal of one's freedom to choose one's friends. But Kay of Pi Lambda Phi chooses not to view the fraternity as such. In a paper in which articles read "Chi Psi Grants Two Fellowships" and "Pi Phi's Receive Award," Kay instead strikes out at the residence college pin. Does, he, indeed, feel a threat?

Jim Lenz

(Editor's note: In all fairness to Mike Kay, he had no hand in the decision which ordered his remarks set in a three-column spread.)

Aid Cancer Crusade

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

About 30 of the 90 departmental Academic Affairs offices have sent in their contributions to the 1966 Cancer Crusade.

This week the remaining Cancer captains on campus will be contacted to remind them to send in their envelopes, either to the local Cancer office on E. Franklin St. or to the Academic Affairs chairman, Marshall Smith, at the Utilities building.

The local secretary stated that some residential and some Health Affairs areas did not meet the April 22 deadline either but that the Crusade was expected to complete by May 1.

This year, to speed up the drive, a captain for each campus department in Academic Affairs was requested to see only those within the department. Mr. Smith asked that envelopes be sent back for records purposes even though there were no contributions. The 1966 Cancer Crusade was begun on campus after Easter Vacation.

From the material returned, it appears a methodical canvas was conducted so that everyone was given an opportunity to contribute.

M. D. Smith

Thanks To Thomas

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Could I express my cordial appreciation and thanks for the excellent editorial "The Walk-In," which appeared in the Tar Heel last Thursday.

I wish that all of us from the very beginning throughout the entire state could have echoed the wisdom and insight which this editorial showed. Could you therefore pass on to its writer my personal sense of gratitude.

'A Thousand Clowns' Is Robards' Finest

By JOE DEPRIEST

Fred Coe's new film "A Thousand Clowns" sparkles like champagne. Perhaps the vintage isn't the best but it is good and very refreshing.

Murray Burns, played by beagle - faced Jason Robards, has quit his job as writer for the Chuckles the Chipmonk TV program. Murray is in full-time pursuit of the "wild possibilities" of life, devoting his energies to such things as: prowling New York junkyards in search of statuettes; flying kites; yelling things like "Rich people! I want to see all of you out on the street for volley-ball — and let's snap it up" at buildings in the wee hours of the morning.

Murray also attempts to impart life's "wild possibilities" to his 12 year old nephew Nick, played by a grand little kid, Barry Gordon. Nick, by the way, is not the boy's real name. Murray has given his nephew several years to try out various names and pick a permanent one by his thirteenth birthday. Previously the boy has referred to himself as The Phantom, Chubby and Rafael Sabatini.

Murray and Nick lead a happy, unpredictable life in their one room, bizarrely furnished apartment until certain complications set in — namely, two social workers who seek to remove "Nick from his "unwholesome" environment. To save Nick Murray must again get a job and prove himself a member of the "dead" society he so much despises.

The essential plot, then, of Herb Gardner's film script— an adaptation of his own Broadway play — is nothing unique. But don't be fooled: it is a remarkably witty and often percpetive script with an excellent cast. Fred Coe's direction is skillful. Working with film editor Ralph Rosenberg, Coe has achieved some delightful and, in their own way, rather lyrical montage sequences. For example, when Murray and his current girl friend take a ride around New York on a two wheel bike, scenes overlap, blend together and build into a final illusion of a Mary Poppins - type flight over the New York skyline.

The music that accompanies Murray's roomps about town is usually a loud, flamboyant Sousa march or its equivalent. Once when Murray is hunting a job, the Hallelujah Chorus rings while the film cuts from faces in the city's crowd to shots of frying hamburgers.

Jason Robards as Murray the odd ball gives the finest film performance of his career. One character in the film says: "Murray, you're not a person — you're an experience". Robards is just that. Barry Gordon's performance is never that of the too cute kid. Gordon approaches his role with confidence and vitality. Gordon is a phenomenon: a believeable child actor. Nick flies kites but he is also fond of a toy hula dancer whose chest lights up.

Barbara Harris does a superb job as the social worker fresh out of graduate school who falls for Murray's nondescript allure.

There is some admirable work in the supporting cast: Martin Balsam won an Academy Award for his performance of Murray's brother, a successful TV producer. Balsam's role is minor but he gets a chance to display his full talent in one outburst near the film's conclusion.

Balsam, who plays a $30,000-a-year man, explains to his brother Murray how he must lie a little, cheat a little, make compromises to get ahead in life.

Two other fine performers are Gene Saks as the neurotic Chuckles the Chipmonk ("Kids hate me," he says) and William Daniels, who plays a computer card social worker.

Murray is a funny little island in a sea of pretension and stupidity. Murray thinks he can hold out forever until a thing called love forces him into a Great Compromise. (Nick pleads with him: "Couldn't we run away someplace? To Mexico — or New Jersey?") But Murray is trapped.

"A Thousand Clowns" is talky in spots and some may feel that its conclusion leaves something to be desired. However, as a whole, it is a film at once funny, mildly satirical and ture.

Panhell Advisor Suggests Changes In Greek System

By PEYTIE FEARRINGTON

Do sororities and fraternities make up a Greek system?

There is much debate about the Greek system in general, but Mrs. Dersey McDevitt, assistant to the Dean of Women and the adviser to the Panhellenic Counci, stands up for the sorority even in the dubious event that fraternities should be banned on this campus.

Dr. Herbert L. Bodman Jr. heads up a faculty committee for the investigation of fraternities. He and his committee are looking for the values of fraternal association, and if there are none, changes will be made.

The average male Greek scoffs at the "no value" idea of fraternities, but with the Germans catastrophy and the statistics that after pledging, grades drop 16% it is difficult to keep laughing.

They why fraternities? No one can deny the advantages of close friends living and working together. The problem today is the type of living and the lack of working.

Mrs. McDevitt says that "some fraternities are fulfilling their responsibility, but only a limited number. If the system is to include both sororities and fraternities, which it now does, the fraternities must make the changes or weaken the entire system, breaking us with them."

But no one side can be blamed completely. "No doubt part of all this is the fault of sorority girls," Mrs. McDevitt stated. "Greek mixers have become only combo parties where no one really meets his date, yet no boy would call up a sorority house and ask for a mixer consisting of supper and bridge. It's just not slick."

Sorority girls have not taken a stand about what the fraternity system has become. In Mrs. McDevitt's office the seven sorority presidents heartily agreed with her campaign to lessen fraternity vulgarity and strengthen scholarship and service, yet the sorority individual with date at frat house fails to take a stand.

When Mrs. McDevitt was asked why the men should think vulgarity is appealing to the women, she answered, "The fraternity men don't know what we like, but it's the trend, so they're safe."

If there is to be a real working system, unity on a casual basis must be found. Mrs. McDevitt sees the problem as "a self - consciousness of sororities and fraternities toward each other. Each group is trying to impress the other due to the myth of the sorority and fraternity person. This problem stems from a lack of contact with a number of individuals."

Because of the fraternity situation, not only are the powers above riled but many of the outstanding and capable university men have chosen to remain in the residence halls.

Mrs. McDevitt believes that "fraternities are demanding things that are trivial. Society is such that people are moving away from group activity. I'm not really sure this is good, because in essence they are affraid demands of any type will be made on them. Yet on the other hand, fraternities, and sororities here, must recognize the worth of the individual."

Along with this problem, which Mrs. McDevitt feels is the crux, she also sees other necessary revisions. "I can understand the value in pledge training. It doubtless teaches one to give of himself to the group, but it is full of useless duties. Rat court could be made into a forum for real problems. Keeping the pledges up all night takes the emphasis off scholarship. A big brother - little brother relationship could be one of actual guidance. The house as a whole could set and enforce standards of dress, drinking and conduct."

When asked why and how the present circumstances came about, Mrs. McDevitt replied, "It all boils down to leadership. The leaders so often move out of the house after their sophomore year leaving it to the hellers. It is these remaining hellers who get and maintain the house's reputation.

"Not only is it leadership in the fraternity houses, but in the soroity houses. We of the soroities can obviously impress. So far it has been an indifference that has brought undesirable consequences.

CAROLINA TODAY ONLY

Local News Briefs

RTVMP Hosts Broadcasters

The Deaprtment of Radio, Television and Motion Picturres will play host this week to some 35 North Carolina television broadcasters.

The group, composed of production and programming people from commercial television stations throughout the state will meet Thursday and Friday, April 28 and 29, in Swain Hall.

Purpose of the two - day conference is to bring broadcasters together to discuss matters of professional interest and to meet broadcasting students and observe their skills.

A highlight of the conference will be a talk by Dr. Dannie J. Moiffie of the UNC School of Business Administration. He will address the group Thursday on "Personnel Management." Dr. Moffie will speak to the broadcasters by means of the RTVMP Department's video - taping facilities.

Thursday afternoon, the group will witness a live production of the RTVMP 177 class.

Friday morning, representatives of commercial stations will hold session with students to discuss station functions and career opportunities in some 10 areas of television operation. These include programming, production, art, educational tv, promotion, sales, news, sports, film buying and general careers.

Friday afternoon, students will produce and direct programs from scripts provided by the participating stations. Purpose of this session is to illustrate the production versatility and flexibility of students in the RTVMP Department.

The meeting is one of two annual conferences held by the production and programming group. It is being held under auspieces of the N. C. Association of Broadcasters.

Mary Kirk Gets Orientation Post

Miss Kirk, winner of a scholarship awarded by the Women's Club of Raleigh, is a junior. Her new duties will include setting up orientation programs for the more than 2,300 incoming students to the University for the 1966-67 term.

In the past years Miss Kirk has been active in many phases of campus activities. As a freshman, she served on the house council, the Women's Honor Council, freshman class secretariat, YWCA hospital committee, attorney general's staff, YWCA hospital committee, Delta Phi Alpha German Epsilon Delta premedical fraternity, vice president of her dormitory, and orientation counselor.

In her junior year Miss Kirk has been on the Women's Honor Council, Honor Systems Commission, Panhellenic Court, a member of Valkyries which is the highest women's honorary society on campus, secretary of Delta Phi Alpha, Scalpel Reporter of Alpha Epsilon Delta, and Order of the Old Lampshades.

Miss Kirk is a member of the Kappa Delta social sorority and has been on the Dean's List for academic excellence.

ICC Approves Penn And NY Central Rail Merger

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government approved the biggest merger in history today, uniting the Pennslyvania and New York Central railroads.

But it rejected another consolidation that would have resulted in the nation's longest rail system.

The 11-man Interstate Commerce Commission unanimously agreed the Pennsylvania and New York Central would merge into a single line, absorbing all freight and passenger service of the bankrupt New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad.

But by the narrowest of votes — 6 to 5— it refused to allow the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, and Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroads to merge, taking over two smaller lines, into a 25,000-mile system linking the Midwest to the Pacific.

It was the most significant of the five merge vetoes the ICC has voted in a decade that has seen more than two dozen consolidations approved. And the Northern lines case —virtually certain to be disputed in a federal court — produced four vehement dissenting statements accusing the ICC majority of flouting the national transportation policy.

Arpproving the Penn-Central merger because of what it termed the financial benefits to railroads, shippers and public, the ICC disapproved the Northern lines merger on the ground that any financial advantages would be outweighted by "a drastic lessening of competition and adverse effect on employes."

Simultaneously, the commission rejected the New Haven's bid to discontinue all of its 273 passenger tains.

It urged Penn - Central to work with state and local authorities to shore up what the commission regards as a vital service in the New York - New England area. Only 40 New Haven trains may be dropped, the ICC said, and the rest mus run through 1966.

By the end of 1966, the ICC indicated, Penn-Central will have had an opportunity to seek a cure for New Haven's passenger difficulties. When this period expires, the railroad will be free to seek discontinuance again. But the ICC said it will take a close look at Peen-Central's efforts to put the service back on its feet in deciding any future case where discontinuance is sought.

In New York, the heads of the two merged railroads told a news conference they were pleased with the decision and were confident they could work out the New Haven takeover.

Stuart T. Saunders, chairman of the Pennsylvania's board, predicted "far better service freightwise, and some better passengerwise."

Alfred E. Perlman, president of New York Central, said railroading is "a growth industry," and declared his company had stopped the loss of freight business, and turned the curve upward.

In New Haven, the trustees of the New Haven Raidlroad said they had always recognized the need for passenger service, but had asked for its discontinuance because of the line's financial condition.

They noted the ICC had stressed the necessity of Penn-Central working out the New Haven passenger service terms with public officials. They said the commission appeared to have recognized that it should not have to continue beyound the end of 1966 "unless appropriate aid were forthcoming."

In Albany, N. Y., Gov. Nelson A. Rockefeller said the decision was "a great victory" for the state, adding that it cleared the track for negotiations on commuter service with a new metropolitan transportation agency.

The new Penn-Central system, nearly 20,000 miles long, will list assets exceeding $4 billion, a spokesman said, and will result in savings — according to ICC mathematics — of $80 million by 1974.

"There is no question but that the transaction will permit more economical and efficient use of the applicants' transportation facilities," said the ICC report, written by commissioner Kenneth H. Tuggle.

"The economies realized . . . will rebound in large part to the benefit of shippers, and thus to the general public, either through the improved service made possible or lower rates. For this reason the merger has met with the almost unanimous approval, in principle, of shippers throughout the nation."

But without taking in all New Haven operations, the ICC said, "The merger would not be consistent with the public interest" because the Penn-Central system would drain away New Haven traffic "and leave that moribund carrier in an irretrievable situation."

Endorsing an unprecedented agreement between the two railroads and their labor unions, the ICC imposed what it termed novel conditions to insure that nobody loses his job as a result of the merger.

Unneeded jobs may be eliminated only when employes retire or quit, and workers must be transferred within the system as the workload shifts and jobs open elsewhere.

The Penn-Central may not reduce its work force unless it can prove a 5 per cent business drop in any 30-day period.

The system must also protect the interest of three smaller Eastern railraods — the Erie - Lackawanna, Delaware & Hudson, and Boston & Maine — by freezing present traffic patterns and practices wherever they compete with those three raods.

If the three fail in their pending bid to be included in the Norfolk & Western system, the ICC said, they will have a year in which to seek inclusion in Penn-Central.

The new system must repay the three smaller roads whenever their annual revenues fail below a standard based on their 1964 income, the ICC said, with no requirement that Penn-Central be proven the cause of the decline. This condition produced the only negative vote in the entire Penn-Central decision, commissioner Howard W. Freas objecting.

In turning down the Northern lines merger plan, the ICC majority acknowledged that "The probable savings and benefits that would result from merger are more tangible than those derived from competition between the Northern lines." But it said. "We are convinced that they are not as great."

Commissioner Charles A Webb, who prepared the majority report, said:

"We conclude that the disadvantages of an appropriately conditioned merger — a drastic lessening of competition and adverse effect on carrier employes—outweigh the benefits that might be derived by applicants and the shipping public.

"Applicants have failed to show that their posed merger would result in transportation service to the public that is superiot to that which can be provided without merger, or that the benefits . . . outweigh the adverse effects of the merger on carrier employes and the benefits that shippers drive from the competition to be eliminated."

The majority said the individual lines are prospering and have withstood competition from other forms of transportation.

Approval of the merger, it said, would end all competition between the railroads involved at various points that account for 43 per cent of their gross revenues and 34 per cent of their total tonnage.

High Court Denies NAACP Appeal

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court threw out today an appeal from a Georgia ruling that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People can be held liable for picketing ordered by its Savannah branch.

The 5-4 decision, announced in a nine-word order, was vigorously attacked by Justice William O. Douglas who said it is the kind of judgment that ultimately could destroy the NAACP and other "unpopular groups."

The direct effect is that Haldred Overstreet, a white grocer, may collect $85,793.05 in damages from the national organizations, its Savannah branch and two branch officers.

The five Justices who compromised the majority, Hugo L. Black, Tom C. Clark, John M. Harlan, Potter Stewart and Byron R. White, did not state their reasons. They simply joined in this nine-word order rejecting the NAACP appeal:

Announcing their dissent from the bench, Douglas said the NAACP's views are "anathema" in some parts of the country and under "vauge" Georgia laws it could be held accountable for almost anything its branch does.

"Unpopular groups" like the NAACP, he said, "will receive crushing verdicts from emotional juries."

Continuing on this theme in his written opinion, Douglas said "the rights of political association are fragile enough without adding the additional threat of destruction by lawsuit."

To equate the liability of the national organization with that of the branch without proof that the national body "authorized or ratified the misconduct in question could ultimately destroy it," Douglas said, and is forbidden by the first amendment to the U. S. Constitution.

In New York, Robert L. Carter, general counsel of the NAACP said:

"We are of course very much disappointed with the court's decision . . . we will of course apply for a rehearing.

"We cannot take the view that the majority of the Court by its action today intended in any way to limit the right of peaceful protest accorded under the first amendment.

"In any event this is not a decision on the merits and we will continue to engage in peaceful picketing and other forms of peaceful protest in furtherance of the civil rights cause."

Pickets were stationed at Overstreet's store in Savannah in 1962 after a 14-year-old Negro employe complained to his mother that the grocer had accused him of stealing and had beaten him.

Phi Sig Kap Blasts Zete

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The rains came Tuesday and washed out most of the intramural softball games, but a few teams elected to play in the muck.

Phi Sigma Kappa strolled past Zete 1, 17-0. Weeks and Harrison smacked home runs and Barber added another one. The weak-hitting Zetes could came up with only two singles off the Phi Sigma Kappa pitcher.

Delta Sig Blue had two big innings and bopped the ZNT Zooboys, 13-5. Belsinger and Petree had two hits each in an eight-run first inning. In the third inning, home runs by Belsinger, Creech and Clarke provided five more Delta Sig runs.

DKE Red belted PiKA Blue, 12-4. Dudley and Hoyt supplied home runs to lead the DKE attack. Hardman and Jordan homered for the PiKA's. DKE scored seven runs in the third inning.

AK Psi Blue scored in the late innings to nip the Kappa Psi Bombers, 9-7. John Bailey's home run and a rash of AK Psi errors staked Kappa Psi to an early 7-0 lead. Dean Powell also rapped a home run.

To Expand Or Not To Expand

Should the ACC expand? One of the top priority items on the agenda for next month's spring meeting will be the acceptance or rejection of Virginia Tecr as the ninth member of the conference. When new schools try to get in, conferences tend, almost as a reflex action, to say no. Examples that come to mind are the repeated attempts—and failures—of Houston, Miami and Memphis State to get into the Southeastern Conference.

Before slamming the door on Virginia Tech, however, the league should consider carefully the advantages and disadvantages of admitting the Blacksburg school to the club.

What are the advantages? First, a college that is strong athletically is an asset to a conference. There can, of course, be too much of a good thing; the asset becomes a liability if the team is too strong. The classic example is Oklahoma when that team dominated the Big Eight in football in the late 1940's and the 1950's. (Actually, "dominate" isn't a strong enough word. The Sooners won 12 straight league titles between 1948 and 1959.) Repeated references to "Oklahoma and the Seven Dwarfs" didn't do the Big Eight's reputation any good.

Since Virginia Tech isn't likely to dominate the ACC, but will field a strong team, especially in basketball, admitting it to the fold would add to the prestige of the conference.

There is a kind of reverse factor involving conference reputation and an outside school. If ACC teams are going to play Virginia Tech anyway, as some of them certainly will, then conference prestige is on the line in each of these games. In other words, if Virginia Tech, independent, defeats Virginia in a football game, the status of the ACC as a football conference goes down. If, on the other hand, the Gobblers were in the league, too, Conference prestige wouldn't suffer. If league teams seek to avoid this risk by dropping Virginia Tech from the schedule, they are vulnerable to the charge of being afraid of the Gobblers.

Size, of course, is the vital factor in the consideration of new members for the ACC. How big should the league be? Up to an uncertain point, the bigger a conference, the better. Three-tea leagues are of little interest to anyone, except the teams involved. If a conference wants to make an impression on the national scene—and the ACC does—being big helps. A large conference commands more attention than a small one.

A league can, to be sure, be too big. Too many teams make conference operations unwieldy. Championships become meaningless because teams can't play all, or even most, of the others in the league. The old Southern Conference was a mess before the Southeastern Conference split off from it in 1933 and was too big again before the formation of the ACC in 1953.

The ACC, however, with eight teams, is in no immediate danger of overexpansion. The Big Ten has shown that a league can operate successfully with ten teams. A ninth team would pose no basketball scheduling problems. A home-and-home set with every other conference member would make for a nice 16-game league schedule. Since the league doesn't play a round-robin football schedule now, adding one more team won't affect that sport.

These are the reasons for and against expansion. Consider them and you get one answer: Let Virginia Tech in the ACC.

Sports Today

Carolina's freshman athletic teams have the limelight today, playing at home in three sports.

The Tar Baby baseball team, with a 5-2 record, meets Mt. Olive junior college in a double header on the new field, beginning at 1:30.

The tennis team is host to Chowan Junior College on the varsity courts next to Cobb at 2 p.m.

Faculty Ticket Prices Get Boost

Now Equal To Students

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

If UNC faculty and staff members don't want to pay extra for guaranteed seats, they will compete on an equal basis with students for space at next year's athletic events.

Under a new plan approved by the Faculty Athletic Committee, the Athletic Council and the University Administration, faculty and staff members who want tickets for all athletic events, but who are willing to stand in line with the students to get them, must pay $15 for a season ticket for themselves and $15 for each dependent.

The students had voted a $15 rate for themselves in the form of athletic fees. Athletic Department Business Manager Vernon B. Crook said, "We felt the faculty and staff should pay as much as the students."

Last year a faculty member paid $15 for himself, but only $8 for each dependent.

New Options

In addition to raising the dependent rate, the ticket plan also includes two new options for faculty members willing to pay more for the privilege of getting a guaranteed seat and avoiding the pre - game lines.

Under the first of these optional plans, the staff member can purchase a season ticket for football games and all other athletic events except basketball for half-price ($11.25). Thus for a teacher and his wife, this plan would cost $22.50. Each dependent also costs $11.25.

The second option gives a faculty member a guaranteed seat at home basketball games plus admission to all other athletic events except football games. This plan also costs $11.25 per person. Since faculty members choosing this plan get their tickets before the basketball season starts, they avoid the necessity of standing in line before each game.

If a faculty member wishes to buy both a ticket for the football games and a guaranteed seat for the basketball games, he must pay $22.50 for himself and each dependent.

Football and basketball are the only two sports where admission is regularly charged at Carolina. Basketball is the only one where space can become a problem.

Seat Allotment

Carmichael Auditorium seats 8,000 people. Six thousand seats are reserved for faculty, staff and students. Two thousand are thus left for sale to the public, but Crook said that actually part of the 2,000 were used for faculty seating.

About 2,500 faculty tickets were sold last year under the old plan. Crook estimated that an average of 1,000 faculty members and dependents attended the basketball games. "We have assumed that the faculty would take about 1,000 Category II tickets," Crook said. Category II is the guaranteed — seat basketball, no-football ticket.

Crook said that present plans are to take the Category II tickets from the 2,000 seats open to the public. Final disposition of the seats will apparently depend on how many faculty members choose this type of ticket.

No Squeeze

According to Crook, there was no space shortage this year except for the Duke game.

Last year the Athletic Department sold 974 $15 tickets to faculty and staff members and 1,338 dependent tickets at $8 each. If everyone buys the year - round ticket for next season, those 1,338 tickets will cost $15.

Since he doesn't know how many staff members will buy what kind of tickets, Crook said he could "only guess" at the increase in revenue the new plan would produce. He said he hopes for an increase of $10,000.

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson called the new ticket plan "a major overhaul" of the price system. He said it was the first major change in faculty ticket prices in about 40 years.

Despite the increase, Carolina faculty members will still be better off than those at other Big Four schools when it comes to paying for athletic tickets.

Duke allows two football tickets at half the regular rate, but any additional tickets, such as for children, cost the full price. There is a family plan section at a reduced rate.

Duke's Expensive

In basketball, the Blue Devils are as far out in front in faculty ticket prices as they were on the court. Duke has three different price levels. On the two most expensive, faculty members are allowed a five - dollar discount. These are $27.50 and $22.50 tickets. Faculty members must pay the full $17 for adults and $10 for children in the cheaper section.

N. C. State charges $12.50 per staff member and dependent for football tickets. Basketball tickets are $12 each, but each staff member is allowed only two.

Wake Forest has a similar plan. Faculty and staff members may buy two tickets for half - price for football or basketball. Any additional tickets cost the full price.

UNC Bull's Head Bookshop—Aimed At Casual 'Browsing' Atmosphere

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Books and more books, easy chairs for reading, an atmosphere conducive to browsing and talking — this is the "Bull's Head Bookshop."

Tucked neatly away on the ground floor of the library, room 013, it's a place that many students are perhaps not aware of. If they have noticed it passing through the library, they may not be aware of its purpose.

Mrs. Helen B. Hogan, who has been manager of the Bookshop since 1958, says that the real aim of the shop is to bring books and students together.

"We are glad to have people come, even if they aren't going to buy. They can browse, read and get to know the possibilities of each book and of the shop. The unique feature of the Bull's Head is that while most bookstores are concerned only with sale, we are concerned with students getting to know the books and how to use them.

"On campus, the Booketeria is concerned with providing required reading and textbooks. We are concerned with collateral reading and trade books of a general nature."

Casually strolling through the bookshop, the student can move from skin - diving to travel instructions, Amrican folk songs, learning how to study and even to Playing With Infinity.

Mrs. Hogan does all the buying and says the books are basically for the students. There are also books of general interest such as Capote's In Cold Blood. "We try to have as large a cross-section as possible," she said.

There is little subject arrangement of books. There are sections on City Planning, Latin America and special author shelves for men such as Faulkner, Hemingway and Joyce. The books are mainly arranged by publisher.

The Bookshop aims to be a friendly place — a place always ready to help students locate what they need and make them feel at home reading in the Bookshop. Mrs. Hogan says that they have developed their own clientele, "people who know us and come in every day to see what is new. We spend a lot of time talking, and its not always about books."

A COZY SPOT can be found in the Bull's Head Book Shop. Here Catherine Vreeland, grad student in comparative literature, enjoys a quiet moment of browsing.

In the late 1920's when Howard Mumford Jones came to teach in the Dept. of English, he was disturbed that there was no bookshop in town. After talking over the problem with President Chase he decided to set one up in the English Office. For this he begged books from friends in publishing and soon had a collection for students to buy or read.

In addition he wanted them to talk about books, thus the origin of the name, using the slang expression "bull sessions" — much talk about anything, but in this case books.

After settling in the "Y" for a short time, the Bookshop was given a home in the University Library. Mrs. Jessica Valentine became its first manager and made it a bookshop which attracted townspeople and campus.

At one time during these years Dr. Carl Frederich, traveling in Switzerland, found a picture of a bull which he brought back to the bookshop. It was appropriated as the Bookshop's symbol.

Next time you are in the library (that building with a dome on it on the way to the football stadium, as one of my professors enjoys saying) stop in to see her and relax in an easy chair with a good book.

MRC Toughens Firework Policy

Starting today, any student convicted of possession and shooting of any type fireworks or firearms in a residence hall will face penalties ranging from definite all campus probation to suspension from the University.

This is the new policy concerning fireworks which was released yesterday by Men's Residence Council Court Chairman Bob Taylor.

"It has been the custom in the past for the MRC Court to deal rather severely with offenses of this nature," Taylor said, "but because of the increased frequency with which fireworks have been exploded in and around residence halls, the court has decided to stiffen the consequences."

Get Set For Jubilee Come Rain Or Shine

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

If you've got your date, got your liquor and got your umbrella, you should be just about ready to join in Jubilee festivities today in Polk Place.

"Increasing cloudiness . . . and thundershowers" were predicted by the weatherman, and if such a catastrophe should occur, the Bitter End Singers will stage their show in Carmichael Auditorium tonight at 8, and the Tassles will do their rocking in the Tin Can.

The final decision on the location will be made this morning and signs will be posted at Polk Place to notify everyone. The announcement will also be broadcast over local and nearby radio stations.

If the weather does clear up, tonight's concert will be held in Polk Place as planned, and the dance will be held in the parking lot between Bynum Hall and Caldwell Hall.

"Charade" starring Audrey Hepburn and Cary Grant will be shown in Carroll Hall tonight at 6, 8 and 10 p.m.

Howard Henry, director of Graham Memorial, said, "The policy on drinking will be the same as last year. We will ask people who come with 'containers' to check them at the gate until they leave. We're not trying to haul a lot of people to jail over the matter."

The hidden pocket flask has been a very popular item among students recently. Soft drinks will be sold at all Jubilee performances by the Senior Class.

Activities will begin early tomorrow morning just before classes in the form of a hangover. This should be over before the afternoon concert scheduled to begin at 3 p.m.

A new announcement will be made tomorrow morning concerning the locations for tomorrow's Jubilee activities.

The concert tomorrow afternoon will last from 3-5 p.m. and will feature David, della Rosa and Brooks, and Jay and the Americans.

Al Hirt and his band will begin their performance at 7 p.m. and will be followed at 9 by a combo party featuring Maurice Williams and the Zodiacs.

The dance will be over at midnight and all women students have late hours extended until 2 a.m.

Many students have expressed concern over the small amount of time that has been allowed between the afternoon and evening performances tomorrow in order to eat dinner.

Henry said, "We realize this two - hour break does compress the supper hour, but this should increase the number of people eating after the concert.

"The main reason for the time schedule is the other parties being held after the evening shows by fraternities and residence halls."

Most of the popular local restaurants are not making reservations for this weekend

Faculty Council Will Consider American Studies Curriculum

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

A new curriculum designed to investigate the relations between various aspects of American culture is currently being planned by the College of Arts and Sciences.

The program, called American Studies, will be presented to the Faculty Council May 20 for consideration. If approved, the new degree will be offered to undergraduates beginning next fall.

Head of the program, and now chairman of the special committee planning the curriculum, is Dr. Richard C. Lyon of the English Department.

Lyon said yesterday that the program is "still in the planning stage," and is subject to the consideration of the Faculty Council.

American Studies degrees, a fairly recent addition to American college programs, were first offered at the University of Minnesota after World War Two.

The curriculum at UNC would include courses in various departments which relate to the American culture, civilization, background, and character.

Courses in English, history, economics, music, philosophy, political science, religion, art, anthropology, geography, dramatic arts, education, journalism, sociology, city planning, and radio, television and motion pictures have all been proposed to be included in the degree requirements.

Lyon, who holds a Ph.D. in American Studies from Minnesota, stressed "this is not a superpatriot program as some people think." He said a more descriptive term for the pgoram would be "interdisciplinary" in that it would force the student to relate a diverse range of knowledge to obtain an overview of the American culture.

"The student must make a synthesis," Lyon said. "He may be asked to consider the bearing of a novel and its relevance in American politics."

The program here would be open to undergraduates who have not yet reached their second semester sophmore year, Lyon continued.

"This would leave time to introduce the student to the assumptions and methods of American Studies as early as possible in his college career," he said.

About 70 American colleges and universities now have American Studies programs. Lyon cited those at Amherst, Yale, Harvard, and Princeton as the most outstanding.

The program would not be attached to any one department, Lyon said, although he would be advisor to the American Studies majors.

At least two new courses would be created for the new curriculum. The first, a sophomore course, would be an introduction of American Studies. The second would be open to seniors, and would be a seminar to rotate among the participating departments from year to year.

"This is not an honors program," Lyon said, "but majors will be encouraged to continue a topic on which they will elect to concentrate during the seminar."

Lyon said that business and the teaching profession are looking for students with "this broad kind of background."

He said the program would offer "a grounding in various aspects of American life and thought, and demands of (the student) that he learns the techniques of relating these thoughts and trends so that they illuminate one another."

Lyon said the only comparable curriculums at UNC are the programs for a B. S. Industrial Relations and a B.A. in International Studies. However, these programs take part in only two departments, and the American Studies program would require the cooperation of more than 10 departments.

Honor System Week–Fourth In A Series

Long: 'Our Honor System Worst--Except For Others'

By WILLIAM G. LONG
UNC Dean of Men

Of all the types of University discipline the Honor System is the worst—except for all of the others! This paraphrase of Churchill's statement about democracy expresses the frustrating superiority of the system under which our academic community lives. Given all of its weaknesses, it is better than its alternatives.

Debunking the Honor System is a popular pasttime. Some people scoff at its idealism; others are cynical about its practicability; many categorically state it doesn't work.

These points of view make no sense to me. They are based upon certain misconceptions and misunderstandings about the Honor System.

If the Honor System is intended to reflect life as it is, then, of course, it is inadequate. But since when did the University give up its mandate to teach a higher and better way. Have ideals no place in the academic community? My answer is that they do.

The truly educated man is a self-disciplined person. There is no quality more basic to the pursuit of truth. What better way is there to make a man trustworthy than to treat him as though he is worthy of trust. This the Honor System does. It presents us all with an ideal of honor and integrity—an ideal against which we may evaluate our actual performance.

Again, if the Honor System is a "student honor system," as I have heard faculty and students label it, it is of in-

Hodges Gets AG Position

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Frank Hodges received approval of Student Legislature last night as attorney general.

The vote was 25-23.

George Isherwood broke from his fellow University Party legislators to vote in favor of Hodges's appointment. Tommy Cannon (UP) abstained and Frank Longest (SP) was absent.

Rules were suspended so that the appointment could be considered before other business came before the body.

The legislature debated over an hour before the vote was taken. Two times there was an attempt made to close debate before it finally concluded.

In the Ways and Means Committee meeting Wednesday night, the vote was 4-3 against the Hodges appointment. That vote followed straight party lines.

Eric Van Loon (SP), a member of the committee, told the committee Hodges had demonstrated his competency to hold the position. He said that even though Hodges had not been on the attorney general's staff he has defended more cases than some members of the staff.

He said Hodges does know the present staff and can work with them.

Bob Sheppard (UP) said he thought the committee should consider Attorney General John Ingram's objection to Hodges.

Van Loon replied that Ingram's objections might be based on the fact that he has not worked closely with Hodges.

Charles Mercer (UP) said, "I feel Hodges would not be able to work as well with student leaders and other students as someone else."

Sandy Hobgood (SP) replied that the question before the committee was the competency of Hodges, not whether might be someone else to fill the job.

"We must approve or disapprove the appointees, not make them," Hobgood said.

The vote of the committee was tied before Chairman Steve Salmony (UP) cast the deciding vote against Hodges.

In voting, he said, "Bob (Powell, Student Body president) is interested in implementing his program. He feels he should have the man he can work with. The question is whether the rest of students can work with the appointee.

"I am more concerned with students than with Powell's program. I don't want to take any chances with a single student."

40 Faculty Members Listen As Yugoslav Diplomat Speaks

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

A Communist speaker came to this University Wednesday night, addressed a faculty group and left.

Quietly.

Cvijeto Job, press and cultural attache to the Yugoslavian Embassy in Washington, D. C., spoke to about 40 persons in the faculty lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

The most striking thing about the evening was the lack of fanfare that attended it.

The crowd — mostly faculty members and their wives — less than half-filled the second - story room upon whose walls hang pictures of former presidents of this University.

Noticibly absent were the student protestor - types who flocked to hear the sidewalk speech of Marxist Theoritician Herber Aptheker, who was banned from this campus under the provisions of the Speaker Ban Law.

The gist of Job's speech was that the state really is withering away under Yugoslavian Communism — just like Karl Marx said it should.

Yugoslavia, he said, is not an "Iron Curtain" country — "and never has been since World War II."

"We've pledged ourselves to eventually do away with the Communist Party and are presently doing so," he said.

"In the last 10 years," he said, "the party has been dislodged 60 or 70 percent."

Yugoslavia's Communism is of a constitutional breed, he said. Its aim is a "pluralistic society" with socialism as its basis.

When the Communist Party finally does wither and die, he said, party members such as himself will "be just in a general framework of a constitution that upholds socialism. . .

"There'll be no need for an organization to be the guardian of the concensus."

Already, Job said, Yugoslavia has academic freedom in its universities, very few travel restrictions, religious freedom, and a political climate that is conducive to dissent and debate.

Marshall Tito, however, is "sacrosanct," Job said. To Yugoslavs, Tito is "Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and FDR altogether," he said.

Except for Tito, though, all high government officials have a maximum tenure of four years. This is intended to prevent too great concentrations of power in individuals, Job explained.

Elections are also being liberalized, he said.

"We had tight - fisted, absolute power in Yugoslavia," Job said. "And we dislodged it."

Job said that Americans labor under a misconception about the need for more than one party in a nation. After World War II, he said, Yugoslavia decided against a multi - party system.

"It would lead us, as it had before, into disaster," he said.

$1500 Expected

A fund drive for the Speaker Ban suit is expected to reach $1500, Dr. Joseph Spraley, chairman of the local chapter of the American Association of University Professors said yesterday.

Spraley said the drive will end with the end of this semester. He declined to say how much has been collected so far.

New Sorority Rush

Girsl interested in rushing Kappa Alpha Theta sorority must sign up in the Dean of Women's Office by today.

A "fireside" will be held at Dr. and Mrs. Ralph Bunce's home on Old Lystra Road at 8 p.m. Tuesday. A bus will take rushees there from the parking lot of the Carolina Inn at 7:45 p.m.

Interviews will be held from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday in the University Lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

Bids will be issued Thursday afternoon and there will be a pledging banuet at the Blair House that night.

NSA Conference

Students interested in attending the NSA Regional Conference at Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va., May 6 and 7, should see Phil Kirstein in the Student Government Offices in GM.

Seminars and workshops will be held on judicial systems, course evaluation, rules and regulations affecting students, cultural programs and student representation on committees.

Interviews will be today and Monday in the afternoon.

Debate Team Officers

Baddour Named New YDC Head

Phil Baddour, a law student from Goldsboro, was elected president of the UNC Young Democratic Club Wednesday night.

In his acceptance speech, Baddour outlined the purpose of the college YDC as being "the promotion of the Democartic Party and its ideals and principles to the student community and as providing an opportunity for its students to learn about and participate in the political process.

He promised to hold regular monthly meetings and to send monthly newsletters to all members. He also plans a series of informal dinner meetings with people who are "well-informed" on the political scene.

Also elected were Henry Babb, Ahoskie, graduate vice president; Don Wilson, Birmingham, Ala., undergraduate vice president; Jerry Rutledge, Germanton, secretary; and Martin Lancaster, Goldsboro, treasurer.

Everett Case Hospitalized

Everett Case, former head basketball coach at N. C. State, was taken to the hospital in Raleigh yesterday afternoon. He was admitted to Rex Hospital about 5 p.m.

At 6:30, a hospital spokesman reported his condition as serious. Case was in the intensive care section and was getting blood and oxygen. The spokesman said Case seemed to be alert. The nature of his ailment was not disclosed.

Never On Sunday

The lull after the storm.

That's how we might best describe the situation now regarding the possession and drinking of alcoholic beverages in North Carolina. There was a great deal of excitement immediately after the attorney general's ruling on the state's liquor laws in the state.

But since then law enforcement agencies have, in one way or another, indicated that they have no intention of enforcing the law.

As we said earlier, something must be done about the out-dated statutes. And while people are thinking about what they want done, we throw this idea out to be kicked around:

What about the sale of beer on Sunday in Chapel Hill?

Presently, Sunday sale of alcoholic beverages is taboo throughout almost the whole state. However, several cities are exceptions to this ruel.

We think Chapel Hill would be a good exception.

If UNC students are considered local citizens, then this town probably has the greatest number of beer drinkers per capita in North Carolina.

And it's no secret that beer is consumed on Sunday.

So why should the thirsty set have to drive all the way to Greensboro every seventh day to fulfill its needs? Of course, not everyone goes to Greensboro. Those that live in fraternity houses or apartments have a definite advantage over the residents of campus housing facilities, for they can buy a supply on Saturday to carry them through the Sunday afternoon baseball game.

There are no laws prohibititing the drinking of alcoholic beverages on Sunday. If it is wrong to sell beer one day, then it's wrong everyday. But, if there is nothing wrong with the sale of beer six days a week, we'd like to hear a logical explanation of why isn't it in order to sell it on Sunday.

We realize that any change in this policy would require a great deal of effort on the part of some interested person.

We hope this suggestion will reach some such person.

A Reminder

Jubilee Weekend is finally here.

And hopefully the weather man will see fit to make it as pleasant for us as possible. Before the festivities start we'd like to drop a reminder for all students who plan to participate in the weekend festivities.

GM officials have announced that they will attempt to keep alcoholic beverages off the Polk Place are as in the past. This is not an attempt to squelch anyone's fun. An impressive lineup of entertainment has been slated for the weekend. It isn't necessary to get plastered to enjoy it.

We realize that no matter how much pleading is done, Jubilee — just like football games in Kenan Stadium — will see some people sneak their booze in.

We don't deny it.

But please, lets avoid any overt displays of cave man conduct, and let's not leave the grounds littered with unsightly containers of any kind.

Students did a fine job with this last year. Let's do it again.

No New Reds . . . Yet

Cvijeto Job, Communist attache at the Yugoslavian Embassy spoke on campus Wednesday night on Socialism and Freedom in Yugoslavia." That was two days ago, and we haven't heard any word of a revolution yet.

Of course, we realize that these Communists work slowly, and we're keeping up our guard. The forty odd faculty members who gathered in the Morehead Planetarium faculty lounge to hear the speaker will continue to be the objects of our most diligent scrutiny.

We urge all UNC students to join in our effort to detect any un-American tendencies these professors might have picked up.

These are the main things to watch for:

— Possession of a magazine containing the article: God Is Dead.

— Reading knowledge of Karl Marx.

If anyone hears of any such characteristics in any faculty member, we urge him to report it to the North Carolina State Legislature, Communists in Chapel Hill Department.

And bear in mind the warning once issued concerning our dangerous situation here: "There's a Communist behind every bush in Chapel Hill — and there are an awful lot of bushes."

"All Right!"

Russel's Foolish Statements Hurt US Viet Nam Effort

The Senator's logic was clearly missing.

Richard B. Russel, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee said this week that the United States needs the support of the South Vietnamese people to win the war in Southeast Asia. Yet, puzzlingly, the Senator at the same time made a statement which could easily destroy this support.

Casually discussing the political futures of three countries as if they mattered little to him, Russel said:

"Cambodia and Laos might go, along with South Viet Nam, if we left. But I don't think that's any irreparable loss. None of them has any tremendous military value, either stragegic or tactical. And they certainly have no great economical value."

While this opinion might be comforting to Americans should we be forced to withdraw, it in no way helped the war effort. The statement's effect was to suggest that the United States may not really be in Viet Nam to stay, and that is exactly what the Communists have been trying to convince the South Vietnamese, the exact message being: "There's no use letting the Americans fight your battles since sooner or later the Americans will abandon the struggle, forcing you to continue on your own. Therefore, why not escape the consequences of an inevitable defeat — by yourselves demanding that the fight be stopped."

After the Senator stated his views, they were probably broadcast to the South Vietnamese people by the Hanoi regime, anxious to show America's supposed inability to wage the war to a successful end. Were I a citizen of South Viet Nam, I would consider the Russel statement exactly what Hanoi most likely interpreted it as being: a demonstration of lack of concern for the future freedom of the South Vietnamese people.

True, South Viet Nam does not have a great economic value, and perhaps its military location isn't important (except in the defense of other Southeastern Asia countries whose fall Russel is also willing to tolerate); but who says this is the reason we are there in the first place? Supposedly the reason is our desire to let South Viet Nam eventually have a government independent of any outside influence — to let the South Vietnamese have a chance to determine their own destiny instead of having Hanoi do this for them.

But, despite any wish the South Vietnamese may have to escape Communist rule, they may well ask for the withdrawal of our forces if influential men like Sen. Russel tell them that to begin with, we're not really interested in their welfare.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

DTH Is Praised

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I wish to congratulate the DTH on its recent award for excellent journalism. I have not seen any of the competitive student papers, but I do know that yours has been consistently quite good.

Of course there are occasional slips (such as editorializing slipping into the front page) and the usual typos and juxtapositions; however, they are quite rare in comparison to many student (and even professional) papers. I think that if your readers knew how much time is spent by how few people in getting a paper out their criticisms might decrease.

Perhaps too many forget the basic role of a student paper—the student workshop experience. I feel this is more crucial than the informative and opinion-making roles, though I don't want to discount either of them. At times I have been almost infuriated over some of the columns, but then, when I stop to reflect, this is what they are supposed to do. I might add that your layout and pictures have been quite good.

Keep up the precedent.

Kay Strikes Back

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Judging by the letters which have been in the Daily Tar Heel of late, it has become apparent that several people feel that I am in complete oposition to the Residence College System at Carolina. This is in no way true. There are several changes and additions which have been made in the past few years which were sorely needed for a long time, a good example being the completion of social rooms in many of the residence halls. These rooms, plus the combo parties which many halls give on almost a weekly basis, provide the place to go and the entertainment for those students who choose not to pledge a fraternity.

Oscar Levant once said. "Imitation is the sincerest form of plagiarism"; herein lies the source of the indignation of many fraternity men at the University. The idea of designating floors by means of Greek letters; the idea of adorning the pages of the Yackety Yack with Greek-lettered residence hall "crests"; the idea of residence hall pins—all of these are nothing but imitations of the fraternity system. Each of these has been an integral part of fraternities and fraternities alone for many,many years.

It goes without saying that dormitory life has progressed a great deal in the four years that I have been at the University, but I feel that the aforementioned additons have not constituted progress but merely petty imitation.

They are worthy of satire.

Save The Band

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It is a shame to be embarrassed at the concert of your own UNC band, embarrassed that the university administration and student body permits such a farce to exist!

After the concert given by the UNC Band Tuesday night, it is evident that something must be done, anything must be done, to improve the deplorable condition of the once outstanding group that represents this university in so many places.

Two years ago the UNC band wind ensemble was known as second to none in North Carolina! Where is the drive that produced that fabulous group? Where are the students that played in that group? They all certainly haven't graduated. Many of them can be seen playing in the UNC Symphony Orchestra, some are still in the band, and the rest are usually seen now and then around the campus. If they are still here, why don't we still have a band and a wind ensemble we can be proud is ours?

Tuesday night the UNC band conductor was wearing a black coat with tails. The band members were wearing Carolina blue blazers except for the young ladies. One young lady in the flute section was most outstanding in her orange dress and white sweater, which just goes great with the blue blazers and a black coat with tails. The other girls used a little more discretion, one wore pink, some wore white, and the rest light blue. The band really looked organized. The conductor really looked out of place. Who is he trying to kid? The administration that thinks that a coat and tails fixes everything? It is the tail that fixes everything. It fits.

Major John F. Yesulaitus, the UNC Band conductor, led the band through several usually rather colorful selections. One was the "Yellowstone Suite" by Klein. The rendition by the band produced the color yellow very well; it seemed that either the conductor was afraid of the band or else the band had a bad case of hepatitis.

The Floyd Werle setting of some of Ellington's songs, "An Ellington Portrait," produced a very unbalanced situation. The piece includes several solos (as much as they can be called solos when the same instruments that support the band all the time play the solos), which were done very well. One soloist was the young lady playing first alto saxophone, who is just a junior at Chapel Hill High School (and also a past student of Dr. Fred, the band director here two years ago.) Two saxophones, two trombones, three trumpets, the string bass, two horns, a few clarinets, and a few more players who showed that they had practiced, carried all the weight of the concert.

The musicians showed a great lack of enthusiasm for the music they were playing and really didn't seem to care whether they followed their military conductor or not. More than once the conductor was seen to follow the band rather than lead it, and each musician was left to himself to interpret his art his way.

A band must be trained and led with a constantly encouraging hand to become outstanding or even mediocre. High school bands are often heard that compare with or are much better than the UNC band. Why? Especially since we have much talent on this campus that is not being used, why will they not play?

Why has the band slowly deterioriated these last two years? Why the lack of interest? Is it the music departments fault, the band directors fault, or the students fault?

Two years ago Carolina had something to be proud of in the field of music. Today comments are heard like "damn good concert for a high school band," "Concert band is not what it was when Dr. Fred was here two years ago," and "I don't think I'll take in the next concert unless somebody shakes the place up."

No Difference In Coeds

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The current blazing controversy prompted by Miss Gallant's article proceeds from a patently false assumption, namely that there is a real difference between Northern and Southern females. My experiences on both Northern and Southern campuses have lead me to conclude that while there may be some differences in the means employed, both types are typically in ruthless pursuit of the same end. Let's face it, the average American coed is a single-minded, diamond - mining, ring - seeking husband-hunter.

Where's Charlie Brown?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Some of us pick up the DTH each day with the faint hope that we'll find the current Peanuts strip. One would think that a college student with enough brains to stay in school would be capable of keeping up with Charlie Brown. No excuses about not having the material available, Mr. Greenbacker.

One would think that a college student with enough brains to stay in school would be capable of writing out checks. No excuses about not having the cash. Why haven't we been paid these past three weeks, Mr. Harrington?)

"PIN THE TAIL ON MIKE KAY"

Three cheers, a yea, congradge and hooray

For UNC's blueblood, "diamond Mike Kay;

Cheap pins have always been shunned by that griper,

The first on his block to wear button-down diapers.

Wouldn't it really be wonderfully nice
If every pin sold at an outrageous price

Social pins, pig pins, federal and state pins,

Firing pins, hat pins, play pens and straight pins?

With pin prices raised, cheapness beaten and clobbert,

Would people then have to call bobby-pins "Robert?"

FLAHERTY AND FILM — NET "Moana" Mrs. Robert Flaherty, widow of the late film-maker known as the "father of the documentary," discusses a film-story of the Samoans which her husband made in 1926—expanding on her previous discussion of her term "non-preconception" — explaining that when she and her husband arrived on Samoa they searched throughout the island for a preconceived idea of what they would find, and only when they stripped their minds of set notions could they perceive authentic impressions and then film them. Excerpts from this film show fishing sequences, preparation of good by the islanders, and the ordeal of tattooing as the natives did it.

Playmakers Present 'Liliom' Next Month

Director Kai Jurgensen has announced the cast for the coming Playmakers' production of Ferenc Molnar's "Liliom", the legendary drama about a n'er - do - well carnival barker and the girl who loved him, to be presented in the Forest Theatre May 13 through 15.

Bill Smith, graduate student in the Department of Dramatic Art from Raleigh, will play Lilim, the shiftless "bully of Budapest". Smith, who plays the histroical role of Sir Walter Raleigh in "The Lost Colony" during the summer, will be remembered by area playgoers for his performance as the hard - boiled, animalistic Stanley Kowalski in last years Playmakers production of "A Streetcar Named Desire".

Anne Peacock, a drama major from Charlotte, will play oppoiste Smith in the role of Julie. This is the second appearance for Miss Peacock in the role of Smith's wife. She played Meg Ramsey in this season's production of "The Summer Tree."

Also cast in major roles are Linda Sieber of Charlotte as Marie, Christopher Parsons of Baltimore as Wolfe, Peggy Gibbs of Chapel Hill as Mrs. Muskat, Edward Kenestrick of Logansport, Ind. as Ficsur and Kristine Hoover of Virginia Beach, Va. as Liliom's daughter, Louise.

Other roles in "Liliom" which depict the colorful sweep of carnival life in Budapest will be taken by Jene Wiliams of Weissport, Pa., Ben Jones of Chapel Hill, Richard Goldman of Richmond, Va., Robert Lucas of Baltimore, Md., Ty Stephens and Rick Vance, both of Durham, and John Clower, Judith Andrews, and Dan Summey, all of Charlotte.

Dream Book Raps Freud

By WILL BERNARDIN

Sigmund Freud, the notorious father of dream study and the subconscious, took another box on the ear this month in a new book written by University of North Carolina psychologist, Dr. Robert Van deCastle in conjunction with Dr. Calvin S. Hall, director of the Institute of Dream Research in Miami, Florida.

The Content Analysis of Dreams says Dr. Van deCastle, opposes "The Freudian view that dreams conceal rather than reveal, and that every dream hides a repressed infantile wish about orality, anality or something phallic."

The book leans on the idea that the actual content of dreams, as this content compares to the person's background, is what is important. This leaning is somewhat different from the traditional approach of philosophizing about the subject's presentation of Freudian "universal" symbols.

"Dream symbols are geared to the culture," says Van deCastle, who in another study showed that people's dream content corresponds to their environment, and not to a universal symbol system. Land dwelling people, for example, dream more about sheep, dogs and snakes; while sea - shore or island people dream about fish, octupi and other sea creatures.

The purpose of the book, however, is not to give an understanding of dreams, nor to replace present procedures of dream analysis. It just offers a new way to investigate dreams ("Freud's is hardly the only way," says Van deCastle.)

The authors have catalogued over 1,000 dreams and have listed what kind of settings, actions, objects and characters usually occur in dreams. Thus, when a psychologist hears his patient tell about a dream, he can compare this person's dream with what is normal, and perhaps gain insight into the way this person may be different.

If a person dreamed about cars, for example, according to the autors, this would be rather normal (149 cars were found). But if someone dreamed often about dinosaurs (only one dinosaur turned up in their study), this might be valuable information for the psychologist.

As in most studies of the subconscious and dreams, these dreams showed frequent sex actions and many symbols which could be given sexual meaning. Dr. Van deCastle explains that sex interpretation is crucial in observing dreams simply because "sex is important in determining behavior.

"Many people have difficulty with sex and intimacy in our culture," he says. "This is because we are very repressive toward what is one of the human's strongest drives.

"In primitive cultures sex interpretation of dreams is much less pronounced, because sex is much more readily accepted by thepeople."

US Troops Destroy Viet Cong Supplies

SAIGON (AP)—U. S. troops probing for jungle terminals of the Ho Chi Minh trail near the Cambodian frontier have turned up 30 large caches of Viet Cong supplies, one of the richest such lodes ever unearthed in Viet Nam. They were destroying them today.

Abandoned in the face of an advance of the U. S. 1st infantry division and an allied Vietnamese division about 70 miles northwest of Saigon were hundreds of tons or rice, salt, cooking oil and sheet tin. The troops sezied 800 black cotton uniforms, enough to clothe two full battalions, plus bales of plastic material for ponchos.

American fighters ranged again over North Viet Nam's "MIG Alley," but there was no word of fresh contact with the enemy warplanes. An anti-aircraft missile site was reported set aflame in one of 80 missions flown Wednesday by Air Force and Navy pilots, largely in the 140 - mile stretch between the border and Vinh.

A U. S. spokesman said the Communists fired two missiles at F4C Phantoms, but the supersonic jets evaded them.

Viet Cong efforts to avoid allied task forces were reflected in a drop in allied casualties last week, but the toll among the guerrillas — inincluding that levied by air strikes and naval guns — was reported even higher than the week before.

Briefing officers announced 35 Americans were killed, 547 wounded and eight missing or captured, compared with 89 killed, 635 wounded and five missing in the week of April 10-16. The death rate was the lowest since 21 were killed in action in the week of Jan. 16-22.

For the moment at least, the Viet Cong forces seemed to have shifted tactics from fighting in the fields to terror in the towns. A grenade hurled from a passing car wounded an American serviceman at a motor pool near Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport. It was one of more than 60 such incidents in the area of the capital this year.

The latest seizure of Viet Cong supply stores developed from a campaign launched by the 1st division and Vietnamese troops last Sunday that carried, against occasional sniper fire, to a frontier river called the Rach Beng Go.

This is an arterial outlet of the Ho Chi Minh trail, a maze of land and water routes by which North Viet Nam sends to the Viet Cong. Some still get through, though U. S. bombers hammer at the flow in both North Viet Nam and Communist - held Eastern Laos.

A dispatch from Associated Press photographer Horst Faas said opposition was confined to random, ineffective fire from Cambodian territory across the river at planes and helicopters supporting the probe.

Though Americans are authorized to shoot back when fired on from that avowedly neutral nation, the pilots ignored the snipers to concentrate against possible guerrilla assembly points of the Vietnamese side of the river.

A single American company nosed out more than 350 tons of the Red supplies, which trail marks showed had been laboriously assembled by bullock carts, trucks and pack coolies.

Though Saigon could have used the rice to augment its war - depleted stores, transport hazards and the size of the job led the division command to order destruction of the supplies.

It was ruled too dangerous to have helicopters brought in so close to the border, across which enemy machine gunners could lie in wait, to freight out the material in 10 or 12-ton lots.

Soldiers dumped thousands of bags of rice, some bearing U. S. AID stencils, into the river. They chopped up the tin sheeting, burned the poncho material and emptied the oil cans.

The find may be the biggest of the war, though large stores have been turned up previously in both that area and in old Viet Cong stamping grounds north and east of Saigon. American officers had no preceise statistics.

A U. S. spokesman announced the Mu Gia pass, a North Vietnamese outlet to the trial, was closed again by a B52 raid Wednesday that also destroyed seven trucks.

The eight - engine bombers from Guam had bottled up the pass with landslides in their first attack north of the border April 12, but Communist labor battalions reopened it in a week of day and night work.

B52s returned to South Viet Nam Thursday morning, hitting suspected Viet Cong concentrations 50 miles south of Da Nang. U. S. Marines reported killing eight Viet Cong in that general area few miles west of their Chu Lai base.

A spokesman said three guerrillas were slain by U. S. 25th infantry division troops patrolling around their base at Cu Chi, 20 miles northwest of Saigon.

Roman Catholics in the Da Nang area were still seething over the political stance of Bubdhists in that area. About 500 attended a rally on the outskirts of Da Nang. One speaker charged that the local radio station, where a Buddhist struggle committee broadrasts daily, "sounds like Radio Hanoi."

Red China Plans Nuclear Explosion In Near Future

WASHINGTON (AP) — Red China is preparing a third nuclear explosion which "may be larger and may produce greater radioactive fallout" than her previous two Hiroshima - size blasts, the state department reported yesterday.

But most Washington experts figure Peking has not yet progressed that far in its nuclear development. And even with a hydrogen device, McCloskey said, it would be a long time before China could development a thermonuclear weapon delivery system.

Communist China entered the nuclear - nations club on Oct. 6, 1964 with an explosion having a force equivalent to 20,000 tons of TNT — about the magnitude of the first U.S. atom bomb dropped on Hiroshima in World War II. The second Chinese shot last May 14 was reported slightly larger.

McCloskey declined to predict the exact date of the next explosion, expected within a few weeks, or to estimate how much bigger it might be than its predecessors.

"Further evaluation will have to await collecton and analysis of data from the explosion itself," he said.

The Chinese have been conducting their nuclear tests in Sinkiang province, in a remote northwestern part of the country. American intelligence keeps tab on the Chinese program by various means including spy satellites and sampling of air particles by planes.

The U. S. statement's reference to radioactive fallout underlined Peking's refusal to sign the atomic test - ban treaty. Under this pact, Russia, Britain and the United States may explode nuclear devices only underground, thus avoiding contaminating the air with dangerous radiactivity.

The State Department spokesman said Washington has passed on its latest Chinese test prediction to U. S. allies, presumably including those rimming the Chinese mainland.

He indicated U. S. policy still is to support any non - nuclear nation which, as President Johnson put it after the first Chinese explosion, is the victim of "threat of nuclear blackmail."

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara forecast last month that the Peking regime will have an atomic strike capability of 500 to 700 miles within the next two to three years—enough to threaten most of Red China's Asiatic neighbors.

If there were no nuclear power in Southeast Asia, Peking's nuclear development could be a significant militavy factor affecting the conflict there now. But U. S. forces now there have nuclear might far superior to China's.

The United States has successfully predicted Red Chinese explosions from the start.

Supreme Court Condemns GMC For Trade Restraint

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court ruled today the General Motors Corp. and three dealer associations illegally blocked the sale of Chevrolets through discount houses in the Los Angeles area.

"We have here a classic conspiracy in restraint of trade," Justice Abe Fortas said in announcing the unanimous decision condemning the way the auto giant halted such sales in 1960 and 1961.

The ruling was a victory for the Justice Department, which brought civil suit against GM and the three associatons under the Sherman Antitrust Act, and appears to clear the way for widespread resumption of the discount sales.

The high court passed no judgment on the validity of GM dealer selling agreements, cited gy General Motors to justify its actions and attacked by the Justice Department.

The "location clause" in these agreements prohibits from moving to new locations without Chevrolet's written approval. This, in essence, GM argued, is what several dealers in the Los Angeles area did in selling cars through discount houses.

Significantly, Justice John M. Harlan said in a separate opinion concurring in the Court's ruling, "In my opinion . . . General Motors is not precluded from enforcing the location clause by unilateral action, and I find nothing in the Court's opinion to the contrary."

In Detroit, officials of the company reserved comment until they have studied the high court's ruling.

The decision reversed a ruling by U. S. District Judge Charles H. Carr of Los Angeles. He had dismissed the government's suit on the ground there was no combination or conspiracy in violation of antitrust law.

Earlier, U. S. District Judge Thurmond Clarke acquitted GM of criminal antitrust charges. The government did not appeal this ruling.

In 1957, a number of Chevrolet dealers in the Los Angeles area began selling new cars through discount houses and referral services.

different success. The system must be University-wide to have real validity. If it is not supported and promoted by the professor in his classroom, the student will hold it in low esteem regardless of the extent of emphasis placed upon it by his peer leaders.

But if the administration, faculty, and student body adheres to and promotes the University Honor System, it will be a valid and essential part of the academic endeavor. This implies an honesty upon the part of teacher and student alike with each presenting the other the results of his best current research and study. It implies that students will adhere to high standards of integrity and that professors and administrators will expect and encourage such standards.

If the administration of justice under the Honor System must be perfect in order for the system to be valid, then we must readily confess that such is not the case. But I submit that the method of administering justice has nothing to do with the system's efficacy.

Presently, students try their peers and the faculty and administration enforce and accept accountability for their decisions. However, violators of the codes could be tried by tribunals composed of students and faculty, faculty, administrators, faculty and administration, etc.

In whatever manner violations were adjudicated the Hon or System would still stand. Unfortunately, altogether too many disgruntled people have generalized from a few unfortunate particulars, erroneously identified the student judiciary with the Honor System, and concluded that the Honor System itself is invalid.

Not so! Ideals are not dependent upon the adventures or misadventures of adjudicating bodies. Integrity and honor cannot be brought into being by judgment. The judge can only opine as to whether honor exists or does not exist with respect to a particular incident. Who the judge is and whether he is a good or bad judge does not render the Honor System itself valid or invalid.

Let us continue the hard course of promoting and practicing a system of honor and integrity. Let us keep paid monitors away from Chapel Hill.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Instead of worrying about 1.6 grade averages, the NCAA should take the one step that would do most to remove the taint of professionalism from college sports — eliminate red-shirting. The Big Ten has done away with this practice already. It's time for its total abolition.

Nothing makes colleges look more like football or basketball factories than the practice of keeping a boy out of action for a year in order to extend his eligibility to his fifth year in college. Since most college degree programs require four years, the coaches are in effect saying, "This boy is an athlete, not a student. He is here to play ball, and I think he will help us more with a year of seasoning. I realize that he must stay in school for five years, even if he could graduate with his class in four, but athletics come first."

Perhaps some coaches aren't quite this cold - blooded, but when they red - shirt boys, they are looking at them as athletes whose academic career must be manipulated for the good of the team, rather than as students who also play ball. I am no advocate of deemphasized college athletics, but the old truism that students come to college primarily to get an education, rather than to play ball is still true.

There are three basic reasons for red - shiring a particular athlete. One is legitimate and shouldn't be tampered with. When an athlete misses a season because of an injury, he should be given another year of eligibility as compensation. The injury is penalty enough without cutting off one - third of a player's career, too.

An extra year of eligibility for an injury? Sure. But the other two reasons for red - shirting don't deserve any sympathy. First, an athlete may be red - shirted because the coach thinks he's still a little green and will benefit from a free year of practice. Thus by the time the boy reports for his first game of varsity ball, he's 19 or 20, instead of 18 or 19, and he's had two years of college experience instead of one. It's roughly comparable to sending a ballplayer to the minor leagues for a year of seasoning.

The other reason for red - shirting is an abundance of talent at a particular position. To illustrate, Joe Brown is a fine sophomore prospect at tackle for Football U. However, Football U. already has two top senior tackles. Brawn might play some, but he can't break into the starting lineup. If he plays this year, he only has two more years of eligibility. Why not hold him out a year, until the two seniors graduate? No reason — if this were a professional club, instead of a college team. It isn't.

Every December, if you listen closely, you can hear a chorus of high - pitched screams. These are yells of anguish from coaches who have lost players to pro teams, despite remaining eligibility. The pros cannot sign a player until his original college class graduates. Some players become eligible for the pros while still eligible for college play because they transfer and must sit out a year. Others can sign because they were red-shirted. If the coached hadn't red - shirted the players in the first place, they wouldn't have anything to cry about.

Athletics are a valuable part of college life. Much of the criticism of college sports is unjustified. The NCAA could cut more of the ground from under the cricis, though, by eliminating this professional aspect of college athletics.

Tar Heels Journey South For Key Two-Game Set

USC Today, Tigers Next

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's league - leading Tar Heels left at noon yesterday for a weekend swing through South Carolina that will do a great deal to determine whether it's to be thumbs-up or thumbs - down for them in the 1966 ACC baseball title chase.

IF weather permits the playing of the game today at South Carolina and the one Saturday at Clemson.

The ruling factor will be the halt or continuation of rain which has fallen intermittently all week long in the Palmetto State just as it has in the North Carolina Piedmont area.

Games Broadcast . . . If

WCHL - Radio (1360) will broadcast both games in the event they are played, with Jim Heavner and Jesse Pike doing the play-by-play and color.

BEATTIE LEONARD

Today's game will be played at Columbia against South Carolina at 3 p.m., and tomorrow's match will be at Clemson at the same time.

Leonard Goes Today

North Carolina will, in all probability, face USC lefty Bob Bryant (4-0), who beat the Heels 1-0 in Chapel Hill for the loop leaders' only ACC setback. Bryant has a super-brilliant earned - run - average of 0.44, and gave up just four singles when he edged Bud Cahoon less that two weeks ago.

For Carolina, Beattie Leonard (3-3), who has won his last two decisions, will hurl against the Gamecocks today. In 39 innings, "Moonbeam" has given up 31 hits, fanned 27, walked just 12 and has an ERA of 3.23.

Walker Vs. Tigers Again

Saturday, Carolina will have an ace in the hole when Danny Walker goes to work on Clemson.

Danny has been slightly sensational in his former meetings with the Tigers. He pitched 13 innings to knock them off 4-3 last year in Chapel Hill, tossed three hitless relief innings at them last May at Clemson, and stopped them cold by 6-1 to snap their 28-game winning string in the first UNC - Clemson match this year. In 47 innings overall, Danny has an ERA of 2.30, has given 33 hits, walked 25 and struck out 27.

Tigers Have Cooled

The loss to Walker started Clemson on a three - game losing streak in the ACC. The Tigers dropped a 7-6 decision to N. C. State the very next day, and last Saturday were topped, 6-5, by Wake Forest.

But Tuesday they whacked South Carolina 11-6 to up their ACC record to 7-3, which is a half - game behind Carolina's 6-1. South Carolina is now 6-5, in fourth place behind Maryland's 5-4.

Still Slugging Away

If you're thinking that maybe Clemson's awesome slugging brigade has slowed up along with the team (they've won 4, lost 3 since we last saw them), you can forget it.

All the starters are above 354 in hitting, led by center fielder Tommy Pack's .394. Outfielder George Sutton leads the league in home runs (11) and RBI (33). The team averages .355 at the plate, they've slammed 34 homers and have scored 223 runs in 20 games.

DANNY TALBOTT

Talbott Takes ACC Lead

North Carolina's All - America baseball candidate Danny Talbott has charged from the grips of a batting slump into the ACC hitting lead in the short space of a week.

Danny suffered through an 0-for-13 hitless streak at the plate just after the spring tour, but due to phenomenal early-season hitting which had his average at the lefty .456 mark when the "tailspin" started, he fell only to .406.

But Danny slapped his slump in the face when he poled a pair of doubles at Duke on April 19, and since then he has pushed his average to .420 to take the ACC lead from Wake Forest's Tommy Cole (.403).

In the four games from April 19 to April 27 (last Tuesday), Talbott whacked five doubles, a triple, and batted in six runs to take the team lead with seven doubles and 15 RBI.

Bob Bonczek is runner - up to Talbott in batting (.319) and RBI (13) and leads the team with 15 runs scored. Bob Hume and John Shaw have also had hot bats of late, each getting three hits last Tuesday against State. Hume is the third Tar Heel over the magic mark with .310, and Shaw has a foot in the door at .299.

Charlie Carr is at .287, Charlie Thomas has a .283 mark, Rodney Thompson is hitting .250 and Mike McLaughlin, who along with Bonczek has hit two homers, is batting .231.

In addition to the pitching averages of Danny Walker and Beattie Leonard (listed in the pre - game story today), George McRae has a 1.39 ERA and Buddy Cohoon is at 3.33.

Weather Forecast

Decreasing cloudiness and warmer Friday with chance of scattered mostly afternoon and evening thundershowers. Highs mostly in 70s.

Spring Soccer

Spring soccer practice begins for Carolina Monday at 4 p.m. on Navy Field. Varsity Coach Marvin Allen says that the practice will last for two weeks. All interested candidates for the team are requested to attend the first session.

Sports Quiz

3. Identify the alma maters of these pro football stars: a. Bart Starr. b. Tom Moore. c. Tom Matte. d. Gayle Sayers.
4. Who was the youngest player ever to win the Masters golf tournament?
5. Willie Mays should finish this season second to Babe Ruth on the all-time home run list. Who is second now?

(Answers.)

1. True. Ty Cobb stole over 90 once, getting 96 in 1915.
2. Gordie Howe.
3. a. Alabama. b. Vanderbilt. c. Ohio State. d. Kansas.
4. Jack Nicklaus, 23.
5. Jimmy Foxx, with 534.

Correction

An error was made in a report of an intramural game played on Tuesday. Zete I beat Phi Sigma Kappa, 17-0, instead of Phi Sigma Kappa beating Zete as was stated. The mistake was due to an error on the scorecard that credited Phi Sigma Kappa with the victory.

Verlenden Named Captain Of UNC Wrestling Team

William Lane Verlenden, III, a rising senior from Lookout Mountain, Tenn., will captain the UNC wrestling team in 1966-67. The honor was announced at the awards banquet this week.

Verlenden, a 152-pounder, had a 5-3 record this season and placed third in the ACC. Coach Sam Barnes said Verlenden would make an excellent captain and leader of next year's suad.

Roy Hagerty of Greenville, this year's captain, was presented the Benjamin Solomon Memorial Award for "the most outstanding contribution" to this season's team. Hagerty had a 9-3-2 record.

Hagerty was chosen for the award by vote of his teammates and coaches. The prize is given by the wrestling alumni.

The senior leadership watch, given by the Educational Foundation, was presented to Jack Saunders, a 115 pounder from Greensboro.

Philip Wanzer of Charlotte was elected honorary captain of this year's freshman suad. Wanzer was undefeated in regular season competition and led the frosh in scoring.

The varsity wrestling team compiled a 6-6 regular season record, while the frosh grapplers were 6-3.

ECC Recruiting System Could Be A Bit Better

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Bill White was tickled pink to get a letter from East Carolina College recruiting him as a football prospect.

"If you are interested in attending East Carolina College, please return the questionnaire to me and have your coach mail me movies of your games as soon as possible," wrote Coach Bob Gantt of East Carolina.

"Gee, I was really surprised — and complimented, too," said White. "I'd be happy to participate in their program, but I think they ought ot know some of the handicaps they will have to overcome."

White, 43, is a claims agent for the City of Tampa. He's had two coronary attacks in the last couple of years and was discharged from a hospital March 25 after having his gall bladder removed.

MR. BIG

Take heart. Take a dime. Then take a bottle of Sprite from the nearest pop machine.
Suddenly it's in your hand. Cold. Biting. Tart and tingling. You cackle fiendishly and rub your hands together. (You should; they're probably chilled to the bone by now.)
You tear off to a corner, alone, but within earshot of your fellows.
And then? And then? And then you unleash it.
Heads turn. Whisperings. "Who's that strangely fascinating student with the arch smile. And what's in that curious green bottle that's making such a racket?"
And you've arrived! The distinctive taste and ebullient character of Sprite has set you apart.
You're somebody, uh...uh, whoever-you-are.

At SPU Seminars

UNC Professors To Talk

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Three Political Science instructors are scheduled to lead the Student Peace Union's open-air discussions during the SPU five-day fast against the Viet Nam war next week.

Dr. Alden Lind, an assistant professor, will direct a talk on Monday on the history of U.S. involvement in Viet Nam.

Assistant Professor of Political Science Lewis will lead a discussion on the legality of the war and the question of the draft.

Magnus Gunther, a graduate insturctor from South Africa, will direct a seminar on Thursday on the world revolution and American containment policies.

Wednesday's seminar on "Saigon and Selma" — a discussion of the relationships between the war in Viet Nam and the war on poverty — has no speaker scheduled yet, according to SPU Chairman Chuck Schunior.

Some eight to 10 students will fast for five days, from the morning of May 2 to 6 p.m. Friday, in a protest against U. S. participation in the Vietnamese War sponsored by SPU.

They will consume only orange juice during the fast. Schunior says others will fast from morning to night during the five-day period.

Those fasting for five days, who will wear black arm bands during the fast, include Katheryn Stuart, Al Scott, Pete Campbell, Tom Robbins, Chuck Schunior and Elliott Krames.

SPU plans a display in Y-Court to distribute copies of its statement of principle for fasting, and residence hall meetings on Tuesday Wednesday and Thursday nights.

The statement of principle asserts that the group is fasting "because we cannot be silent and passive in the face of massive injustice.

"To be silent is to consent. Not to dissent as individuals is to participate in collective national guilt.

"The orders which send troops to Viet Nam, which destroy the homes and hopes of the Vietnamese come not from just a handful of people, but from all of us — all who help maintain a conspiracy of silence about the war."

The statement also asserts, "The war in Viet Nam, with our role being assumed unilaterally and in disregard of the UN Charter and the 1954 Geneva Accords, is destroying the very fabric of Vietnamese society.

Overflow Crowd Is Expected

Carolina students will continue their Jubilee saturnalia this afternoon at 3, when singers David, della Rosa and Brooks begin their concert in Carmicahel Auditorium.

Jay and the Americans are also featured in the afternoon concert.

The Graham Memorial Activities Board, which is sponsoring Jubilee, will post signs on campus this morning telling where the concert will be held. GM Director Howard Henry said yesterday that he will check the weather forecast before announcing the site of the concerts.

"Even if it doesn't rain," he said, "the ground will have to be dry before we hold the concerts in Polk Place. Announcemtns will also be broadcast on local radio stations notifying of any change."

Jazz trumpeter Al Hirt and his band will begin their performance at 7 p.m. A combo party featuring Maurice Williams and the Zodiacs will follow, at 9.

The dance will be over at midnight and all women students have late hours extended until 2 am.

The Free Flick, in Carroll Hall, will be "The Courtship of Eddie's Father." Shows begin at 6, 8 and 10 p.m.

Henry said the "most unusual" facet of Jubilee was the "amazing" rapidity at which guest tickets have been distributed." He noted that 3500 guest tickets had been given out by 4 yesterday.

If all guests, 12,500 students and over 1,000 faculty members show up for the concerts, GM will not be able to seat them all in the 7500 places in Carmichale Henry pointed out. Campus Police Chief Arthur Beaumont will close the doors if the auditorium is too full.

Carolina Featured By 'Mademoiselle'

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Mademoisell Magazine has selected UNC as one of the two Southern schools to be featured in their August "Back to College" issue. Representatives of the magazine will be on campus this Wednesday interviewing Carolina coeds as models for the issue.

The magazine is especially interested in girls between the height of five feet, five inches and five feet, ten inches. The girls should be thin and preferably have long straight hair.

Ten coeds will be selected from the interviews and notified Wednesday night. The photography sessions will be held Thursday and Friday.

The girls selected to model will be paid an hourly rate of five dollars or on the basis of 25 dollars per day.

The interviewers will be Mrs. Nonnie Moore, Mademoiselle Sportswear Editor, and photographer George Barkentin.

The interviews will be casual, and interested coeds are advised to wear school clothes.

Zackey Murphy will be serving as hostess for the interviews. She said, "I hope that we will have a large turnout for the interviews."

The coeds who are photographed will appear in striking sportswear outfits in the magazine along with their name, school year and school.

Nixon Appears At Duke Today

DURHAM (AP) — Former Vice President Richard Nixon will be in Durham today to present two portraits to the Duke University law school and meet with Republican candidate for congress James Gardner.

Following the presentation at Duke, Nixon will go to the National Guard Armory for a reception. Congressional candidates from the fourth, fifth and sixth districts have been invited to attend.

Orange County News Changes Management

The Chapel Hill Publishing Company has purchased the News of Orange County.

The publishing company, which also publishes The Chapel Hill Weekly, will continue to operate the News as a forum for Orange County community news, as it has been since its founding in 1893.

Roland Giduz, editor of the paper since 1959, will continue as editor of the editorial page. Former Publisher Edwin J. Hamlin has agreed to assist the new owners in an advisory capacity, but severing any connection with the day-to-day operation of the paper.

The first issue published under the new management was printed by the offset method, thus differing from previous editions. The format is unique: the front page is printed in tabloid form, the inner pages in regular newspaper size.

Hamlin said he had sold the paper so that he could devote his efforts to "serving the people of Orange County as their next Clerk of Superior Court."

Orville Campbell, president of the Chapel Hill Publishing Co., said, "The News, the oldest paper in the county, has a long tradition of community service and responsibility. We intend to continue this tradition."

Doug McKowen Turned Down By Legislature

Student Legislature voted not to approve the appointment of Doug McKeown as chairman of the Elections Board at Thursday night's session.

The vote against McKeown came from members of both parties.

Other presidential appointments were approved, including the appointment of Frank Hodges as attorney general.

Five bills and one resolution were introduced at the session.

Sent to the Finance Commitee were bills appropriating funds for tiling the floor of the TV room of Wolfe Residence College, for a tour by the Gleemen, for a telephone in the private residence of the chairman of the WRC, for the Yackety Yack and for improvements of social facilities in Old West.

The resolution, sent to the Ways and Means Committee, is to approve the appointment of members of the MHC.

Everett Case Still 'Critical'

RALEIGH (AP) Everett N. Case, former basketball coach at N. C. State, remained in critical condition at Rex Hospital Friday after surgery to control internal bleeding.

The hospital reported that the "bleeding has been controlled" after the removal of an ulcer. It said the ulcer was non - cancerous.

Case, who coached basketball at N. C. State for 18 full seasons, was taken to the hospital Thursday night and was placed in the intensive care unit.

Case has been ill amost constantly for the last three years He suffers from Myeloma, a disease of the bone.

Last summer, Case underwent an operation to relieve pressure on his spinal cord. He remained on the critical list then for several days but recovered sufficiently to return to his home a short distance fro mthe N. C. State campus.

Since the operation, however, Case has been unable to walks.

Case, who is a bachelor, retired as N. C. State basketball coach in December 1964, after the second game of what would have been his 19th season. Press Maravich, formerly of Clemson, succeeded him.

Case's coaching record at State included 379 wins and 134 losses. He had only three losing seasons and his team won 10 Atlantic Coast Conference titles.

A native of Anderson, Ind., Case started coaching at the age of 18 at Connersville, Ind., high school. He graduated from the University of Wisconsin in 1923. His coaching record in high school, college and military ranks spanned 48 years. It included 1,161 wins and 213 losses.

Daily Tar Heel Business Dept. Hit By Thieves

Chapel Hill and Campus Police were called yesterday to investigate the disappearance of approximately $92 from the Daily Tar business office. There were no signs of locks having been forced.

Business Manager Jack Harrington said $67 was missing from an office safe and $25 from an office cash box Friday morning. He said he discovered the theft shortly before noon while preparing to deposit the money in a local bank.

Campus security chief Arthur Beaumont speculated that the money had been taken over a period of time, since the thief had left behind $20.13.

Harrington said it has been his policy in the past to deposit funds every Friday.

In addition to the money being locked up in individual cabinets, there were two different locked doors through which the thief would have had to have gone.

Teague Has Radio Station WSEX Now Broadcasting

By RICHARD KLEIN
Special to the DTH

The boys in Teague Residence Hall gathered around their radios in droves last week for the braodcasting debut of their own radio station. It was true that in its first few hours of existence station WSEX was in the crude stages, but its manager, Glenn Johnson a freshman from Lillington, saw much potentital in his efforts.

Johnson is a history major, but he has been working with the mechanics of radio broadcasting for some time. "It only took me about four hours to get the Teague station on the air," he said.

Scott College's Governor Bob Farris sees the radio station as a future project for the entire residence college. Farris and several of Scott's senators had been toying with the idea of a carrier - current radio station for Scott College since the beginning of the semester.

Jim Sanford, a freshman from Raleigh, emphasized that the station was only in a trial period of existence. While the station is only broadcasting at nights now, the committee set up for WSEX (station call-letters are subject to change, incidentally) plans to broadcast in the day, too.

The Monday night fare at the Teague station consisted of records as "Puppy Love," "My Guy," "Don't Hang Up" and "High Blood Pressure." Almost all of the songs had a dedication attached. Frequent announcements were made about upcoming dormitory senate meetings and a Teague "coke" party. A brief news analysis was made of a Carolina baseball game.

Both Sanford and Johnson indicated that programming will get more and more sophisticated. The station will eventually move out of Johnson's Room and into the Scott College office which is in Parker Dormitory. From Parker it is hoped that the "Voice of Scott College" will be beamed into all three Scott dormitories via a common wire circuit.

North Carolina Memorial Hospital Plans Expansion

The official go - ahead has been given for construction of a $10.6 million addition to N.C. Memorial Hospital.

The addition, an ambulatory patient care facility, is the first stage of a long- range, three-stage expansion of the state - supported teaching institution.

It will provide services for a spiraling outpatient load expected to increase from 100,000 patient visits a year now to 160,000 visits by 1970.

It was designed also for the teaching needs of the University of North Carolina School of Medicine when the entering class is increased from 70 to 100 students.

A starting date of May 9 has been set. Completion will require about three years.

Costs are being financed by $2.5 million in state funds supplemented by federal grants and private donations.

The structure, to be located on the south of the existing hospital building, will have a basement, subbasement, ground floor and three other floors. The main hospital entrance will be moved from the present location on the north to the new addition on the south.

The outpatient service areas will be known as the J. Spencer Love Clinics in honor of the founder of Burlington Industries and, at the time of his death, president and chairman of the textile firm.

Burlington Industries gave $650,000 to help finance the first stage of the hospital expansion. It was the largest gift ever recieved by the University from a business firm.

Foundations of the ambulatory patient care addition will be capable of accommodating an expansion to 14 floors as the hospital expands its present bed capacity of 425 to about 800 beds by 1980.

Coltrane Gets Appointment

RALEIGH (AP) — State Treasurer Edwin Gill Announced Friday the appointment of George A. Coltrane of Chapel Hill as deputy secretary of the North Carolina Local Government Commission.

Coltraine, a graduate of Duke University and its law school, is now serving as an assistant Director of the Institute of Government in Chapel Hill. He will assume his new duties probably in early July.

The Alabama Way

Country Singers And Go-Go Girls

MONTGOMERY (AP) — You have got to have a gimmick to drum up the crowds when you run for governor in Alabama — anything from country music to go-go girls.

The candidates seeking the Democratic nomination in Tuesday's primary have given ther campaign audiences some of the highest - priced entertanment in the hillbilly music world.

But the real eye - popper is a curvaceous go-go girl who travels with a rock - and - roll band to assemble the crowds for Decatur attorney Sherman Powell.

The office seeker may or may not tell the people what they want to hear, but no one—in the male audience at least—complains about the white-clad figure of Jackie Whitley and her skin-tight slacks and sweater she usually wears.

Former Congressman Carl Elliott, another of the 10 candidates has alternated with Hank Williams Jr., one of the hottest numbers in the country music fraternity, and the Statesmen Quartet, one of the South's best - known gospel singing groups.

In the closing days of the campaign, Elliott has used both young Williams and the Statesmen at a cost which may run well into four figures a week.

Gov. George Wallace's wife, Lurleen, also has turned to the Grand Old Opry for some of its top recording stars — the Wilburn Brothers, George Morgan and Hank Thompson. When the big - name entertainers aren't around, she has a guitar - strumming Alabama group.

Former Gov. James E. Folsom, who started the hillbilly band tehcnique of campaigning 20 years ago, still has some of his original musicians. They call themselves the Red Raiders in tribute to the Alabama volunteers who fought in the war against Mexico.

Biggest (285 lbs.) Jubilee Show Tonight

Al Hirt

When big (he weighs 285 lbs.) bearded, jovial Al Hirt brings his trumpet into play today there will be no doubt that he is one of the greatest exponents of jazz and one of the finest trumpet men of this generation.

"You know, folks, that all the proceeds from this performance are going to support a needy family — mine," he frequently quips after a show.

While they are not really needy now, there was a time not so many years ago that the Al Hirt family of New Orleans did not have it quite "so good" and the genial virtuoso of the trumpet, now 41, is the first one to say that he is "mighty grateful" for the success that came his way.

Al, the high - spirited son of a New Orleans policeman, began his career as a classical trumpeter and only turned to jazz for pin money.

Al's parents greatly encouraged their son's love of music.

While in high school in New New Orleans, young Al played with the school band and orchestra and then won a scholarship to the Cincinati Conservatory of Music. He studied classical trumpet and his dream was to be the lead man in the section of a symphony orchestra.

But there weren't many chairs open in symphony orchestras and he had to find another way of making a living.

After the Cincinnati Conservatory, Hirt entered the military service, served for four years, and on his return joined the Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey Bands, Ray McKinsley, and Horace Heidt.

Then he settled down in New Orleans, where jazz had reached immortal heights — married and set out to raise eight children.

Al Hirt put 1964 down as the year that was. It saw him realize more success that any other person: stardom in records, on TV, in concerts and clubs.

So many dreams have materalized for the bearded Southern boy-with-a trumpet. One of his most cherished had been to open his own club. And this became a reality with the opening of Al's new club — called simply "Al Hirt."

Located at 501 Bourbon Street in the heart of the crescent city's French Quarter — the "street of dreams."

SP vs. UP – The Game Of The Week

One of the most dramatic performances of the season unfolded on the top floor of New East Thursday night, complete with standing-room-only crowd of demonstrators with their placcards.

The occasion was the vote to approve or disapprove Student Body President Bob Powell's appointment of Frank Hodges as student attorney general.

Debate took the route of straight party lines, with the Student Party caucus favoring Hodges and the University Party rejecting him.

The arena was brimming with tension when time came for the vote. Rep. Frank Longest (SP) was absent from the session, giving the UP a 25-24 edge. But early in the roll-call balloting, Rep. Tommy Cannon (UP) voiced an abstention.

This threw the question back into mid air—each side now had a potential 24 votes. The man who had the courage to tilt the scales by breaking party lines was Rep. George Isherwood (UP) whose favorable vote gave the appointment a 25-23 approval.

Two legislators went against caucus instructions. Two legislators cleared a path for the approval of an appointment made by the president of the student body. Two legislators prevented what would have been the first big black eye against Student Legislature this session.

So the appointment of Frank Hodges as AG was approved. Many people—not the least of whom are those University Party leaders who fought so tirelessly to prevent it—would like hear no more of the issue.

But something should be said. For if Student Legislature continues in the trend of petty partisan political thinking and acting that was so apparent Thursday night, a whole year of Student Government work will be written off as void—a year that in many ways is crucial to the student governmental organization at UNC.

The question of the appointment was argued for an hour and a half. During this time some of the most effective, logical debate that has ever crossed the rostrom of the legislative chamber was presented in favor of Hodges.

It was pointed out clearly that the duty of Student Legislature in approving an appointment is to determine whether or not a person, selected by the president, is competent to handle the job he has been assigned—not to decide if this person is the best of a field that might have been appointed.

Reps. Eric Van Loon, Jed Deitz, Ben White, Steve Hockfield and Sandy Hobgood (SP) pointed out in convincing fashion that Hodges is very well qualified from a standpoint of experience as chairman of the Student Legislature Judicial Committee and as defense council for numerous cases before student judicial bodies.

Why, then, the close-knit UP vote in disapproval of the appoint?

The answer is far from a close-guarded secret.

Up until a week ago it was assumed by most people that Jim Aplin, University Party member who has been assistant attorney general this year, would get the nod from Powell. In fact, Aplin had even had stationery printed bearing his name as attorney general.

It was revealed in debate that Powell changed his mind about appointing Aplin because of their unlike viewpoints concerning student autonomy in the judiciary. Powell, with one of his main goals being extensive reform of the student judicial system, said he felt Hodges—whose stand is very much like his own—would be more effective in helping initiate and carry out many of these reforms.

But UP legislators had known Hodges when he was chairman of the rival party, and we feel this—their aversion to Hodges as a former SP boss and their attraction to Aplin—led them to express by their vote the opinion that Hodges was unqualified for the job.

As we said, it was one of the year's best performances. Let us share some of the highlights with you:

—First of all there was Rep. Steve Salmony (UP) in two eye-catching scenes. In fact, if the Awards of the Week weren't postponed until tomorrow morning, we would give him Turncoat of the Week.

Salmony told the body that although having a 2.0 quality point average is not required of the appointee for attorney general he felt it was a big consideration, and that this was one thing that influenced him to cast the deciding vote that reported Hodges' appointment unfavorably out of the Ways and Means Committee which he chairs.

But it was Salmony who introduced a bill two weeks ago, the purpose of which is "to amend the General Election Laws and the Student Legislature By-Laws to remove the "C" average requirement which presently prohibits members in good standing in the student body from holding certain elective positions."

Salmony also objected to Hodges, on grounds that he (Hodges) did not have the experience to handle the job. However, Salmony felt no qualms about the importance of experience two weeks ago when Speaker Bill Purdy broke a tie vote in legislature making him chairman of the Ways and Means Committee over Sandy Hobgood who had had the experience of heading this committee for a year.

—Then there was Rep. Larry Richter (UP) from Ehringhaus who listened attentively as Rep. Ben White (SP), also from Ehringhaus, presented by body a petition bearing the names of 350 of his constituents who favored Hodges' approval.

Richter told the body he was not aware of the petition, but that he wanted to represent his constituents. He asked White to give him the petition, saying he would have his legislative aid check the signatures' validity, and if they proved valid he would consider this in his vote.

—Finally we'd like to note a statement made by Van Loon. He was arguing against charges that Hodges, by virtue of his alleged lack of experience, would not have the familiarity with the system to know which of the several student courts should hear any given case.

Van Loon pointed out that very few cases arise involving graduate students, and that, thus, the complication of handling Law and Dental Courts would be minimal.

"This leaves two major courts," Van Loon dramatically announced, "and we feel that even Mr. Hodges should be able to decide whether a case should go to the Men's Court or to the Women's Court."

Letters To The Editor

Otelia, Rothman Draw Fire; DTH Is Praised

DTH Is Praised

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I wish to congratulate the DTH on its recent award for excellent journalism. I have not seen any of the competitive student papers, but I do know that yours has been consistently quite good.

Of course there are occasional slips (such as editorializing slipping into the front page) and the usual typos and juxtapositions; however, they are quite rare in comparison to many student (and even professional) papers. I think that if your readers knew how much time is spent by how few people in getting a paper out their criticisms might decrease.

Perhaps too many forget the basic role of a student paper—the student workshop experience. I feel this is more crucial than the informative and opinion-making roles, though I don't want to discount either of them. At times I have been almost infuriated over some of the columns, but then, when I stop to reflect, this is what they are supposed to do. I might add that your layout and pictures have been quite good.

Keep up the precedent.

Otelia Turns Off Tube

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Otelia Connor has stated that "to her way of thinking," Ralph Ellison was the best speaker of the Symposium and that she did not know any more about man, mind and myth than when it started.

A couple of the speakers were, I will have to admit, a little less than stupendous, but there were two speakers, Walter Kaufmann and Tom Wolfe, that made the entire Symposium worthwhile. Although these speakers were not always convivial "to my way of thinking," they provided food for thought and forced one, if open-minded, to reconsider one's opinions and beliefs.

But I suppose that they were two of those she cut off the TV when they said something with which she disagreed.

Rothman Wrong

Editor, the Daily Tar Heel:

In David Rothman's article of April 27, he asked five questions, concerning the role of the United States in Viet Nam, and concerning the motives of playwright Arden. The questions concerning Arden as an author and individual are best left to Rothman and Arden, but his other questions do need some answers.

Question one asked "Who says the United States is the aggressor?" The answer to that, if my sources are correct, is most of the world. Rothman claims that there was "outside intervention BEFORE THE U.S. buildup, and that the U.S. intervened only at the request of a legitimate government in order "to further intellectual freedom and other liberties." The fact of the matter is that the United States set up the "legitimate" government, and then, as near as anybody can tell, when the govated the population and had a rebllion on its hands, had a hand in overthrowing it. (cf RAMPARTS Vietnam Primer, February, 1966) The United States sent active (as opposed to "advisor") troops to Viet Nam six months before the Pentagon announced the DRV regulars were in the field. We had troops in Viet Nam before 1956, which was the date for the Viet Namwide electons we didn't let happen. It is difficult to believe that Ho Chi Minh, even if he had horns and a tail, would wage a guerrilla war in a country he expected to govern through victory in an election by an 80 per cent margin (Eisenhower's figures), so one is led to believe what we were there first.

Question two asked "What is so sickening about a democracy participating in a war, especially if it is not responsible for the conflict?" The answer here should be obvious to Rothman, but he some how missed the point, and answered another queston. If there is a war of aggression by one country against another, as in World War Two, then participation in that war on the side of the besieged might be inevitable. If the war is an internal revolution, then it is hopelessly futile at best, and at worst criminal for the democracy to step in, much less sickening. Unfortunately, the United States has followed what appears to be the colonial tradition of Great Britain and France, and steps into internal affairs of other nations when it feels that the other nation is not behaving in a U. S. — approved (read anti -communist) manner. (examples: Guatemala, 1954, Dominican Republic, 1965; Cuba, 1961) What Rothman wants to argue in question two is what kind of war we are fighting, which brings us back around to question one again.

Questions three and five concern Arden and are not relevant to the war. Question four is crucial, however. What Arden might mean by saying ('One man shouting 'No' gets nowhere — millions,whisper it with difference and even with tmidty, can make a noise like a tornado.") Is that once there is a large number of people against a war, even though that number is not vocal, the effect of those peoples' opinions will be felt by a democratic government.

Finally, I would like to answer those critics of "peacenik" dissent who ask why we don't go to Russia, China, hell, Indonesia, or wherever instead of criticizing the United States. The reason is that, basically, the protestor is an American, and feels strongly about this. If the country of which you are a citizen conducts itself in world affairs in a manner that makes you embarrassed or ashamed to be associated with it, then you can eigher speak out in dissent or dissociate yourself. Since the undeniable benefits of the American tradition of democracy, as embodied by our Constitution and legal system make one glad to be an American, then the only recourse open is vigorous, specific dissent. If you saw two people committing crimes, and could stop only one, and one of them was your father, whom would you stop?

Justice Dept. Uses Wrong Qualifications

By DAVID ROTHMAN

Malcolm B. Seawell, head of the State Board of Elections, raised an excellent point this week when he criticized the federal government for including prisoners and mentally deficient in a census to determine whether certain counties are guilty of racial discrimination in judging voter qualifications.

According to recent civil rights legislation, counties with fewer than a specified number of adults voting must suspend thier literacy tests.

Ordinarily, the formula might seem fair, but when prisoners and others normally deemed ineligible to vote are part of the surveys, one questions the fairness of the Justice Department, which suspended the counties' voter test on the basis of the surveys' results.

As Seawell said, "A census which includes persons confined to institutions for the mentally deficient or confined as felons in prison . . . silly"

In fact, it is just as silly as voter discrimination itself, which likewise is based on twisted interpretations of various technicalities.

The Civil Rights Act against this discrimination was a good measure, but if the Justice Department persists in abusing its powers to eliminate what could easily be a very real evil, then the federal government is guilty of practices just as unconstitutional as those of the most bigoted Southern registrar.

"Yeah! I'll PROBABLY take you to church in the morning!"

Parson Hits Youthful Fornicators In Letter

Editor's note — This is a text of a letter to The Greenville News written by Pastor W. A. Bell of the Church of God No. 2 in Walhalla, South Carolina. For some unexplicable reason the good reverend decided that copies of it would be sent to The Harvard Crimson and The Daily Tar Heel. Possibly Pastor Bell believes there is more fornication at these two places than there is elsewhere. For this reason, all you detestable fornicators out there better read and heed.)

By W. A. BELL

I am writing to voice my objection to an article that appeared in The Greenville News on April 16, 1966. The article was about a speech made by Dr. Joseph Fletcher, Professor of Social Ethics at the Episcopal Theological School in Cambridge, Massachusetts. The part of his speech that prompts this letter is as follows: ". . . premarital sexual relations between consenting, intelligent individuals should not be condemned . . . sexual relations which effect 'care and commitment' are not immoral." This is a verbatim quote from his speech as it appeared in the newspaper article.

The act which Dr. Fletcher is endorsing is described in the Holy Bible as fornication. Webster's Collegiate Dictionary states that fornication is an "illicit sexual intercourse on the part of an unmarried person."

Dr. Fletcher calls himself a theologian. He is teaching in a school that is obviously the training ground for future clergymen. If this is true, I believe this man would be willing to have his views on illicit sexual intercourse examined in the light of God's Eternal Word. Did not Jesus say in Mark 13:31, "Heaven and earth shall pass away; but my words shall not pass away?" Any ministers, when he speaks as a minister of the Gospel, should be able to harmonize his beliefs with those set forth by the Bible. In my opinion, Dr. Fletcher cannot possibly begin to do this.

One of the very first commandments passed down from the apostles after the death and ascension of Jesus had to do with this terrible sin of fornication. In Acts 15:29, we read the decision of the apostles "That ye abstain from meats offered to idols, and from blood, and from things strangled, and from fornication: From which if ye keep yourselfes, ye shall do well. Fare ye well." The Apostle Paul, the greatest theologian who ever lived other than Christ, dealt with this satanic sin in his first letter to the Corinthians, chapter 6, verse 18: "Flee fornication. Every sin that a man doeth is without the body; but he that committeth fornication sinneth against this own body."

Can any sane person dare suggest that Saint Paul was teachint that it was alright for consenting parties to practice sexual intercourse outside of marriage? God forbid! He is teaching right the opposite. He goes on in I Corinthians 7:2 and says that to avoid fornication "let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband." This undgodly act was prevalent in Paul's day. This great man of God spoke out against it time after time. I believe that every God - called Bible - believing minister will speak out against it in this day. Paul went on to say in Ephesians 5:3, "But fornication, and all uncleaness or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints." Any person who wants to do the will of God and who wants to live a life of sanctification must abstain from fornication as stated in I Thessalonians 4:3.

Finally, I wish to use one more scripture from the infallible word of God, Hebrews 13:4: "Marriage is honorable in all, and the bed undefiled: but whoremongers and adulterers God will judge." This tells us plainly that any sexual intercourse outside of marriage is sinful. God did not say one thing and mean something else. He is telling us through His man and through His word that the bed is defiled by fornication. God calls these people who do this by their correct name and He said that He would judge them.

Who are we to believe, God or Fletcher? God's word has stood the test and will continue to do so. I believe God. Romans 3:4(a): "God forbid: yea, let God be true, but every man a liar."

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Critic's Corner

Carolina Quarterly Called Lifeless, 70-Page Corpse

The winter edition of "The Carolina Quarterly" is a mummy. Several fairly interesting poems and articles fail to breathe any life into the 70-page corpse and the feeling one has after plodding through the entire contents is that of numbness laced with dismay —dismay at the lack of vitality and originality in a publication with such enormous potential

What good can be said about the new edition of the Quarterly? There are five poems by Cuban poet Nicolas Guillen and they have about them a song - like quality and some excellent imagery. ("Today the moon came up - behind by house - it fell off the sky and stuck to the ground.")

UN CArt Professor Philip Fehl contributed an essay on Rodolphe Toepfer, a 19th century Swiss scholar and inventor of the comic strip or picture story. Dr. Fehl illustrates his essay with line drawings and in the course of his academic presentation comes up with bits of information that just might be of interest to someone besides art students.

Assistant professor art John M. Schnorrenberg's "Reflections on Students, Scholars, the Bible and the Secular University" is perhaps the best article in the Quarterly. As the title suggests, Dr. Schnorrenberg covers a lot of territory in his article which all totaled, may not be extremely profound but is at least sporadically illuminating. "What I am saying," Schnorrenberg writes "is that the Christian, the Church . . . and the world, the University . . . need not be in oppostion . . . it is not going to be easy, but the Church and the University can become engaged. Since it is the Church that must change its way above all, its anti-intellectualism."

These handful of poems and two scholarly articles constitute the only flicker of life in the Quarterly — and it is only that — a flicker, a dim one.

There are eight photographs by Peter Schlaifer in the Quarterly. Whether the photographs —which include the distorted face of a Negro man, a close-up of an unfurling flag, a blurred shot of a dog's head — things individually or were so arranged to suggest a pictorial essay, they are uniformly drab and aroused — in this reviewer, at least, no emotions whatsoever.

A Schlaifer photograph appears on the Quarterly's cover: silhouetted birds on a concrete passenger shelter above a railroad. This photograph, unlike the others, has beauty and is strangely evocative.

The most distressing aspect of the new Quarterly is its fiction: three short stories, "Goldfish" by Norman Mosallem; "Hills of Rome" by Peter L. Pinto and "The Wooden Sparrow" by Joan Jrale. Each of these stories is marked by an affected obliqueness and disregard for characterization, dialogue and description.

Granted, the authors' space was limited and there is just so much a writer may do in a few pages. But the authors of these nervous, awkward little pieces seem in such urgent need of getting their profundities down on paper that they bind and gag themselves. The fruit of their labors is not overripe or even rotten but featureless embryos.

The only fictional skeleton that has any semblance of meat on it is Joan Jurale's "The Wooden Sparrow". In this impressionistic story the author demonstrates she at least has a concern with her characters and partially succeeds in conveying a real feeling even though the story isn't very impressive overall.

If in the writing of these stories the authors achieved some personal catharsis along with creative muscle flexing fine: the stories will have been of some benefit. To most readers, however, the stories will be every boring.

How is it that the winter Quarterly turned out so dull? For the same reason it was dull last fall perhaps. No one writing. Just one of those things. Those who bother to read the Quarterly may argue till they are blue in the face about the worth of individual works inside its pages or the varying quality of the whole product. But anyone who cannot say unequivocally that Carolina deserves a much better Literary Quarterly than it has gotten recently is, I believe, mistaken and sadly so.

The remakrs of Michael Paull, new editor of the Quarterly, in Thursday's Daily Tar Heel were encouraging. Paul talks about a "new face" for the Quarterly — "good, fresh stories, poems and articles." Paull's goals are admirable and we sincerely hope that he and his associates can succeed in achieveing them next year.

Sino-Soviet Dispute Said Not Permanent

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials said yesterday there is a possibility that the Soviet Union will make a comeback in Communist China after the death of aging Mao Tze-Tung and thus heal the rift in the Communist world.

Expert "China - watchers" told editors and broadcasters attending a State Department national foreign policy conference that it would be foolish to think that the split between Peikng and Moscow is permanent.

It was ointed out that since the fall of Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev in October, 1964, the quarrel between the two Communist giants has been due more to what the Chinese leaders have been saying than what the Russians have been doing to perpetutate the split.

How much the present Chinese Communist attitude is the work of the 72-year-old dictator Mao and how much is due to a collective decision of the Chinese leadership is not known here.

However, there are problems along the borders of the two countries which the Chinese Communists have kept alive by repeating accusations that the Soviet Union has been fomenting revolts in Sinkiang province.

Mao has not been seen in public since last November — leading to speculation that he may again be ill. There have been reports that his eyesight is failing and other speculation that he has been dangerously ill. Such reports have been periodic for the past decade.

The Daily Tar Heel World News BRIEFS

By The Associated Press

LONDON (AP)—Immovable object: a 9-ft. statue of the late Sir Winston Churchill, which vandals recently tried to topple with a rope tied to an automobile, now stands immovable—it is hoped—on its pedestal. Workmen have filled the hollow bronze legs with concrete.

The statue was erected at Woodford Green, near London, by the people Churchill represented for many years in Parliament. He was present at the unveiling.

For some reason, police said, vandals tried in vain to pull it over with the car but moved it only slightly on its pedestal. Now it is almost impossible to move, police said, hopefully.

JAKARTA, (AP)—Volcano's toll rises: The Indonesian news agency Antara reported Friday that at least 50 persons died in last Monday's eruption of the Mt. Kelut volcano in East Java and many more persons are still unaccounted for.

A mass evacuation of the densely populated area of about 500,000 Javans is under way, Antara said. Communications with Blitar, a city of 28,000 and the trading center for the area, remained cut off.

MOSCOW (AP)—Soviet protest: An estimated 5,000 persons, led by university students, defied Soviet officials in Armenia and demonstrated last Sunday on the anniversary of a Turkish massacre of Armenians, according to reports reaching Moscow from Yerevan, the Armenian capital.

The demonstration followed public condemnation by Armenian Communist party officials of a larger, more unruly demonstration last year on the 50th anniversary.

Soviet officials have tried to prevent such outbreaks against Turkey since Soviet foreign policy now stresses friendship with Turkey. Armenia borders Turkey and Iran.

Armenians still remember the deaths between 1894 and 1922 of hundreds of thousands of Armenian Christians at the hands of Turkish Moslems. The main massacre occurred April 24, 1915.

BERLIN (AP)—Soviet engine found: A battered jet engine from a Russian fighter plane that crashed into a West Berlin lake earlier this month was lifted Friday from the lake bottom by a British military salvage crew.

A British spokesman said the engine will be studied by experts before it is turned over to Soviet authorities.

Crews have been sifting the mud of Lake Stoessen for three weeks since the crash on April 6. Their operations have been under constant surveillance of Russian military personnel.

The crash, which killed the plane's two man crew, involved a new all-weather Russian Fighter not seen previously by the Western allies.

Most of the wreckage was brought to the surface a week after the crash and handed over to the Russians. A second engine is still being sought, however.

Lodge Leaves Viet Nam For Washington Review

SAIGON (AP) — Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge started home yesterday for a Washington review of Viet Nam problems that Saigon authorities fear may be complicated while he is enroute by labor - inspired May Day rioting.

In a war now engaging nearly 250,000 American servicemen with the arrival of 4,000 fresh combat troops to round out the 25th infantry division, most activity reported Friday was in the air.

A count of Communist food and other supplies seized by the U. S. 1st infantry division this week near the Cambodian frontier soared to 1,100 tons. But guerrilla units were keeping clear of this and five other major American ground operations.

A U. S. Marine patrol reported the sole contact. A spokesman said it stirred up a Viet Cong detachment 17 miles south of Da Nang and, with artillery help, killed 12.

The capital's leading labor unions, which have marshaled up to 40,000 demonstrators in Saigon streets at times in the past, called for a giant march on the socialist labor day Sunday. Some unionists were reported preparing banners demanding an end to the war.

Mahor Van Van Cua charged that the unions are Communist - infiltrated and may "stage an attempt to seize power." Cua told newsmen, however, "We are ready for any eventuality." Squads of white-clad riot police and a regiment of Vietnamese paratroopers were on the alert.

Nevertheless, there was a calm atmosphere in Lodge's flight arrangements. Though it was not disclosed whether he hoped to see Pope Paul VI, he planned one stop in Rome. He expects to visit several days in Boston, his home area, on the way to Washington, where he is due for consultations May 7 or 8.

"It will be a general, important review and perhaps some new policy decisions," newsmen were told. "But this is no crisis trip."

Sitting in for Lodge at the fortress - like U. S. embassy will be William Porter, the deputy chief of mission.

The 4,000 men beefing up the 25th division to full strength complete a 25 per cent increase in American forces in Viet Nam since the start of the year. Temporarily based at Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport, they make up the main body of the division's 1st brigade. The commander is Col. William B. Sandlin Jr., 44, of Marathon, Fla.

A government spokesman said they staged a grenade attack on an outpost 18 miles south of Saigon, mortared a Hau Nghai province village west of this city and wounded 16 civilians in a mortar attack on a Vietnamese headquarters near Ba Tri, 60 miles south of saigon.

Viet Cong mines wrecked a small passenger bus and a military truck in the Mekong Delta. Three Vietnamese women were killed and seven persons were wounded in the bus. The spokesman said there were an undetermined number of casualties in the truck.

Trucks and cargo junks were high priority targets in 64 missions of U. S. Air Force and Navy sqadrons over North Viet Nam Thursday.

Navy fliers announced they destroyed 58 junks in attacks along the Tonkin Gulf coast between Vihn and Haiphong. Air Force pilots said they destroyed 30 trucks and two antiaircraft sites around Dong Hoi, 40 miles north of the border.

In the south, enemy sampans and storage dumps were the targets of 310 sorties — combat flights by single planes.

Two destroyers of the U. S. 7th fleet shelled suspeted Communist shore emplacements and B52 jet bombers from Guam saturated an area 60 miles south of Da Nang where enemy troop concentrations have been reported.

In another field, a group of South Vietnamese intellectuals charged that the nation's cultural life is in a state "of desperate stagnation" and called on the government to take appropriate measures.

In a signed statement addressed to the chief of state, Lt. Gen. Nguyen Van Thieu, 26 writers, poets and artists said:

"While governments have changed, the country's intellectual life has degenerated . . . submerging the noble traditions of our people."

They said part of this situation is due to "lack of democracy and censorship which prevents intellectuals from expressing the truth for the edification of the country and education of its citizens."

The government is desperately trying to avoid rioting in the tense period before promised general elections within three to five months.

Cua said reliable reports "conclusively indicate that several armed trade union cadres are on a whispering campaign with accompanying threats to press workers into an attempt to seize power."

Cua told the union leaders tha he holds them personally responsible for "all acts resulting in injuries to people or damage to private property."

Sukarno Upbraids Minister For Anti-Communist Blast

JAKARTA (AP) — President Sukarno publicly upbraided Foreign Minister Adam Malik yesterday for encouraging student agitation against leftist elements in the government.

Malik tried to pass the outbursts off by implying that he had been misquoted. The flare-up occurred during a conference involving newsmen, Sukarno, Malik and Economic Affairs Minister Sultan Hamengku Buwono.

The students claim that the Supreme Advisory Council, just reshuffled by Sukarno, contained too many pro - Communist members.

To a group of students demonstrating against the council Thursday, Malik said, "I am always with you. Continue your actions until our aims are achieved."

When Sukarno demanded to know whether he had made the statement, Malik did not respond directly but said all the newsmen had not been present when he spoke to the students. He implied that he had not been córrectly quoted.

The quarrel pointed to continued tensions between Sukarno and the new ruling group in which Malik has a key post with strong army support.

Meanwhile, a further change in direction by the new rulers away from the policies pursued by Sukarno was indicated by the reactions of top leaders to Britain's decision to grant $2.8 million in aid.

Although Sukarno declined to say more than "I don't care if it's from Britain or heaven," Buwono called it a good omen.

"It's a good gesture," the economic affairs minister said. "Indonesia is thankful for it. It could lead to other things."

Lt. Gen. Suharto, the leader of the ruling group, said simply that Indonesia was thankful for the gesture.

Don't Worry About The 1.6

Yesterday I suggested that the NCAA take care of the red-shirting problem and leave the academic averages alone. Today I want to explain my position on the now-famous—or notorious—1.6.

Their intentions were good, but the NCAA bigwigs made a mistake when they instituted the rule that athletes must maintain a 1.6 average in the classroom to get a chance to run up higher averages on the playing fields.

I agree with these gentlemen that athletes should be students and not just bodies whose only connection with the university is the name on the uniform they wear. I do not agree that setting an arbitrary grade requirement is the way to insure that athletes are students.

It seems to me to be roughly comparable to having everybody wear lucky charms around their necks to ward off evil spirits. It's a "remedy" that everyone can see, and it's easy to check and see whether all the people have their charms. The cure, however, bears no real relationship to the problem. Neither does a flat grade requirement have any real relationship to the question of whether an athlete is really a bona fide student.

To begin with, a 1.6 average at Harvard bears no recognizable connection with a 1.6 at Podunk College. A student may have to study five hours a day to make the same grade at one that he could make with five minutes study at the other. In short, any rule that sets a universal standard of achievement gives an advantage to those schools in which the achievement is easier.

Curriculum is another factor that the NCAA ignores in its exaltation of the 1.6. What kind of courses do the students art Harvard have to take? Chances are that they are tougher than the ones the Podunk boys are faced with.

The individual college should be the judge of the eligibility of its athletes. Will some schools bend the requirements when a star halfback is involved? Sure, but I don't think this is a serious problem. More important, if a school is going to cheat to make an athlete eligible, the 1.6 rule certainly won't prevent the skullduggery.

It's just about as easy to raise a grade as it is to lower a requirement. Friendly professors can often be persuaded to change a D-plus to a C-minus if such a step will put an athlete into a game instead of into the stands. Then there is always the proverbial basketweaving course, in which an athlete can pick up a handy A without too much trouble.

The NCAA's got a good ideal—do away with pseudo-professional athletes in colleges. They'll have to find a better way to do it, though.

The Carolina football team comes out of hiding today. Coach Jim Hickey unveils the 1966 Tar Heels—minus baseballers Danny Talbott, Bob Hume and Charlie Carr—in the spring game in Kenan Stadium at 2 p.m. One aspect of the team that will be closely watched is the pass defense. A leaky secondary hurt the Tar Heels in '65. . . .

Juan Marichal is really off and roaring for the San Francisco Giants this season. The righthander with one of the highest kicks in baseball has won four straight all complete games. He may yet challenge Sandy Koufax as the best pitcher around. . . .

When Cleveland won its tenth game in a row Thursday night, the Indians tied the major league record for victories at the start of a season. The record was held jointly by the 1944 St. Louis Browns, the 1955 Brooklyn Dodgers and the 1962 Pittsburgh Pirates. Both the Browns and the Dodgers went on to win the pennant, but the Pirates wound up fourth. That's 2 to 1 odds, Indian fans. . .

The Kentucky Derby may be a horse race, after all. Graustark had been virtually conceded the race by many experts and had even been hailed as another Man o' War. However, Abe's Hope handed the Darby Dan colt his first defeat Thursday in the Blue Grass Stakes. While horsemen will no doubt take heart from Graustark's setback, he should improve off his first distance effort and still looms very much the horse to beat. . .

Clemson has a lineup of bombers ready for Danny Walker and the Tar Heels today. Every starter is hitting over .350. George Sutton has broken the Tiger team records for homers in a season with 11 and in a career with 20. Sutton is also closing in on the season RBI mark.

Spring Game In Kenan

Gridders Appear Today

The annual Blue and White football game will wind up a spring of closed Carolina practices today at 2 p.m. in Kenan Stadium.

Head Coach Jim Hickey termed the spring drills the "best off - season practice in my eight years as head coach."

The Blue backfield will be mainly a veteran unit with Jeff Beaver doing the quarterbacking. Beaver has two years of eligibility left. Lettermen David Riggs and Tom Lampman will run at the halfback posts and freshman Mark Mazza is the fullback.

Tim Karrs, who was red-shirted last year, will call signals for the White squad. Karrs flashed signs of brilliancy two years ago as a freshman. Bud Phillips is the only letterman in the group at flankerback. Tommy Dempsey is the fullback and Dick Wesolowski, the Canadian pile-driver, is the running halfback. Wesolowski gained over 500 yards in 5 freshman games last fall.

The entire Tar Heel team will boast a physically bigger group than Carolina teams of the past. The Blue offensive line averages 223 pounds and is anchored by giant tackles Tom Ingle (240) and Mike Richey (253). Bo Wood, a defensive specialist last season, will get a shot at tight end and newcomer Peter Davis, a 6'4" lad with good hands, is the wide end.

The White offensive line is an even beefier 226. Terry Rowe (254)and Tommy Gardner (260), a pair of king-size freshman, will man the tackle positions.

On defense, the Blue averages 220, the White 217. No Carolina team of the past has ever managed a line that size.

Returning veterans, who will primarily play for the Blue team, include Jim Masino, who has been shifted from defensive end to middle guard. A move like this three years ago involving Chris Hanburger stabilized the UNC defense and landed the Tar Heels in the Gator Bowl.

A total of 26 lettermen took part in spring practice, minus quarterback Danny Talbott, end Bob Hume and end Charlie Carr, all starters on the baseball team.

Lacrosse Men At Maryland

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

After losing a tight game to Virginia 8-5 last weekend, Carolina lacrosse team plays Maryland, the nation's second-ranked team at College Park today.

Maryland possesses a team which has three of the nation's top four scorers. Leading the array is captain and All - America Jack Heim. Heim is presently the leading scorer in the nation with a total of 42 points after seven games.

In their last game the Terps beat Duke 19-5 after being handed their first loss of the season by Navy and Jimmy Lewis 11-9.

UNC Coach Cony Steele will start with Tim Balch, Sandy Reider and Jake Hubbard at attack. At the midfields will be Pete Williams, the team's leading scorer, Dan Howe and Bob Morrison.

Drivers Vie For Position At Virginia Race Course

DANVILLE, Va. (AP) — Some 150 racing cars will start scrambling for starting positions today when practice opens for Sunday's sports car races at Virginia International Raceway (VIR).

At stake are championship points in 16 classes of Sports Car Club of America (SCCA) competition, plus a crack at one of the most demanding road courses on the east coast.

Entries range from Dr. Dick Thompson's 200-mile-an-hour Ford GT40 from Washington to a 12-year-old MG-TD entered by Tom Galloway of Charlotte.

Today's schedule calls for a series of five-lap sprints to determine Sunday's starting positions. The single-seat, open-wheeled formula cars will lead off the sprints, followed by the Porsche - dominated E, F, G, and H production events, sedans, the A, B, C and D production race pitting Ford's Cobra 427 against Chevrolet's 427 Sting Ray.

Winding up the day will be the feature sprint for the 30 entries in the sports racing category, formally known as the modified class.

Chryslers Top 'Rebel' Field

DARLINGTON, S. C. —(AP) —With the Ford factory team absent, Chrysler Corp.. cars have the field almost to themselves today in the $65,000 Rebel 400 mile stock car race at 16 - year - old Darlington International Raceway.

A Chrysler product has won only two races at Darlington since this first of the superspeedways opened in 1950 and has never won the Rebel 400 first run in 1957.

Ford's Out

Ford, which had won five of the seven Rebel events, uulled its seven - car factory operation out of stock car racing last month after sanctioning bodies approved its overhead cam engine but placed a weight handicap of 427 pounds on its use.

The dispute idled such Darlington stars as Fred Lorenzen, a two - time winner of the Rebel 400, and Ned Jarrett, who won the Labor Day 500 last year.

Richard Petty, ace of the Plymouth team, will start in the pole position after shattering the speedway's qualifying record on the first day of time trials Wednesday. His four - lap average for the mile and three eighths layout was 140.815 miles per hour. Lorenzen held the old record of 138.133.

Four others bettered the old record, including Darel Dieringer whose brand new Mercury Comet may give the Chrysler cars their only real test. Dieringer's car, which never has been raced, turned 139.103, second best of the week.

Three Plymouths, a Mercury, two Dodges and two Chevrolets make up the first four rows for the 2 p.m. start. One of the Chevrolets will be driven by Curtis Turner, who bolted the idled Ford team to drive as an independent for the remainder of the season.

Turner, 43, is an old Darlington favorite. He won the Rebel event, then run at 300 miles, in 1958 as a team Ford team driver. He also won the 1956 Southern 500 in a Ford. He'll be the only former winner in the field.

If the weather is good, a crowd of 30,000 is expected to see the event.

Carolina Wins On Error; Thomas Gets Three Hits

You know the feeling, and it just can't be helped.

South Carolina baseball coach Dick Weldon had the feeling yesterday, as the Tar Heels stole all his celebration fireworks and sneaked out the back door with the cake to ruin his 37th remembrance.

Carolina sneaked in the back door with an unearned run in the tenth inning which gave it a 1-0 win and made the dark, overcast day a completely black one for Weldon.

It was UNC's fifth straight win, and ran the overall mark to 13-8. More importantly, it put another half-game between Carolina (7-1) and runnerup Clemson (7-3), which is met today on the Tigers' home field.

The game will be broadcast over WCHL-Radio (1360), starting with an interview with Coach Walt Rabb at 2:15.

Ironically, it was a bit of forced strategy by Weldon which led to his team's downfall. When his regular third baseman, Scott Townsend, was ejected from the game for too strongly protesting an out at first, Weldon moved right fielder Al Mirando to the hot corner.

It was Mirando's throwing error to first on an easy two-out grounder that let in the winning run for the Heels.

Strong Pitching

It almost figured that a misplay would have to occur to turn the tide. UNC got shutout pitching from starter Beattie Leonard for six innings, and reliever George McRae had continued the spell for three more. But even more impressive was USC's big lefty, Loveard McMichael.

The senior Gamecock hurler, whose record dropped to 2-4 (he's given one earned run in his last three losses), completely mastered the Heels the entire game, turning back a couple of futile threats to hold the shutout deadlock.

But one man McMichael couldn't control was Tar Heel second baseman Charlie Thomas. The little infielder whacked two singles and reached base on a fielder's choice his initial three times up, and when he moved into the batter's box with one out in the crucial tenth, you figured he was due to go down.

Third Hit

But "The Fox," who pushed his average back above .300, picked out a pitch and swatted his third single into left-center. Then George McRae pushed the Tar Heels' fifth straight successful sacrifice to the pitcher, and Thomas was at second with two out.

It was the sixth time in ten turns that Carolina had advanced a man as far as second. Five times they had been unable to get him across . . . but the sixth time they broke lucky and made it.

Bob Hume started the big play by bouncing an easy chance toward new third baseman Mirando. Al fielded the ball cleanly and fired toward first for what would have been the final out.

Cindermen Run To Wake Forest

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sportswriter

With a 4-1 record in the ACC the Carolina track team journeys to Winston - Salem today to meet the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest.

Presently, Carolina is in second place in the ACC after routing Virginia 95-50 in Charlottesville last weekend.

Wake Forest as a team does not appear to have much depth. However, they have a fine performer in the triple jump as well as a standout middle distance runner.

In the field events Carolina's strength lies in the discus where Pete Worthen, who holds the freshmen record of 153'11", will carry the lead.

In the shot put the Tar Heels have three fine performers in Feliz Alley, Ron Short and Barney Varner. Short may also throw the discus as he did a year ago.

Senior Pat Tone, and sohpomores Chris Heaton and Tom Perry will throw the javelin today. In the high jump Coach Joe Hilton has Tilden Bridges and Jim Frye. Frye is also slated to run the high hurdles for the thin clads.

Showing Potential

In the running events Jon Levin and Ed Daw give Carolina a fine sprint duo. Levin is entered in the relays, 100 and 220. Daw will also be a member of both relays as well as an entry in the 220 and the 440.

The hurdles are led by Richie Ambrose, whose specialty is the 440, and soph Jim Frye, who forte lies in the highs.

Wake Forest possesses an excellent triple jumper, and Carolina plans to counter this with Gary Iverson, who has dones an outstanding job this year in the broad jump and triple jump.

Tough 880 Race

Half milers Bill Bassett, Tom Carpenter, and Co-Captain Bill Janewite will have a tough race since Wake Forest's Al Viehman is an outtanding individual and a great competitor.

In the mile Carolina has a standout in sophomore Mike Williams, who two weeks ago ran a 4:116 against Maryland. Williams may run the half if Coach Hilton needs him.

Co - Captin Jim Meade heads the list of two milers. Meade will be backed up by Trip McPherson, Charles Worley and Red McCall.

The 440 relay will in all probability consist of Adger Stokes, Winbourne King, Ed Daw and Jon Levin. In the mile relay Hilton will most likely go with sprinters Jon Levin and Ed Daw, hurdler Richie Ambrose and miler Mike Williams.

This meet is an important one for the thinclads. Next week they meet Duke in the highlight of the dual meet season.

Sports Today

The Carolina tennis team is host to invading South Carolina today on the varsity courts at 2 p.m. Coach Don Skakle's crew is undefeated in the Atlantic Coast Conference and sports a 17-1 record in all matches.

The baseball team, after its encounter with South Carolina yesterday, stays in the Palmetto State to play Clemson this afternoon at 3 p.m. The Tigers will be out to avenge a 6-1 defeat administered in Chapel Hill.

The golf team travels to Winston - Salem and a match with Wake Forest at 1 p.m. and the Lacorsse team is visiting Maryland at 2:30.

University Chorus Sings Spring Concert

The University Chorus, under the direction of Wayne Zarr of the UNC music faculty, will present its spring concert Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

The major work to be performed by the 75-voice student choir will be Cantata No. 4, "Christ lay in death's dark prison," of J. S. Bach. The North Carolina string Quartet and organist Sue Guerry will provide an abbreviated orchestral accompaniment for this most highly regarded of Bach's cantatas. The chorus will also sing works of Mozart, Heinrich Schuetz and others.

Also included on the evening's program are pieces by contemporary composers Edmund Rubbra and John Diercks, to be performed by a 16 - voice madrigal group. Mr. Diercks is head of the music department at Hollins College in Roanoke and is now living in Chapel Hill as holder of a grant from the Duke-UNC Cooperative Program in the Humanities.

Other off - campus engagements this season have included performances at the Village Chapel in Pinehurst and at the Wesleyan Foundation Chapel in Chapel Hill.

Today's Afternoon Jubilee Features Trio, Combo

Today's afternoon Jubilee session features singing trio David, della Rosa and Brooks plus the popular sound of Jay and the Americans. Check with Graham Memorial to find out if the show will be held in Carmichael Auditorium or if it will move back outside. David, della Rosa and Brooks use a bass accompanist along with two guitars played by the group. All instruments are amplified. Jay and the Americans are one of the most popular groups in the business today with songs like "Cara Mia" and "Lets Lock the Door."

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Selective Service System says it is up to state directors and local draft boards whether lists of registrants ordered for induction are made public.

A memorandum first issued in December 1962 dealing with this has been revised, as of April 15, to clarify the provisions.

This word came today from a Selective Service spokesman who also made available a reply to a request on behalf of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association that names of inductees be released to newspapers.

Hu Blonk of the Wenatchee (Wash.) Daily World, chairman of the APME Freedom of Information Committee, directed his request to Lt. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, director of Selective Service. Blonk wrote that the Washington State Draft Director said he was barred from making the names public on orders from Hershey's office.

Blonk said many newspapers would like "to recognize youths about to go into service for their country," and added:

"I think you will agree it is a worthwhile objective. It seems a shame to prevent this on the basis that some bill collector might locate a citizen behind in his payments."

Navy Capt. William S. Pascoe, who is Selective Service's Public Information Officer, replied for Hershey and cited the revised memorandum, which provides:

"There are no restrictions imposed by the director of Selective Service upon the release or publication of lists of names of registrants nor upon the time such lists may be made available for publication. In the absence of any restrictions imposed by a State Director of Selective Service upon local boards under his jurisdiction, such local boards may publish such lists of registrants as they in their discretion may deem appropriate."

The spokesman said the memorandum as first issued contained only the first sentence, and that the references to State Directors and local boards contained in the second sentence were added this month.

Johnson Warns Spending Increase Will Balloon Next Year's Budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Johnson Administration cautioned yesterday that spending proposals at various stages of action in congress could add $2.5 billion to $2.8 billion to the $113 billion budget for the next fiscal year.

Meanwhile President Johnson made public a memo to departments and agencies saying he is pleased at their success in making savings which he has urged on them.

The figures from Schultz amounted to a direct counterpunch — and the Johnson statement to an indirect one — against the developing tendency in congress to give the President funds he hasn't asked for.

Recent actions at the Capitol indicate the legislators intend to keep on using a two-edge sword on the national budget, one edge razor honed for cuts into some Johnson programs and the other dull for application to some costly pre - Johnson projects.

Computers Help Patients

One of the most immediate applications of computers in medicine is getting and processing physiological data, a computer scientist said here Thursday night.

"This is making medicine better much more quickly than anything else," Dr. Ralph W. Stacy said.

Dr. Stacy spoke before some members of the central Carolina chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery which met on the UNC campus.

He explained that the processing of physiological data usually involves small, fast computers with several special features such as an ability to translate from electrical signal to numbers as well as visual display.

A professor of bioengineering and biomathematics in the UNC Medical School's department of surgery, Dr. Stacy suggested that the computer also take over many of the complex technical and administrative jobs in hospitals.

Freshman Girls Swell In Number

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The enrollment of the freshman class for next year will increase the ratio of women to men by raising the number of freshman women from 336 to 500 and lowering the number of freshman men from 1969 to 1800.

These changes will not affect the overall 1200 enrollment that the freshman class will be allowed to reach again this year.

UNC has set a 500 limit on transfer students for the fall semester and a 50 limit for the spring semester. Almost all of these students will be transferring after their sophomore year.

The increase in the number of freshman women has brought about the administration decision to allow undergraduate women to room in Granville Hall next year.

The women will still be under the authority of the University even though the residence hall is privately owned.

Counselors are being interviewed by the Office of the Dean of Women to serve in Granville. Their salaries will be paid by the corporation Granville Hall.

Freshman women will be grouped together with the other undergraduate women in the residence hall because the Senior women will come under the new midnight late hour rule for the week-nights next year.

Plans are underway now to mail the Carolina Handbook to all entering freshmen and transfer students this summer before they arrive for orientation in the fall.

Jubilee Finale May Be Moved Outside

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Where will Charlie Byrd perform when he comes to town this afternoon at 3?

The Graham Memorial Activities Board, Jubilee sponsor, was uncertain yesterday afternoon where the concert would be.

GMAB Director Howard Henry said he called the weatherman yesterday and asked about today's weather.

The weatherman said there is a chance of a thunder shower this afternoon.

"When?" Henry asked.

"Probably between 3 and 5," was the reply.

Henry said he would contact the weatherman again this morning and then decide where the concert will be.

He expressed "hope" that Byrd would be able to perform in Polk Place.

Henry estimated 5,500 heard the Bitter End Singers Friday night in Carmichael Auditorium. He said 7,200 is a conservative estimate of the crowd who saw David, della Rosa and Brooks and Jay and the Americans indoors yesterday afternoon.

Henry expected a packed house long before Al Hirt and his Band began last night.

There had been no incidents in the crowd, Henry said. He called the reception of the entertainers "enthusiastic."

He said he plans to suggest to GMAB to have continous entertainment next year, rather than the two hour break between the afternoon and evening concerts of past Jubilees.

Nixon Hits LBJ And Viet Critics

DURHAM — President Johnson, critics of the war in Viet Nam and academic freedom became targets of blasts by former Vice President Richard M. Nixon here yesterday.

Nixon warned at a news conference that if the United States "cuts and runs in Viet Nam" the nation can expect a worldwide nuclear war in five years.

He said that the appeasement line "as advocated by Senator William Fulbright, will make certain World War III.

Nixon criticized President Johnson for being the "first President in history who has failed to unite his own party during time of war.

As to academic freedom on university campuses, Nixon had this to say:

"When a nation is at war, a professor who is paid by the taxpayers should not use the University as a forum to come out in favor of the enemy.

"He may disagree with the war, with the conduct of the war, with the principle of the draft. But he must not be subsidized by the taxpayer while he gives comfort to the enemy.

"On the campuses of private schools, this is a matter for the board of trustees to decide."

Returning to the subject of the war in Viet Nam, Nixon labeled Fulbright's statements "as irresponsible" and "the cause of any war hysteria in our nation."

He said the philosophy of Fulbright "and some of the recommendations of Sen. Robert Kennedy of New York, might lead to a temporary peace, followed by a certain war."

Any war with China in the near future, Nixon noted, would be an atomic one "because the Chinese will have nuclear weapons.

"Once you reward aggression," Nixon continued, "you can expect a global war. We must stop the Communists in Viet Nam. This is the only way to avoid World War III."

Nixon was in Durham to participate in special ceremonies at the Duke University Law School where he was a student 30 years ago.

Nixon said he had no personal political plans except "to assist, as I can, Republican candidates in the 1966 election."

The 1960 GOP presidential candidate said he would return to North Carolina in the fall to aid Republican candidates in marginal congressional districts.

On the domestic front, Nixon said President Johnson must assume full responsibility for higher taxes and higher prices.

GM Sponsors Talent Show

Graham Memorial will sponsor a talent show next Sunday in Swain Hall Studio One. Deadline for signing up for the contest is 5 p.m. Tuesday in GM.

The contest, held in conjunction with WGHP - TV, is open to Carolina students. Judges of the local competition will be members of the staff of the High Point television station and Dr. William Hardy of the RTVMP department.

Local winners will have a chance to compete with winners from other state campuses, and to get an audition with American Broadcasting Company in New York.

The state - wide competition will be held May 14, at 8 p.m., over a 90 - minute special on WGHP - TV. Tapes will be made of this show to be sent to New York to compete for the ABC audition.

UNC Jounalists Third In U.S.

The UNC School of Journali finished third in the sixth annual journalism awards program of the Randolph Heart Foundation it was announced Saturday.

Eight students combined to win $1,375.

Indiana University placed first, with the University of Nebraska coming in second place.

Models

Interviews for models for the fashion magazine Mademoiselle will be held from 4-6 on Wednesday, May 4, in Gerrard Hall.

Particularly urged to come are girls between five feet, five inches and five feet, ten inches in height. The girls should be thin and preferably have long straight hair.

All interested in being interviewed must sign up beforehand at the Information Desk in GM.

Selections for the magazine will be made by Nonnie Moore, sportswear editor, and photographer George Barkentin.

A Student Profile

Van Loon: Involved In Everything— Debater And Presidential Assistant

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Presidential Assistant Eric Van Loon is a man who wears many hats at the same time.

This past year the junior from Nashville, Tenn. was vice president of the debating team, National Student Association campus coordinator, a Morrison resident adviser, treasurer of the Carolina Symposium and chairman of the Carolina Political Union.

Last spring he ran unsuccessfully for student body treasurer, and has participated in the Toronto Exchange and State Student Legislature. He will take part in an internship this summer in the U. S. Congress.

Van Loon, an honors student in political science, has been vice president of Phi Eta Sigma freshman honorary and has been selected for initiation into Phi Beta Kappa.

For his involvement in many campus activities, Van Loon has been accepted into the Order of the Grail, the Order of the Golden Fleece and Amphoterothen public speaking honorary.

But why has he immersed almost his entire collegiate life into such massive participation?

"I'm in love with life," he says. "There's little that doesn't interest me. I'm very interested in politics as well as music, water skiing and swimming."

He even confesses "more than a pasing interest in women."

Van Loon spent a year as an exchange student in Germany between high school and Carolina, reflecting his great interest in international affairs.

He is now double-majoring in International Studies and considers his Toronto Exchange trip "one of my most valuable experiences here."

After graduation Van Loon intends to work for a doctorate in political science, then go into the Peace Corps — perhaps in India or Pakistan.

Why the Peace Corps?

"Somehow we've got to develop the underdeveloped half of the world," he says. "Simply pumping in money doesn't work completely.

"My German experience was advantageous in getting to know people, while speaking their language."

He must have known their language well, for he has been selected into Delta Phi Alpha German honorary fraternity and elected its vice president.

Eric Van Loon

Van Loon considers the politician as "a link between the academic community, which analyzes the needs of people and shortcomings of society, and the people who are disadvantaged by society."

Politics has always fascinated him, and he hopes to involve himself in politics eventually.

While politicking for treasurer last year, Van Loon "learned as much about the campus during the intensive three-week campaign as in my two years here before. It was really an eye-opening experience," he says.

He has three reasons for accepting his admission to UNC, though he was also admitted to Oberlin and Syracuse: "the UNC honors programs, the personal interest show me — even though I applied from Germany, the Carolina's major in International Studies."

Max Steele Named Writer-In-Residence By Committee

Max Steele will join the UNC faculty here in September as writer - in - residence He is a 1946 UNC graduate and a native of Greenville, S. C.

The announcement of Steele's selection was made by Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitteron upon recommendation from a selection committee headed by Dean Robert Miller.

In 1950 Steele won the Harper Brothers $10,000 prize for his novel "Debby," a delicate story of an unusual housekeeper, termed by one reviewer as "As much a "Mary Poppins" for adults as anything could be." "Debby" also was awarded the 1950 Mayflower Award as the best novel written in North Carolina.

Harper's has recently added the book to its paperback collection under the title of "The Goblins Must Go Barefoot."

Steele, a visiting lecturer at UNC from 1956-1958, is currently teaching at the University of California San Francisco campus.

HIGH OVERHEAD the lazy flag fluttered in the late afternoon breeze. 5:30 — time to take 'er down. Out of the Post Office strolled John H. Clark who has been lowering the Post Office flag for 17 years. Then it happened. The thing wouldn't come down. Mr. Clark tried body English, pulling on the ropes like a cathedral bell-ringer. No luck. Then after long, exasperating moments, the flag decided that Mr. Clark was due a rest and it demurely floated down into his arms. "Whew, beat it dog, this isn't no fire hydrant." Good News of the Week — Ursula Andress is open game! Actor John Derek said Monday he has started Mexican divorce proceedings against her. They have already signed a property settlement and are awaiting final papers from Tijuana.

White Man of the Week — Rev. Carey Daniel who edited the paperback "God the Original Segregationist" in which we found the following quote: "If we don't protest those mongrelizing television shows and boycott their sponsore and let them know the reason, then it won't be long until that Negro in your living room is no longer on your TV screen. He will be on your sofa with his arm around your daughter."

Lover of the Week — Whoever put the sign in the Arboretum: "Reserved for Jubilee."

News Tip of the Week — Whoever called all the sorority houses on campus and told them he was from the DTH. He instructed each house to send a girl to the Daily Tar Heel Office Friday afternoon to have her picture taken in connection with a "Prettiest Sorority Girl" contest. No one at the office knew anything about the supposed contest, but we enjoyed talking with all the lovely girls.

Preacher of the Week — Rev. W. A. Bell of Walhalla, S. C., who contributed his sermon on fornication to the Daily Tar Heel to be shared with all our readers. We thought it fortunate that his letter should come on the biggest dating weekend of the semester.

Salesmanship of the Week — The Tarheels Baseball team who has convinced us that after a bad start this season that they are going to capture the conference title. They are 8-1 now in ACC play and have five games to go. Do it Tarheels!

Convicted!

UNC isn't the only university whose students are in a stew over speaker policy. The University of Maryland has its problems too.

But theirs is not one of a written policy of discrimination against communists. The following editorial appeared in their newspaper — The Diamondback — Thursday:

The unacceptability of Dr. Leary on the University campus was based upon his criminal conviction. We feel that this proposition has some unusual implications and raises some suggestive questions.

First, this represents a change in University policy, for we should note that Brother Antoninus,Madelyn Murray, and Bayard Rustin have been convicted, but they were permitted to speak on campus.

Second, this new rule would certainly preclude many other men who might similarly serve an educational purpose. A list of possible candidates would surely include: Martin Luther King, Lord Bertrand Russell, Norman Thomas, and former Chancellor Adenauer.

Third, the University's new rule does not go far enough. If criminal conviction is a test of speakers, it should also apply to authors, whose works are sometimes available in the library and often assigned in courses. This list of infamous convicted criminals could begin with Socrates, Christ and St. Paul, and go on to include Dante, Martin Luther, John Milton, Voltaire, Thomas Jefferson, Dostoyevsky, Thoreau, Oscar Wilde, and Anne Frank. Of course, Freud and Einstein would have been forbidden by these standards, but they fled Hitler's Germany.

Armistead Maupin Jr.

A View from The Hill

For the past few months many chagrined minds have been focused on the controversy centering around the fraternity system and Dean William G. Long.

Before I go any further, let me point out that, in all honesty, I canot say what most of you expect me to say.

It's much too easy for us to close our eyes and make a tired joke and deny the facts. It's much too easy for us to dismiss failures as exaggerations and criticisms as jealousies. It's much too easy for us to ignore the obvious and uncomfortable truth.

Right here and now, we have got to admit to ourselves that blatant irresponsibility is insidiously corroding the potential of a time - honored institution at Carolina.

Right here and now, we have got to draw a circle and say, "This is the truth."

And the truth is this:

Let us not, however, overlook the constructive strides which have been made in recent weeks. The brothers of 02 South Building have made a sincere effort to become a self - regulatory body capable of policing their own activities.

In addition, the brothers have initiated a vigorous retraining program to teach each other to refrain from going verbally berserk at the sight of a newspaper reporter.

Furthermore, the Dean of Men's Office is making a genuine and wholehearted attempt to prevent its members from prowling around in strange fraternity houses at odd hours of the morning.

But the list does not end here. There are numerous other hopeful indications that 02 South Building is valiantly striving to curb its periodic binges of wild abandon and become a useful social force in the academic community.

Every student gathered here tonight should heartily applaud this formidible endeavor and pledge a great deal of time and every possible assistance in the undertaking.

A bright and promising future awaits the Dean of Men's Office. If the present spirit of self - reform continues, there is a strong chance that it will be here for years to come.

LEWIS LIPSITZ

Parting shots is a time of commendation and I would like to commend the Political Science Department.

More particularly, I would like to commend a man who epitomizes all the noblest aspects of staunch academic liberalism. This man is Dr. Lewis Lipsitz.

Lipsitz is one of the most intellectually revered figures in this bright world of collegiate progressivism. This is chiefly because he is the only academician in the Political Science Department who can read to himself without moving his lips.

"But if I keep rubbing your back you'll miss the whole show!"

Letters To The Editor

Major Yesulaitis' Friends Speak Up

Who Is James Dale

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

And who the hell is James Dale?

Is he the same bloke who came running up to me and my date after the concert by the University Symphonic Band Tuesday last and said, "I do not know who you are, but I am going to write to the DTH and I would like your opinion of this evening's concert"? My reply was, "Damn good show," but if my assailant was indeed Dale, he obviously did not deign to use it.

My interlocur said he had played in the band under Dr. Fred several years ago. If he was Dale, why is he no longer in the band? He asks, "Especially since we have so much talent on this campus that is not being used, why will they not play?" Why does he not play if he is so bloody good? Why does he not give his precious time (as the members of the band give theirs) so to elevate the group to the standards he seems to demand?

He complains about the attire of the band. Who cares what the members look like after all is done? Dale was certainly no thing of exquisite beauty when he accosted me after the concert. The important thing is the music. Would he have complained at Duke last year when the BBC Symphony Orchestra, playing on an evening when the temperature in Durham approached 80 degrees, chose to appear in shirt sleeves? (It was snowing that day in London.) I feel sure that Mr. Dale would have donsidered this action an insufferable breach of artistic integrity on the part of the BBC.

Dale notes the band's supposed "great lack of enthusiasm for the music they were playing." Is that so, Mr. Dale? Should the members stand and sway with the "Ellington Portrait?"

Dale refers to the "colorful" selection "Yellowstone Suite" by Klein, and he declares, "The rendition by the band (re) produced the color very well."

And so on ad infinitum ad nausiam.

Dale's letter is far and away the most disgusting piece of comment directed at a major university organization I have ever read. He praised nothing; he failed to comment upon the more important Shostakovich and Ginestera works on the program, which were quite ably performed; and in general he displayed an appalling lack of critical taste and judgment.

John Wallace Lambert,
President,
Alpha Rho of Phi Mu Alpha

(Editor's note—Dale wanted his remarks published as a column, and he was turned down. He submitted it later as a letter to the editor. The letter was not libelous, even though we considered it in poor taste, and according to our policies we were obliged to print it.)

Dale Writes Poison

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

James Dale's letter in Friday's Daily Tar Heel, concerning the recent UNC Band concert, cannot be left unanswered, for it represents a view point of vituperative frustration which seriously maligns the sincere and dedicated members of this organization.

The quality of Dale's criticism ranges from complete inaccuracy to total irrelevance. In the latter category belong such items as performers' and director's clothing, the confusing reference to the role of the soloists, and the sneering analogies involving colors and disease. These have little if anything to do with the musical qualities of a performance. Other criticisms attempt to weigh such subjective qualities as performer "enthusiasm" or "indifference," attributes which could hardly be evaluated by one who is not a member of the group. I can assure Dale that the bandsmen were certainly "enthusiastic" insofar as this term denotes a strong desire to perform accurately and with musical feeling, and to be heard at the best possible advantage, qualities, I might add, which were not at all conspicuous in Dale during his brief tenure in the band's saxophone section early this semester.

Dale's use of strong words and phrases such as "farce," "deplorable," "deteriorated," "shame to be embarrassed," etc., reflect his reaction to the musical qualities of the performance. It is difficult to understand Dale's reactions in this regard. If his musical background were such as could render his judgments definitive, or even competent, then there might be some basis upon which to conduct a meaningful dialogue here. From my own experience of some 15 years as a music student, teacher, and professional performer, let me assure my readers that Mr. Dale's musical judgments stand on shaky ground indeed.

This is not to say that the performance was free from all error; such a condition is most rate in any musical performance (except in today's carefully and deceptively edited recordings). Rather, the concert was a telling illustration of the high level of performance which can be achieved with amateur musicians (the phrase literally meaning, "those who love music").

As to Dale's implied criticism of Band Director John Yesulaitis, and the references to a former director, it may be deduced that Dale is suffering from what one might term "predecessor syndrome." The band is indeed undergoing a re-organization and re-building under its new director. Such a process takes time. More importantly, such a process takes willing and sympathetic participation by present members of the group as well as former members and "old-timers." Many former members still on campus have not given this support; some, like Mr. Dale, have unfortunately become discouraged and soured by the process, for reasons known only to themselves, if that. Everyone who feels that he can make a constructive contribution to the group, and who is motivated by a love for music and a desire to perform, is more than welcome to join us at any time.

Meanwhile, as an antidote to Mr. Dale's poison, let the members of the University community attend, in May, the Sunday afternoon concerts of the UNC Band at the Old Well, and have the satisfaction of forming their own judgments based on direct observation, rather than accept highly questionable second - hand evaluations.

Dale Shows Immaturity

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Two years ago the University Band had a steely precision, a loud, harsh, tense tone, and a predilection for the more dissonant modern compositions that are indeed in keeping with much that characterizes our present society.

Under "Major Y" the band has been able to say there is still some harmony and gentleness left in the world. The costumes for the Tuesday evening concert were in keeping with the current campus trend toward individuality, of which I am sure you are aware. While I agree with your implied suggestion that the appearance of a musical group influences the average audience, anyone who has listened and watched while excellent conductors and musicians rehearse knows that music, primarily an auditory experience, should not in all fairness be judged or reviewed in the light of the group's dress, except possibly as an aside, either pro or con, and then not sarcastically, where do you buy your cyanide, Mr. Dale?

If music is viewed as an artistic endeavor to reflect human culture both past and present, I think we are misleading our audience when we imply that all band music should be played in a single militaristic style.

It is greatly to Yesulaitis' credit that he has given sensitive and careful direction to a varied group of college students, and a few others, who have many other interests and responsibilities, who miss rehearsals because of complex schedules, who sometimes fail to appreciate his own excellent musical perception and who may even mistake his unfailing courtesy for lack of discipline. In my book, courtesy plus great ability are superior discipline to bruskness and great drive.

Any military band director who perceives the human need for grace, flexibility and freedom beneath the disciplinary pressures to which his men are subjected who presumably gave expression to these needs as a military conductor and who still nourishes them both in his students and his audiences deserves strong and courteous support from all who place truth and beauty above protest and destructive criticism.

I am a piano teacher whose students win high ratings in local auditions, an enthusiastic listener to modern music, and a student of its "harmonies," a great admirer of Dr. Fred's ambition, discipline, and expertise; and an equally devoted ally of Major Y's very great musical abliities and background. We need both types of musician at Carolina, and in the world. I agree that the band sounds different, but it is still excellent, and gives pleasure, stimulation, and inspiration to the great majority of its listeners and its members. Maybe you should check to see if your immaturity is showing.

PROGRAM NOTES

SPECIAL: NORTH CAROLINA STATE UNIVERSITY CLARINET CHOIR — NCS-R Curtis Craver, conductor of this woodwind group, explains instrumentation for a clarinet choir and reviews the developments in the history of the clarinet. Noting the variety of moods to be created by clarinet music, Mr. Craver discloses the differences between five types of clarinets — and these differences are demonstrated during the program, featuring performances selected from the works of Hayden, Bach, Debussy, Ravel and Tolchar Evans.

THE RADICAL AMERICANS — NET "Who Teaches Them?" Cameras visit Rampart College in Larkspur, Colorado; Harding College, Searcy, Arkansas; The Free University of New York; a New Left School in Palo Alto, California; and others to provide a view of the schools in this country — both on the radical right and on the radical left. Posing the questions: "Why do they offer these forms of indoctrination to students . . . . . why do they think it essential to teach this?" — the program finds some of the answers during interviews with Robert LeFevre, Dean of Rampart College; Dr. Clifton Ganus, President of Harding College; Dr. George Benson, Head of National Education Program; Allen Krebs, Head of the Free University of New York; and Ed Richer, who describes his frusfrating attempt to found a Free University in a conservative town.

THE FRENCH CHEF—NET "Salades" Tossing French ideas and French dressing into the salad bowl, NET's award - winning French Chef Julia Child prepares "Salade Verte," "Salade d' Endives avec Betteraves," "Salade de Tomates a l'Huile," and "Salade Composee" — all simple to prepare and served fresh.

PERFORMANCE — UNC-CH "Duo - piano Recital: Lillian and James Pruett" Two of the outstanding Chapel Hill pianists perform selections from contemporary composition for piano, including one from the works of Bartok.

FORTY-FIVE YEARS WITH FITZPATRICK — NET "The New Deal" Newsman Raymond P. Brandt joins political cartoonist Daniel Fitzpatrick and series host Joseph Passonneau to review the years of the New Deal, drawing on newsreel clips, on personal reminiscenses and Fitzpatrick's cartoons for the St. Louis Post - Dispatch, published during the era. Reflecting on the urgency and excitement of the period under discussion, the three men describe the character of the New Deal administrators and originators and the enduring effect Roosevelt had on the Presidency and on the nation.

USA: POETRY — NET Robert Duncan and John Wieners, subjects for this program, represent a return of the Spirit of Romance to modern poetry.

USA: ARTISTS — NET "The Sun and Richard Lippold" The work of sculptor Richard Lippold and his unique uses for light are examined during this program which explores the effects of the sun and light in any form as a metaphor for Lippold's work.

LAND OF THEIR OWN — NET "The Fruited Plain" The final program in this series of three depicts the history of the development of agriculture and ranching by late settlers of the West — following closely on the heels of the original pioneers and Indian-fighting homesteaders. The diary of John Sanborn, a well-educated and well - read man, describes the struggle for livelihood and eventual prosperity on the part of this final group of settlers — recording local events as they related to the changing environment in the history of the Early West.

YES IS FOR A VERY YOUNG MAN — NET Gertrude Stein's play is here performed for National Educational Television by the Theatre Company of Boston. The play is concerned with how the German Occupation of France during World War II affected members of a French family. Set in rural Savoy, the scenes of this two - act play are: The Armistice, 1940; The Departure, 1942; The German, 1943; The Return, Three Days Later; and The Liberation, 1944. This dramatization was directed by Greg Harney and produced by WGBH, Boston.

World's Future Depends On Controlling Population

"We have all the tools necessary to manage world population."

"We could start tomorrow and completely control our population.

"But we need to motivate people and people must have the courage from a political point of view to use the tools we have available."

Dr. Charles E. Flowers Jr., UNC obstetrician - gynecologist, reminded a family planning workshop this past week that "reasonable family planning" is a crucial world need.

"The future of the world," he said, "depends on controlling population."

Dr. Flowers explained the advantages and disadvantages of all of the population - managing tools now available.

The rhythm method of birth control has not been effective he said, because of the inability to exactly predict ovulation by females and because of the unpredictability of the life of sperms in the female.

He labeled the diaphragm as "unrealistic and unsuccessful" among lower - class females. In a more motivated group, he said this contraceptive device can be "terrific."

"The pill," he said, "is the outstanding discovery of my era in obstetrics and gynecology."

He explained that new developments have made use of the birth control pill easier for women.

"You don't need any intellect any more," he said.

Nothing can take the press out of Lee-Prest slacks

Not that it's on his mind right now. And it needn't be. Those Lee-Prest Leesures can't help but stay crisp and neat. No matter what you put them through. They have a new permanent press. So the crease stays in. The wrinkles stay out. Permanently. And that's without ironing. No touch-ups, either. They're made from Lee's special blend of 50% polyester and 50% combed cotton. For wash and wear . . . with conviction.

Incidentally, that permanent press is the only change we've made in Leesures. They still have that lean, honest look . . . smart, tailored fit. New Lee-Prest Leesures. Test their permanent press yourself. It isn't necessary, but it's a great way to spend an evening. From $6.00 to $8.00.

Tar Heels Win Big Game Over Tigers, 5-3

Talbott, Carr Slug Homers; Rain Stops Contest In Ninth

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Clemson's hardy baseball fans stayed in the stands during a driving rain in the ninth inning yesterday, but all that their perserverance got them was wet.

Their Tigers couldn't pull off a winning rally, not even big Frank Howard could stop the loudburst, and the visiting North Carolina Tar Heels, well, they grabbed their sixth straight victory, 5-3, to move to a seemingly insurmountable lead in the ACC Baseball race.

Carolina now has an 8-1 league record, and Clemson has fallen farther off the championship pace at 7-4. Any combination of Tar Heel wins and Clemson defeats totaling three 3) would mathmatically eliminate the Tigers from contention.

Talbott, Car Slug

Home runs by Danny Talbott and Charlie Carr in the sixth inning—each with a man on base — overcame a 1-0 Tiger lead and gave Danny Walker (5-1) all the runs he needed for the victory, his fourth in succession. Carr also doubled home the final UNC run in the eighth.

Danny needed help from George McRae when Clemson rallied for two runs in the eighth to pull to within 5-3, and for the second day in a row big George was there to halt an abortive comeback.

Clouds Burst

Here-again, gone-again showers teased the participants and more than 2,000 Tiger-biased fans throughout the game, but the weather finally won in the ninth inning.

The Tigers' fifth pitcher, Charlie Watson (a .400-plus hitter) was batting with two out and a man at first when plate umpire Jack Osborne decided he had had enough. Action was halted, and after about 10 minutes of unending downpour, the game was officially called.

Besides taking away satisfaction on the part of the Tigers that they had gotten a full run, the suspension took the Tar Heels out of a run which they had scored in the top of the inning. Talbott had doubled home Mike McLaughlin, who had walked.

Tigers Take Lead

Walker pitched perfect ball over the front three innings, but Rusty Adkins started the home fourth by lining Danny's second pitch to the wall in left-center for a triple. It was Adkins' sixth three-bagger of the year and the 10th of his career — both school records.

Ellis Dantzler followed with a ground single to right, and Adkins jogged across the plate as Clemson fans screamed for the kill.

But Walker mowed down the third, fourth and fifth-place hitters in succession to short-circuit the inning.

Heels Bid

Carolina made its first strong bid in the fifth when Charlie Carr and Rod Thompson opened with singles. But Charlie Thomas bunted into third baseman Larry Cowart's glove on an attempted sacrifice, and Adkins made a great play on Walker's grounder behind second to force Thompson. Then, with two out and Carr straining down the line from third, Bob Hume lofted a fly to center for the inning-ending putout.

Bombs Fall

The Heels were for real in the sixth, though, as McLaughlin socked a ground-rule double into the hedge down the left field line, and Talbott followed with his second home run of the year deep over the 330-foot mark in left.

Earl Cohen relieved for the Tigers, and Bob Bonczek promptly beat out an infield hit. John Shaw sacrificed him to second, but it wasn't necessary as Charlie Carr walloped his second round-tripper through practically the same channel that Talbott had cleared moments earlier.

Rod Thompson then whacked his second single to knock out Cohen, but Nelson Gibbon came in to retire the side with no more runs scoring.

Carr Hits Again

Carolina added its final run (except the disallowed one in the ninth) in the eighth when Bonczek walked, moved to second on Shaw's infield out (another fine play by Adkins) and crossed the plate on Carr's double to center.

Clemson made its final bid in the last of the eighth, knocking Walker from the box. It was the first time in his college career that Walker had not had his way completely against the Tigers.

Then came the rain in the ninth.

Voted 'Best Runner'

Mazza Shines In Blue-White Game

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

The Tar Heels grid team uncovered a fine runner in yesterday's spring game, but Coach Jim Hickey will certainly welcome the return to action in the fall of passers Danny Talbott and Jeff Beaver.

The runner is sophomore-to-be Mark Mazza, voted the outstanding back in the game. The 6-foot, 216-pounder rolled up 67 yards in 12 carries for the victorious — 14-6 — Blue team. He was a standout, ripping off five and six yards on virtually every carry.

Talbott, last year's ACC Player of the Year, was in Clemson with the Tar Heel baseball team. (He hit a two-run homer.) Beaver was supposed to quarterback the Blue team, but he came down with mononucleosis Thursday night

Rookie Quarterbacks

Tim Karrs, a 1966 junior, directed the Blue offense, while sophomores - to - be Jeff Carter and Gayle Bomar quarterbacked the Whites. Their passing left something to be desired. Karrs completed only four of 22 for 60 yards and had three passes intercepted Bomar with four for 14 and 46 yards and Carter was one for six for 16 yards. The Blue defense also picked off three passes, one from Bomar and two from Carter

Two of the interceptions were turned into scores. The Whites got on the scoreboard first when Tom Buskey, a rising sophomore end, picked off one of Karrs' passes near the sideline and ran 23 yards untouched into the Blue endzone

The score came with 6:40 left in the half. Bill Dodson, who kicked extra points for both teams, was wide to the left with the boot; and the score remained 6-0.

The half ended that way, and the third quarter was scoreless. The Blue team, though, tied the count on the first play of the fourth period and went ahead when Dodson made the conversion kick good

Blue Score

A fumbled punt set the stage for the Blue tally. Billy Warren kicked from the Blue 31. The ball bounded off the fingertips of Bud Phillips and Dave Riggs recovered for the Blues on the White 33.

Nine plays later, the Blues had a touchdown. Riggs carried the ball to the 30. Mazza took a pitchout and cracked to the 26. Karrs kept to the 23, just short of a first down. Tom Lampman dove for the first down at the 20, then got a yard to the 19.

Then came the big play of the scoring drive. Mazza took a pitch and took off around right end for 12 big yards and a first down at the seven. Lampman carried twice to put the ball just short of the goal. Karrs then took it in on a sneak. Dodson's kick made it 7-6.

The Blues got their other score midway in the fourth quarter. With the ball on his own 20, Bomar dropped back to pass. He threw over the middle into the arms of Blue defensive back Jack Davenport on the 23 Davenport cut to his left and went all the way for the score. Dodson hit the conversion again to wind up the day's scoring Statistically, the game was all Blue. The Blue team rolled up 263 yards of total offense to the White team's 105 The Blue defense kept the White's bottled up throughout the game, allowing only two penetrations of Blue territory The White team got as far as the Blue 31 in the second quarter, but Tom Rendo — named the game's top lineman — dropped Bomar back at the 40. The Whites punted and Buskey's interception came on the next series.

Buskey Intercepts

With the Blue team backed up on its own 15, Tim Karrs dropped back to pass. He tossed the ball out in the right flat, but there was no Blue jersey to catch it. The man on the receiving end was White team defensive end Tom Buskey, who picked the ball off on the 27

There was little in front of Buskey but white stripes and green grass and he took the ball in for the first score of the game. At that point, the scoreboard clock read 6:40 left in the half. Bill Dodson's try for the extra point was wide to the left and the score remained 6-0.

The White team had to work hard to protect its lead though. The Blues put the ball in play at their 30 and took it all the way down to the White 15 before the Whites stiffened on defense. Precious time — the time factor — only 1:30 remained when the Blues reached the 15 — Karrs had to go to the air, and four straight passes were incomplete.

Final Drive

Again Karrs went the aerial route and again the White defense was too tough. After a rollout run netted one yard, Karrs had two passes blocked by White linemen On fourth down, Buskey put on a strong rush, forcing the Blue quarterback to rush his throw, which fell incomplete. This time the Whites managed to run out the clock

The Blues made three other serious threats without scoring. In the first quarter, Riggs put the Blues in position by returning a punt from his own 47 to the White 46 After Mazza carried for five yards, Karrs scooted to the 26. The drive bogged down on the 17

An interception by Jim Fortune had the Blues back in business a few plays later at the Blue 49. Mazza, aided by Riggs, moved the ball to the White 15, but Riggs' fumble ended the march

Niel Rogers gave the Blues a golden opportunity early in the third quarter when he intercepted a pass and brought the ball all the way down to the ball all the way down to tough White defense refused to give in, though, and took the ball away at the 12

Hickey Compliments Defense

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

"I think our defense played well," Coach Jim Hickey said after yesterday's spring game. He had just seen his first team — the Blue unit — come away with a hard-fought 14-6 victory. The defense has been good all spring, he added.

The Blues, Hickey explained, were the first-team offensive and defensive players. The White were everybody else. He pointed out, however, that several important players were missing, though.

Danny Talbott, Charlie Carr and Bob Hume were playing baseball. Lee Davis had a leg operation. Star freshman lineman Mike Smith missed the entire spring because of an operation. Jeff Beaver had mononeuclesosi. Hickey said that even Gayle Bomar had had a sprained ankle — and was a defensive player besides — but played offense because of the shortage of quarterbacks.

When asked what he would like to see in a spring game, Hickey replied, "I'd like to have seen about a 14-0 or 21-0 game with a good strong running attacks." He naturally wanted to see the Blue on top.

The coach admitted he was a little disappointed in the offense.

Hickey mentioned several rising sophomores who had been impressive in spring drills. In addition to Mazza and Rendo, he pointed out tackles Mike Richey and Terry Rowe and center Chip Bradley. He said he expects either Richey or Rowe to start at offensive tackle along with Tom Ingle. Bradley, he said, is currently leading the race to start at center.

Freshman sensation Dick Wesolowski was hurt in the second quarter and did not return to the game. Hickey revealed that the big halfback had hurt his ribs on the last day of practice before the spring break. When he was tackled yesterday, Wesolowski fell on the ball and hurt the ribs again. Hickey said that the injury was not serious.

Two rising sophomores, Mark Mazza and Tom Renedo, were chosen as outstanding back and lineman of the game. Hickey said Mazza looks like a starter for the fall. Renedo will play defensive tackle. "We think he's had a fine spring," the Tar Heel Coach said of the young lineman.

Petty Leads Big Chrysler Corp. Sweep At Darlington

Petty, 28-year-old father of three, made it look easy as he finished more than three laps ahead of another veteran Plymouth driver, Paul Goldsmith of Munster, Ind.

His average speed for the 291 laps around the mile and three-eighths oval was 131.585 miles per hour, a record for this event. The old mark of 130.013 m.p.h. was set by Fred Lorenzen in 1964 when the race was run at 300 miles.

Petty picked up $12,000 for his second major victory of the season, as about 18,000, watched under overcast skies that produced an occasional sprinkle of rain.

The 195-pound, 6-3 son of a former great stock car driver won the rich Daytona 500 in in February.

Finishing third behind Goldsmith, who won $6,570, was David Pearson, driving a 1965 Dodge, for $4,080. Fourth was G. C. Spencer in a 1965 Plymouth, and fifth was Bunkie Blackburn in a 1965 Dodge.

For Petty, his runaway victory ended six years of frustration at 16-year-old Darlington, first of all super stock car racing tracks. He had never won here, and on two occasions saw victory go down the drain while leading the less than 10 laps to go.

Weeks News In Review

Jubilee (Rain) Dominate Carolina News

Jubilee was the focal point of the news this week, and the weather was the focal point of Jubilee.

Friday night's festivities featuring The Bitter End Singers was forced inside Carmichael Auditorium to escape the deluge of a three - day rain. Only 5,500 hearty souls ventured out to the performance.

The sun shone bright Saturday afternoon but a wet ground kept 7,200 people inside Carmichael to hear Jay and the Americans and the trio of David, della Rosa and Brooks.

A decision had not been reached at the DTH deadline last night as to the location of today's 3 p.m. show by Charlie Byrd.

State Employs Law Firm

Governor Dan K. Moore announced Wednesday that the law firm of Joyner and Howison of Raleigh has been retained to prepare a defense for the state in the student suit against the Speaker Ban Law.

Moore said the private firm was contracted because the Attorney General's office "is not efficient enough to handle all cases involving the state. He does not have a large enough staff."

The governor predicted that an answer to the complaint will be filed "within the next two weeks."

Fleece Taps Eighteen

Eighteen outstanding UNC undergraduates were tapped into The Order of the Golden Fleece Monday night. Receiving "the highest honor that can come to a Carolina student" were Hugh Blackwell, Lindsey Freeman, Bill Graham, John Harmon, Bob Hunter.

William C. Medford, University Trustee was tapped as an honorary member.

Hodges Named AG

Student Body President Bob Powell's appointment of Frank Hodges as attorney general barely got the approval of Student Legislature Thursday night (25-23) in a vote that saw only two legislators deviate from party lines.

University Party legislators Tom Cannon, who abstained, and George Irsherwood, who voted to approve the appointment, tilted the scales.

Earlier in the week the appointment was reported out of the Ways and Means Committee unfavorably after committee chairman Steve Salimony broke a tie vote. He and the three UP members disapproved the appointment; the three SP members approved.

Valkyrie Sing Spotlighted

Alpha Delta Pi Sorority captured the prize in the large group sing division with a medley which included such sumbers as "Wild Irish Rose" and "Sweet Molly Malone."

The "Thirsty Thirteen" St. Anthony's Hall took the men's division with the performance of a series of folk songs.

Delta Delta Delta sorority presented the best skit, quibbling over a marriage with or without a "Bicycle Built for Two," and finishing up "Stomping through the Tulips."

Women Honored

Penny Scovil was presented the Irene F. Lee Award for the most outstanding senior woman at the Valkyrie Sing Monday night. Claiming a 2.67 scholastic average, she has been a member of the Women's Residence Council for three years, has served as chairman of the council this year, is a representative to the School of Nursing House Council and served as President of Nurses Residence Hall last year.

Ellen Allen was chosen Outstanding Senior Dormitory Woman of 1966 at a tea given Sunday afternoon in the Morehead Planetarium.

She has served as president and house council member of Spencer hall, and has been active in Student Legislature, Orientation Committee (Freshman Women's Coordinator), Women's Residence Council, Publications Board, National Merit Scholarship Committee, University Party, Valkyries and Order of the Old Well.

Pi Beta Phi received the trophy for the top academic ranking of a sorority with a 2.7741, and Nurses Hall was honored for maintaining the highest scholastic average of the women's residence halls.

Dorm On The Move

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson announced Tuesday that he had instructed planners of James K. Polk Residence Hall to seek a new site to locate the 1,000 - man dormitory.

Previously, it had been announced that the structure would be built behind Kenan Stadium.

Sitterson rejected the site adjacent to Kenan Stadium "unless and until all other possible locations have been fully explored." He also said there will be a reappraisal of the height and room size of the building. Originally it was announced that Polk Hall was to tower 21 stories and house two - man rooms of 140 square feet.

Communist Speaks

Cvijeto Job, press and cultural attached to the Yugoslavian Embassy in Washington, D. C., spoke to about 40 faculty members here Wednesday night.

He was the first communist diplomat to speak on this campus since the signing of the Speaker Ban Law.

The gist of his speech was that the state really is withering away under Yugoslavian Communism — just like Karl Marx said it should.

Hardison Cited by Time

English Professor O. B. Hardison has been selected by Time Magazine as one of the 10 best college professors in the country and may be featured in a cover story in the magazine in two weeks.

Hardison, 37, has taught here since the summer of 1957. He received his bachelor's degree here in 1949 and his master's here in 1950. He was awarded his doctoral degree at the University of Wisconsin in 1956.

He published several books, short works and poems.

University Presented $5 Million Kenan Gift

By RON SHINN
DTH News Editor

Twenty-five new professorships—at a cost of $5 million—were established here yesterday by the William R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust.

Gov. Dan K. Moore accepted a $1 million check and a promise of $4 million more from the trust in the faculty lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

An additional million dollars will be given to the University every January until 1970, when the $5 million figure will be reached.

The new professorships bring to 50 the number of professorships established by the Kenan family. Mrs. Mary Lily Kenan Flagler Bingham established the 25 original ones in 1917 as a memorial to her father and two uncles, all Carolina alumni.

In accepting the gift as chairman of the Board of Trustees, Moore said "It is a great day for the state of North Carolina and for the University of North Carolina when a native son enriches his state to posterity with such a gift."

The grant will enable UN to support 25 William R. Kenan, Jr. Professors on the faculty salary plan.

The professorships will be created in the sciences, social sciences, humanities, fine arts and in the professional schools.

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, in accepting the gift for the University, said this gift will enable the University to attract 25 outstanding professors, awarded with criteria which Kenan was known to have considered important.

"This gift, plus the regulary salary provided by the state, will be competitive with the most attractive professorships in the academic world.

"I do not think it too much to say that by reason of this gift, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill will enter a new and more fruitful period in its history — a period in which it will be challenged to join the leadership of the University world in pointing the way to intellectual advancement and extending the findings of scholarship to the greater benefit of this state, nation and world," Sitterson said.

Under present salary rates, a Kenan professor's salary would range from $23,000 to $28,000 per pear. The gift would provide an annual supplement of $8,000 for each of the 25 Kenan professors.

The presentation of the check brought a standing ovation from the room packed with deans, heads of departments and other University officials — most of whom did not know about the gift beforehand.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday met last fall to discuss a gift of "Randleigh," an experimental farm in Lockport, N. Y., to North Carolina State University.

Morrissey Campaign Nets Pulitzer Prize For Globe

From The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Pulitzer Prizes for 1966 were presented yesterday by the trustees of Columbia University in the 50th anniversary of the coveted awards.

The Boston Globe won the Pulitzer Meritorious Public Service Award yesterday for a campaign to prevent confirmation of Boston Municipal Judge Francis X. Morrissey to the Federal bench. Morrissey eventually withdrew as a nominee.

Haynes Johnson of the Washington Evening Star received a Pulitzer Prize for National Reporting, following in the footsteps of his father, Malcolm Johnson, who won a reporting prize in 1949 with the old New York Sun. The only other father - son winners in the history of the awards were cartoonists — the late Clifford M. Beryman and his son, James T. Berryman. Both also were with the Washington Star.

The 1966 Pulitzer Prize for International Reporting went to Peter Arnett of the Associated Press for his dispatches from Viet Nam. It was the third successive award to the news service for coverage of the Asian conflict.

Pulitzer Prizes were first awarded in 1917. They were established in the will of the late Joseph Pulitizer, founder of the St. Louis Post - Dispatch and publisher of the old New York World. He died in 1911.

Local Reporting General — the staff of the Los Angeles Times for its coverage of the Watts riots of last August. The Newspaper was lauded for its coverage of every angle while the rioting was going on, and for a follow - up series of seven articles.

Local Reporting Special — John A. Frasca of the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune, for his investigation and reporting of two robberies that resulted in the free ing of an innocent man. The Builty man game imself up on the basis of Frasca's stories.

Editorial Writing — Robert Lasch of the St. Louis Post-Editorial Writing in 1965. One example cited was "The Containment of Ideas," concerning American policy in Viet Nam.

Cartoons — Don Wright of the Miami News, for work exemplified by his cartoon "You Mean You Were Bluffing?" showing two battered survivors of a nuclear war.

Schlesinger Gets Biography Honors

NEW YORK (AP) — The 1966 Pulitzer Prize for Fiction was awarded yesterday to "The Collected Stories of Katherine Anne Porter."

There was no drama award this year.

Perry Miller won the History Award for "The Life of the Mind in America: From the Revolution to the Civil War."

"A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House" by Arthur M. Schlesinger won the Publitzer Biography Award.

Richard Eberhart won the Poetry Prize for "Selected Poems (1930-1965)."

The general nonfiction award was given to Edwin Way Teale for "Wandering Through Winter."

Katherine Anne Porter, the 75-year-old novelist and short story writer, included stories spanning her long career in the collection that won the Fiction Award.

Her most recent major work was "Ship of Fools," published in 1962. Miss Porter has received two Guggenheim Fellowships and a Ford Foundation grant.

The history winner was unfinished when its author died in 1963. His wife helped finish it and it was published posthumously last summer.

Schlsinger's award for "A Thousand Days" was his second Pulitzer Prize. He won the History Award in 1946 for "The Age of Jackson."

"A Thousand Days" is partially a personal memoir by Schlesinger, who was special assistant to the late President John F. Kennedy for three years.

"Wandering Through Winter," that won the general nonfiction award for Teale, is the final volume in a 15-year project of chronicling the natural history of the four seasons in America.

Bassett's "Variations for Orchestra" was first performed in the United States by Eugene Ormandy and the Philadelphia Orchestra on Oct. 22, 1965, in Philadelphia.

Bassett, professor of music at the University of Michigan, said he considers the variations "one of the most deeply motivated musical statements I have made."

Harry Golden Explains "God Is Dead" Movement

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Harry Golden, the Jewish humorist and social commentator, says the "God is Dead" movement be related to Southern Protestant guilt about segregation.

"It's hardly coincidental that "God Is Dead" is a Protestant movement," Golden told some 40 persons Sunday at a talk sponsored by the Wesley Foundation and Hillel Foundation.

Protestants in the South "haven't yet begun to pay the price for backing away from a great moral revolution," he said, referring to civil rights.

Golden said the white Protestant churches, rather than participating in the integration movement, abdicated their responsibilities to courts, politicians, labor unions and other religions.

He predicted Rev. Martin Luther King might be primarily remembered not as an integration leader but as someone "using Chrsitianity as an instrument of justice."

During the talk, which mainly concerned civil rights, Golden said Negroes "didn't invent civil disobedience. I've seen white Anglo - Saxon ladies chain themselves to a fire hydrant . . . fighting for women's suffrage . . . freedom rides . . . ladies dragged down the gutter. This was in the true tradition of civil disobedience."

Jews, he declared, did not agitate like the Negroes for civil rights because their European origin permitted them to be assimilated into American society. Also, he said, they were too busy figting for 8 - hour days, pension plans, Social Security and similar legislation to be concerned mainly with their own problems.

Golden, author of a book on J. F. Kennedy's relationship with the Negroes, said the late president had a naive, moralistic attitude toward civil rights which was responsible for his interest in integration.

He said Kennedy frequently used in conversations with Gov. George Wallace of Alabama and other segregationists phrases like: "But it's wrong George."

He said A. Phillip Randolph, Negro head of the Pullman Porter's Union, asked Roosevelt to sign a "fair employment" measure for war industries or risk a march on Washington; Roosevelt yielded.

Eisenhower? "Randolph wouldn't even get near him."

But, Golden said, when Randolph told Kennedy he was planning a march, the President exclaimed: "Great idea, Phil, great idea! Will you have any trouble raising money?"

Departing from his main topic, Golden denounced cartoonist Al Capp's speaker ban stand. "The Jewish far rightist," Golden said, "is about as unconvincing as a Negro anti-Semite." He also blasted "the anti - communist racket" of the John Birch Society and other ultra - conservative groups.

The short, stocky, curly-haired humorist, famous for his books "Only in America" and "You're Entitled," said he has received honorary degrees from one Methodist, two Catholic and one Baptsit colleges. "But all I get from the Jews is a pledge card — 'Please increase by ten per cent.' "

Often introduced as "The Jewish Mark Twain," Golden is the editor of The Carolina Israelite and has given talks throughout the United States. "I even spoke to the D.A.R. in Charlotte," he said. "To them I delivered a lecture on the flouridation of water."

Profits from sales of tickets to the audience at the Chapel Hill talk will go to the Carolina Negro Voter Registration Fund.

Cheerleaders Choose Six For Group

Newly elected head cheerleader Dick Starnes thinks his biggest challenge will be the apathy of the student body.

To combat the apathy, he plans to work closely with the coaches in doing things they think will help the teams.

Seven girls and six boys have been selected to help Starnes. They are Jane Dankworth, Sharon Derrick, Frances Dayvault, Judy Fleming, Winborne Shaffer, Ramona Taylor, Jerry Houle, Ray Lyles, Jimmy Womack, Larry Roadman, Jack Betts and Pete Haynsworth. Alternates are Linda Sieber, Carolyn Barton, Dave Bennett and Doug Soles.

Starnes said he is considering many gimmicks which he thinks will build spirit.

He hopes a big pep rally in downtown Chapel Hill will be possible before the first home football game. He also plans to have uniformed cheerleaders back all sports, not just football and basketball.

Starnes plans to work closer with the pep band. He said he was considering getting them some means of transportation such as an old fire engine.

Balloting Today

Six states will hold primary elections today. The balloting is not expected to show any opinion trend on national issues.

Among today's candidates is Mrs. Laureen (George C.) Wallace, who'd like to keep Alabama's governorship in the family, even if her husband, the present governor, can't run again.

The states and principle offices involved in today's primaries are:

ALABAMA — Governor, senator and eight representatives to Congress.

FLORIDA — Governor and 12 representatives.

INDIANA —Eleven representatives.

NEW MEXICO — Governor and two representatives.

OHIO — Governor and 24 representatives.

OKLAHOMA — Governor, senator and six representatives.

Festival Chairmen

Interviews for committee heads to work on the 1967 Fine Arts Festival will be held May 10-13. Interested students are urged to sign up for appointments this week at the GM information desk.

Society Admits 18

Sigma Theta Tau, a national honor society f nursing, has admitted these nurses or nursing students during the year 1965-66:

Elaine Morrison Whitehurst, Ilene Kay Allen, Mary Margaret Bowshu, Rebecca Mae Hallond, Lyle Marie Fisher, Mary V. Cheek, Margaret Shetland.

Also, Georgia Lewis, Leith Merrow, Carolyn Anne Mitchell, Elizabeth Moore and Pamela Lynn Scheel.

Sigma Theta Tau has 22 chapters in the United States. The UNC chapter was begun in 1962.

Models

Interviews for models for the fashion magazine Mademoiselle will be held from 4-6 on Wednesday, May 4, in Gerrard Hall.

Particularly urged to come are girls between five feet, five inches and five feet, ten inches in height. The girls should be thin and preferably have long straight hair.

All interested in being interviewed must sign up beforehand at the Information Desk in GM.

Selections for the magazine will be made by Nonnie Moore, sportswear editor, and photographer George Barkentin.

State Leaders To Meet Here

More than a score of experts with their feet on the ground and their eyes on the future will spend two days here this week painting the face of North Carolina in the space age.

Attending the Thursday and Friday session will be some 200 state leaders in health, business, education and government.

Speakers at the Ninth Annual North Carolina Planning Conference will aim their remarks at current problems in urban, residential, rural and industrial planning while others will stress the importance of environmental health factors.

A highlight of the two - day meet will be a glimpse at America's most exciting "instant city." Speaking Friday morning on "Columbia New Town: A Glimpse in the Future," William E. Finley will talk about one of the nation's most ambitious development projects, an entire 14,000 - acre city being constructed with private capital at a cost of $2 billion. It will be located between Baltimore and Washington, D. C.

Finley is vice president, Community Research and Development, Baltimore, Md. He is former director of the National Capital Planning Commission, Washington, D. C.

The keynoted address will be delivered Thursday morning by Carl G. Johnson on "The Problems and Prospects of Environmental Health Planning."

Jubilee 'Speakers' Take Big Cash

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Financial allocations for the spring's two campus extravaganzas — Symposium and Jubilee — were rleased yesterday to the DTH.

Some $12,500 was spent for Jubilee, according to Graham Memorial Director Howard Henry. $11,450 of this was allocated for the entertainers and the rest for publicity, equipment and other expenses.

The most expensive entertainer was Al Hirt, who received $5,000 for his two-hour performance Saturday night in Carmicahel Auditorium. He would have received $8,000, Henry said, if he hadn't presented a performance that afternoon at Duke.

Henry added that the fees paid the performers are not really important, since the quality of the entertainment is not correlated with the amount of money given the entertainer.

He noted that singers David, della Rosa and Brooks, who recieved only $600 for their 45-minute set on Saturday afternoon, were the "sleeper" of Jubilee. The audience appreciated them more than the GMAB predicted, Henry said.

Jay and the Americans, the "popular" singing group, were the second highest paid entertainers for the weekend. They were paid $2500 for their hour-long performance Saturday afternoon.

The Bitter End Singers, who "Keynoted" the Jubilee program Friday night, charged $1750 for their concert. Charlie Bryd, who thrilled the Polk Place crowd on Sunday afternoon with his guitar playing, was paid $1600.

GMAB is already starting to consider entertainers for next year's Jubilee, Henry said. He encouraged students with ideas for performers to contact him at the GMAB.

Henry added that some of the "serious" performers for next year's GM series have been signed. These include orchestras, classical musicians and ballet companies.

The Carolina Symposium spent $6,800 of its $14,000 budget on honorariums for speakers, according to vice - chairman David Lane. Not including reimbursements for expenses, economist John Kenneth Galbraith was the most costly speaker, having been paid $2,000.

Galbraith was paid about $22 a minute for his one and one-half hour speech and Hirt was paid about $41 per minute for his performance.

STUDENTS THRONG to hear performers this Jubilee in numbers far greater than those that attended the Symposium the week before. But then again, the performers were paid more. — DTH photo by Jock Lauterer.

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

A Well-Made Step

The occasion was the first installment of what are planned to be weekly meetings of the dean, student leaders in the executive, legislative and judicial branches of Student Government and the heads of the Men's and Women's Residence Councils and the Greek system.

The idea for the meeting was a joint effort by Dean Long and Student Body President Bob Powell. The affair was very informal and "completely off the record." And, as might be expected, no earth-shaking decisions came out of this first session.

But this was definitely a good first step toward ironing out many of the problems of the University community on which we have all too often seen the administration take its stand and Student Government take an opposite position, leaving the whole matter unsolved and the air polluted with ill feelings between the two groups.

The "blank check" we referred to was just that—a blank check. Or, we should say, it was blank on the money side. But on the reverse side was scrawled a list of problems with which the group will be concerning itself this spring and all of next year—things such as the parking problem, the student judiciary, the residence college system and the fraternity system.

Certainly all these areas possess an abundance of rough edges. These rough edges can be eliminated only through a cooporative effort on the parts of the administration and the students concerned.

The Daily Tar Heel tends to be quite critical of Student Government and of the administration from time to time. This is because there are always situations that could bear remedy. It is indeed, a rare occasion when the hard-hearted press sees fit to laud both groups in one sitting.

But today we do just that. And we hope these persons will devlote themselves to developing this first step into a dead-ahead sprint for the good of the whole University.

Students Can Vote

In the past days we have had calls and letters from several students who have complained that they are being denied the right to vote. One student sent us a clipping from last week's News of Orange County. Encircled was a paragraph which we feel is probably at the base of the problem. It read:

"University students are qualified to vote in Orange County if they satisfy the State and precinct residence requirements; if they change or have already changed their registration to an Orange County precinct; and if they consider their residence in Orange County to be permanent — that is, if they have no specific plans to leave the County within the immediate future."

The complaining students said they realized that the county could not open its polling places to every 21-year-old person who spends nine months in Chapel Hill. But they were concerned about married students — especially graduate students — many of whom live here for several years, pay taxes here, register their automobiles here, some have their children in school here, but cannot vote because they cannot affirm that they have no plans to leave the county within the foreseeable future.

We talked with County Election Board member and Secretary James Prothro about this, and he explained that students can, indeed, vote here, although in past years many have been denied this privilege.

The clause concerning "plans to leave the county in the immediate future" is aimed at students who are in residence here during the school year, but who maintain their registration privileges somewhere else.

Prothro said this clause does not apply to students who, by having established residence in Orange County, have forfeited the right to vote in their former home precinct.

"If you wanted to interpret the rule that way," Prothro said, "you could refuse voting privileges to a 35-year-old Orange County resident who has a cottage in Florida and plans to go there when he retires at 65, simply because his residence isn't permanent until death."

So, if you meet the residence requirement here and — to employ a different interpretation of permanance — if by establishing residence in this county you have lost your voting privileges in another precinct, you can vote here.

Voter registration will be held the next two Saturdays from 9 a.m. until sunset at precinct polling places. We urge all eligible students to visit their local registrars—in your hearts you know they're right.

Bombing Civilians Immoral

On April 26, 1937, exactly twenty - nine years ago today, German planes flew over the Basque town of Guernica dropping incendiary bombs and high explosives. 1,654 men, women, and children were killed and 889 others were wounded out of a population of 7,0000.

We do not mention this just to drag up old history. Instead we hope that this will serve as a reminder that the practice f bombing civilian populations is a relatively new one, less than thirty years old. It was during the Spanish civil war that the fascists and their German allies introduced this method of modern warfare. The bombing of Guernica was soon followed by air strikes at Madrid and other strongholds of the Loyalists.

Most of the world cried out at the slaughter of the people of Guernica. Such bombings were considered highly inhuman and Picasso's painting caught much of the outrage that was shared by most civilized people. But they soon got used to such bombings. Nazi bombings of London were followed by the saturation bombings of German and Japanese cities by the Allies, culminating in the mass slaughter of the people of Dresden. Soon after that the idea of the annihilation of whole cities and countries by the use of nuclear weapons was meekly accepted.

We mentioned Guernica as a reminder that we have become cold hearted with regard to "the necessities of war." Today the United States is carrying on extensive bombings of civilian populations in South Viet Nam. This is accepted, along with the ruining of crops in Viet Cong - controlled areas, as the necessities of war.

Bombing civilian areas has never won any war. Military experts tell us that Hitler's worst mistake was the bombing of London. It drew off his strength from where it should have been focused and it strengthened the will of the British people. The bombings of Dresden did not add materially to the Allied victory over the Nazis. Arguments will go on forever as to wehther the bombing of Hiroshima was necessary to end the war quickly, but certainly America would have won the war anyway. The bombing of Nagasaki in retrospect also seems needless. In a conventional war, the arguments for the "necessity" of such methods are highly dubious.

Friendly populations have never been the victims of bombings. Thus, French cities under German control were not subjected to repeated bombings, whereas German cities like Hamburg and Dresden were. Guernica was a stronghold of antifascist opinion. Perhaps the bombings of peasant villages in the sections of South Viet Nam controlled by the Viet Cong show us what kind of war our government is waging.

We are fooling ourselves if we think that the Vietnamese respond to American bombings of their villages in a different manner from the way the British responded in World War II. It is ridiculous to think that a Vietnamese peasant will be kindly disposed towards America after he has seen his village and perhaps his family destroyed by American bombs. They are, after all, people like the rest of us.

Perhaps remembering the original horror and revulsion that was felt in 1937 after the bombing of Guernica will remind us that the bombing of civilians is a hideous and immoral practice of eliminating helpless and innocent people whose only crime is living in a war zone.

Rights Leaders Seek Aid For Watts Negroes

Civil rights leader James Farmer reports that the Negroes of Watts, Calif., are becoming "increasingly angry" because white labor is repairing buildings damaged in the recent racial trouble there.

To me, the situation seems very serious if Farmer's remarks are correct.

Knowing the Watts district has long been plagued by unemployment, the Poverty Program should at least let the Negroes rebuild the structures they so valiantly vandalized; otherwise, the riots will have been n vain.

You've got to admit it takes a lot of guts to dodge police bullets, beat up shopkeepers, terrorize the whites of nearby neighborhoods and throw rocks at automobiles. Enough guts, in fact, for the rioters to be repaid by being hired to repair the damages structures.

But what's passed is past. Now, one must look to the future; one must consider ways of avoiding similar trouble, and in doing to, must admit that the Negroes themselves are partially to be blame.

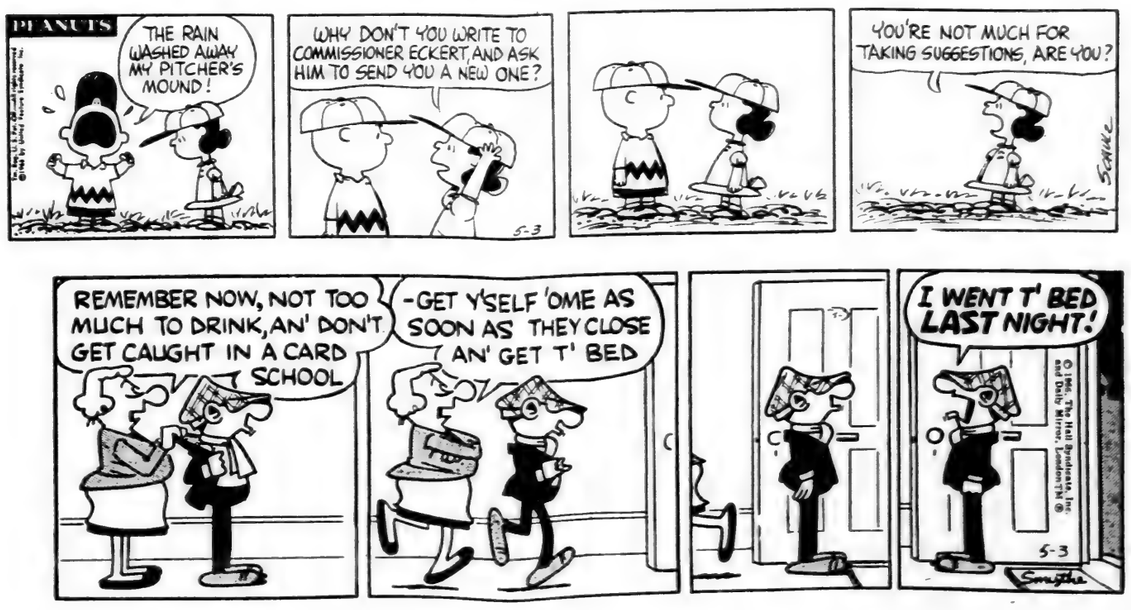
For instance, if they'd been good, responsible citizens and peacefully checked whether the rebuilding crews would be thoroughly integrated, they might have learned that most of the workers repairing the riot - damaged structures would be white.

Then, the Negroes might take the mater to the Civil Rights Commission.

This would also mean a few trips to the White House, but eventually, LBJ, mindful of the Negro vote in forthcoming elections, would yield to their demands and solemnly promise them they could riot in good conscience, knowing full well that after the bloodshed, the Job Corps would step in to establish completely integrated rebuilding squads.

So the Negroes would begin their rioting — until they would again protest to the Commission.

They'd of course insist that the riots weren't an educational experience unless whites could be bussed in from the other part of town.



The Student Speaks

Hays Criticizes Wilson's SL Attack On Appointee

Editor's note — These remarks were submitted to the DTH by former Elections Board chairman Arthur Hays. They deal with last Thursday's legislative session.)

By ARTHUR HAYS

Last Thursday night, I was a helpless witness to a disgusting display of insinuations and character assassination by a supposed "public servant" of the student body.

The occasion was the public trial before the Student Legislature of one, Douglas McKeown, presidential appointee as chairman of the Elections Board. The prosecution was none other than that esteemed jurist, Rep. Ed Wilson, University Party floor leader. The defense was denied the right to speak.

I had suggested McKeown's name to President Powell because as chairman of the Elections Board this spring I had found McKeown to be the most dependable and hardest working member of the Elections Board. I had observed his understanding of the basic mechanics of the election process and his fairness to everyone.

The announcement of his appointment two weeks ago heralded the beinning of what now appears to have been a calculated campaign of rumor that, as rumors do, got worse in the telling and re - telling. These rumors centered around the complications which arose in the counting of the Ehringhaus legislative ballots. Each of these rumors which I have heard has been false and unfounded in fact. Essentialy they impugn the trustworthiness of McKeown.

But what finally convinced Wilson of the duplicity of McKeown was that McKeown testified before the Constitional Council as to facts which indicated that the Ehringhaus ballots had been tempered and a re election was in order. It did not matter that the chairman of that court had asked McKeown to so appear and testify. Since the University Party did not want a re-election in Ehringhaus, McKeown's appearance confirmed the worst imaginings of Rep. Wilson and others in his party.

I appeared on behalf of the University Party in the Ehringhaus election appeal. I did not, and do not, question the truthfulness of McKeown's testimony. He and I were in agreement as to the facts. We merely disagreed as to the conclusions to be drawn from those facts. Whereas he felt the ballots had been tampered, therefore justifying a re - election, I felt there was only a possiblity of tampering which I felt did not meet the standard necessary to invalidate the original election.

But Wilson seized upon this honest disagreement as proof of McKeown's "partisanship". Over and over it was repeated to individuals, to the UP caucus, to the Student Legislature, that Doug had been "disrespectful" to me by disagreeing with me. My only comment to this is that I am perfectly able to defend myself without the solicitations of the esteemed Rep. Wilson. In this particular case I saw no offense and I took none.

As the rumors continued to circulate, I began to expect the very worst. I was not disappointed.

Last Wednesday, McKeown and I sat for four hours waiting to testify on his appointment before the UP controlled Ways and Means Committee of Student Legislature. The committee decided not to hear testimony and reported out McKeown's appointment favorably.

Things were going just a little too smoothly so I attended Student Legislature Thursday night. At that session Wilson moved to delete McKeown's name from the resolution of approval of several presidential appointments.

A motion was made by Steve Hockfield to allow me to speak as to the qualifications of McKeown and to refute the rumors that had been circulated about him. Wilson said he didn't think this was "necessary" and the UP voted against the motion in a bloc.

Wilson then spoke from the rostrum repeating all the accusations and insinuations against McKeown in even more vague terms than the rumors which had circulated. Returning to his seat, he moved to close debate. Having previously decided not to allow me to defend McKeown, the UP legislators now decided not to allow any member of the body defend him either as they voted to cut off further debate and then voted to reject Douglas McKeown's appointment.

At no time, either in committee or on the floor, was McKeown or anyone else allowed to rebut the rumors against him. He was charged with imaginary offenses, had evidence offered against him based on pure conjecture, was denied the right to defend himself, and was adjudged guilty without trial.

Cobra Riders Arouse Ire Of Townsman

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

There is no venom in my attack on the cobra crowd. I hope to encourage maturity and responsibility and discourage the Freudian death - wish that inspires riding a Cobra.

I was shocked to read Jack Tate's confession of reckless riding on the public roads. He writes that he and the Cobra's keeper "sailed at 90 to 100 miles per hour over a winding road where every major curve was marked '35 miles per hour.' "

Should this disrespect for the law be allowed to go unpunished? Do people on country hayrides, farmers on tractors and horseback riders using these same roads deserve protection from thoughtless irresponsibles? Tate never did "feel" in danger, but shouldn't he be asked to think whether he endangers others?

This case belongs on the court docket, not the sports page. In court, Tate could take the Fifth Amendment if he felt guilty of aiding and abetting this crime, and he would be rewarded by having beaten the system. Or he could observe his pledge to uphold the Honor Code. He could appear in court and repeat his atcual report. Jack Tate should serve justice. Whether he will reflects many things. It will be some measure of the success of the intangibles of his education here.

N.C. Author's Novel Uses 'Camera' View

By JOE DePRIEST

From an airplane the face of the earth seems very small and toylike. Towns appear as dollhouses and their tiny inhabitants trot about the daily business of living and dying.

In her second novel, "Tenants of the House," North Carolina author Heather Ross Miller pilots, as it were, a low flying plane equipped with a camera and zoom lens and pauses briefly above the fictional town of Johnsboro, N. C., recording vignettes of the residents. It is a special camera Mrs. Miller employs: one that sees not only the present—which, in the novel, is during World War II, but the past as well, and at all times the thoughts and feelings of the people.

"Tenants of the House" is a laconic prose-poem that psins a deft and evocative portrait of a southern town and a handful of its inhabitants. A southern novel — yes. But stripped of its southernisms, Johnsboro could be any town and the people anybody.

Chapter One looks into the past to the founder of Johnsboro — Preacher Murdock who lived to see "His place" — his "new Canaan" oeverrun by the worldly and who died an "unhappy spirit" alone on Murdock Hill which overlooks the village of Johnsboro.

Then the aluminum factory came to Johnsboro and so did the workers who lived in little numbered houses.

"Johnsboro looked very much like a doll town made of dollhouses. But its people were very much imperfect, as real people should surely be. And so was the God who beheld them," Mrs. Miller writes.

Who are the people? There was Michael and Linda Earl Glenn who sit out most of the war safely because Michael has an eye defect. But he is finally accepted by the Service, crosses the ocean and never returns. There is Mrs. Byrd, whom the Negroes suspect is a witch because she smokes cigarettes and is an Unbeliever. And there is Mrs. Byrd's daughter Rebecca whom Gene Boyette had fallen in love with the night he saw her standing naked in her home. Young Boyette goes to the war too, bearing the silence of his love within him, returns, finds Johnsboro unchanged. There are the Negroes: the fat Beatrice and her 99-year-old mother who drowns in a drainage ditch; the children Christa and sassy Sunday Jo.

None of these people is portrayed in full. Mrs. Miller's "camera" sweeps, records certain scenes, and she edits them together into a minor fresco that suggests rather than explores.

'Never fear: "Tenants of the House" is not a mere hodgepodge of what William Styron onced called "Dixie babytalk." It is a true song of life and death, the young and the old. Mrs. Miller's prose is clean, rhythmical and captures elusive emotional qualities and natural settings in dew drop compression. The dialogue is realistic — earthy when the occasion calls for it.

"Tenants of the House," unlike Mrs. Miller's first novel, "The Edge of the Woods," incorporates more characters, a greater span of time but undertakes to do so in the same small number of pages. Some may complain that the novel suffers as a result. Perhaps so. The nearest thing to a thread of story comes from Gene Boyette's love for Rebecca Byrd which culminates one night shortly after the war in Preacher Murdock's old cabin on Murdock Hill.

But the novel's brevity saves it from the tedium that it could easily have fallen into if it were twice as long. As is, "Tenants of the House" moves swiftly, capturing reader interest, evoking the mood of a small town in the early 1940's — blackouts, arrivals, departures — and ends, much to the reader's regret, just like a life ends, when a person least expects or wants it to end. About the people of Johnsboro, Mrs. Miller writes: "Tomorrow they would be melted, sucked up in the light to make more clouds and more rain."

This reader hopes that on her next "flight" Mrs. Miller will linger for a longer time over the town and people she chooses to use her magic "aerial photography" on. And maybe she will land her craft and set out on foot for an even closer look into the joy, mystery and abiding sadness of things.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

USA: POETRY — NET "Gary Snyder and Philip Whalen" The two poets under study for this program both look more toward the Orient than toward Europe as a framework for relating their poetic experiences. Mr. Snyder is interviewed at the UCLA Berkeley Poets' Conference and in his studio. His friend Mr. Whalen is filmed in his home in Portland, Oregon, and in the courtyard of the California Palace of the Legion of Honor in San Francisco, where he reads his "Homage to Rodin," standing beside the sculptor's famous statue, "Thinker."

THE FRENCH CHEF — NET "Cheese Soufflle" Julia Child prepares this special recipe for a dish that stands on its own — a non-collapsible cheese soufflle that can be removed from the baking dish and served on a serving platter.

KOLTANOWSKI ON CHESS — ETS "The Game of Kings" This is the first in a series of 20 programs offering practical advice on the game of chess to both the intermediate and expert player — drawn from the experience and knowledge of Belgium expert George Koltanowski who has been awarded the title of Master from the International Chess Federation. On each program Mr. Koltanowski demonstrates some of the more significant combinations and games and at conclusion of the program he presents a problem for the audience to solve before the following week's program, at which time he gives the solution. In addition, he relates amusing and interesting sidelights about the often eccentric heroes of the chess world. During this opening program Mr. Koltanowski discusses the origins of chess, the oldest game known, other than the game of dice; and he demonstrates the first recorded combination, significantly revealing the knowledge of early masters. He also suggests certain procedures for beginners who wish to learn and recommends that interested members of his audience bring pencil and paper to record positions. The program is concluded with a tale of Robespierre's game with the fiancee of a man about to be beheaded — a game with a head as a stake.

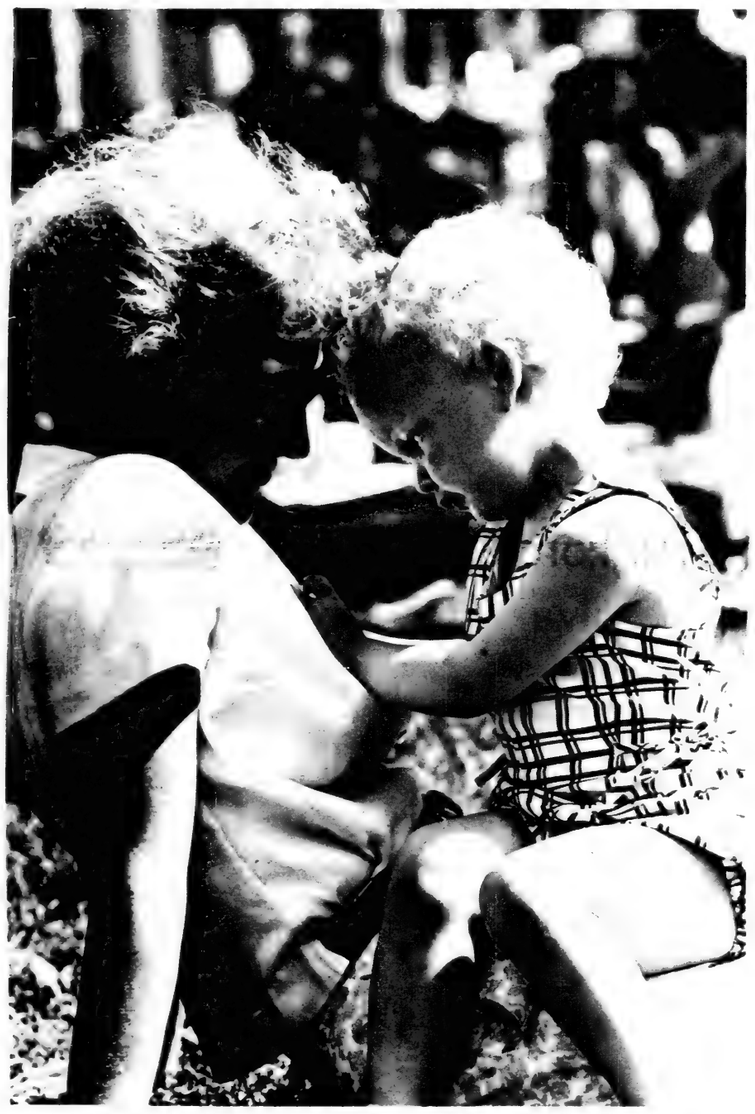
Byrd Played . . . Kids Romped On A Sunday Afternoon Jubilee

Like A Frog In A Pond, Peter McElroy Squats On The Walk

Charlie Byrd Wowed The Little Kids As Well As The Larger Variety



Quiet Guitar Music Sooths A Meditative Pair

Kids At Jubilee

It was Sunday afternoon at Polk Place and for a brief interlude, the sun was actually out and shinning.

Charlie Byrd sat on the stage before the well-behaved multitude and worked his mouth like a goldfish as he played pieces by Vivaldi and Bach. The crowd loved it.

But the children seemed to be enjoying the sun and grass more than anyone else. Rough and tumble with tousled blond hair, one Brian Gullette gleefully attacked his daddy in the grass, riding him like a hobby horse, stealing his wallet, and chortling when hoisted aloft by daddy Gullette's feet.

Little Peter McElroy, in a green set of overalls, squatted like a frog in the middle of the walk surrounded by milling adult feet. Then he looked up, bounded off his imaginary lily-pad and scampered, almost falling with each bound, down the walk. His feet went "whap, whap!" on the cool bricks.

Children would sit with their heads cocked to the music as a dog will do when you play a sour note on a harmonica. One pair of twins in a double stroller clapped in unison when Charlie Byrd finished.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

The UNC spring football game won't win any awards for excitement, brilliance or polished play. It was, after all, only a glorified scrimmage, so spectators shouldn't have expected too much.

If the game showed anything, it was that the Tar Heels need Danny Talbott and-or Jeff Beaver at quarterback, at least for now. Tim Karrs, who took over the Blue team when Beaver got sick, showed flashes of promise, especially as a runner, but his passing was erratic. Several times he threw behind the receiver. He should improve with experience, however.

Dick Wesolowski got most of the publicity as the big runner coming up from the freshman team, but Mark Mazza, also a rising sophomore, was easily the star of the show. The big fullback rolled up 67 yards in a dozen carries and was named the game's outstanding back. Wesolowski aggravated an old rib injury in the second quarter and left the game. Coach Jim Hickey said later that the injury wasn't serious, though; and Wesolowski showed enough in the few times he carried the ball to warrant the praise he has received. He will be trouble for Tar Heel opponents in the fall.

As for the game itself, there isn't much to say. The Blue team won, as expected — the Blues were the first-string players on both offense and defense. They showed some offense, mostly on the ground, but had trouble putting the ball over the goal. One of their two touchdowns was set up by a fumble and the other came on a pass interception.

There's a bright side to the lack of scoring, though: the defenders were all Tar Heels, too. Hickey said he would have been worried if the Blues had rolled over the Whites. I'll go along with the coach on that point. Defense is the most important part of football, and a low-scoring game is an indication that the defense is working. The Whites were tough when they had to be, and the Blues all but stopped the White offense cold. Last year the Tar Heel defense was spotty, to say the least. Serious defenseive lapses cost Carolina victories over Virginia and Georgia, to name two. There's some reason to look for improvement, but the Tar Heels must, of course, prove their defensive worth against somebody else's offense.

Another factor added to the dullness of the game. Coach Hickey was not anxious to display next year's attack for the benefit of opposing scouts at the game. To reveal as little information as possible, Hickey had the Tar Heels sticking to routine plays. Never, it is to be hoped, will Carolina run the halfback off tackle as much as both units did in the spring game.

Spring games don't really prove much. The team is under wraps; and, most important, it is playing against itself. This particular spring game proved even less than usual because of the absence of so many key players. Hickey seemed satisfied with the spring practice, however, and the sizable number of young players who played well Saturday and who will apparently see action this fall, give some grounds for optimism.

Illness Claims 'Gray Fox'

Case Takes Last Defeat

By DENNIS SANDERS
Special to the DTH

Saturday, Everett Case took his last defeat.

"The Old Gray Fox," the man who brought big - time basketball to North Carolina, died after 47 years of caoching. It took two years of illness to outscore him.

When the announcement came, a kid who once met Case thought back to a night in 1957, when the silver - haired Hoosier told him, "Play basketball. You'll never regret it."

The kid didn't really understand who Case was then. All he knew was that Case coached at N. C. State, where Dad had gone to school.

Saturday, the kid realized who Everett Case was. And he regretted he hadn't played a little more basketball.

When Case left Indiana and came South, North Carolina counted a field goal three points. And William Neal Reynolds Coliseum, State's home court, was a skeleton of rusty girders, abandoned because of war. That was 1946.

When Case left Indiana, he had won 782 games, and he had sent a team on the court only 862 times. What would be do at State? North Carolina teams were mediocre then. But that was in 1946.

He Won Games

Case did what he had to do; he won basketball games. He won so many that Duke, North Carolina and Wake Forest had to win to keep up. Even at that they often fell short.

But when he left, Saturday, April 30, 1966, North Carolina basketball teams were not mediocre.

From 1946 to 1956, Case's Wolfpack won at least 20 games a year. In 1950-52, he won 30. Over the 10 - year period, he won 267 games and lost only 60, six Southern Conference titles and three ACC titles, and six of the seven Dixie Classics played.

During his 19 - year career at State, Case won 379 games and lost 134. He brought 10 conference championships home, and he won seven Dixie Classic titles.

Started The Classic

The Dixie Classic was his baby. When he came to North Carolina, there was no holiday basketball tournament. And there were no great basketball teams. So he built great basketball teams, and then he started a tournament. He made it successful by inviting the country's best cage talent, and by beating them with regularity.

If there was heartbreak, and there has to be in such a successful career, it came during the 1960-61 season. The point-shaving scandal rocked the country. The NCAA and the ACC and several other conferences were mad, indignant Case was hurt.

"The involvement of some of our players in the betting scandals," he said then, "was the darkest day in my basketball coaching career." It had to be. Officials cut his schedule and canceled the Dixie Classic.

"The Old Gray Fox" had an 11-15 record one year before the scandal broke. The season it happened, he was 16-9. Then came the bad years.

Following the heartbreak, Cases's Wolfpack was 6-11, 10-11 and 8-11. They were the only three losing teams he coached in his 47 years on the bench.

Luckily, there were many more good years than lean. He did it the hard way, importing a few great players from the North and surrounding them with a lot of average players. But they all hustled for Case.

Case's Stars

He had a few All - Americas. There was Dick Dickey, back in 1948-40-50. And Sammy Ranzino, who was honored in 1949-50-51. In 1952, big Bob Speight made it. Ronnie Shavlik, who played with rolls of tape and pounds of plaster all over him, was All America in 1955 and 1956. Little Vic Molodet, a scrappy backcourt player, was on the 1956 mythical team. And more recently, was the "Mutt and Jeff" combination Case coachd in 1959—Lou Pucillo and John Richter, 6-8 and 5-9, respectively.

Some of these stars came back to Raleigh on Feb. 27, 1965. It was "Evertt Case Night," and while they stomped the Wolfpack freshmen, Case sat back and remembered.

He remembered the others who never achieved "star" status, but who made significant contributions to a great record. Players like Bob MacGillivray, Lee Terrill, Vic Bubas, Pete Auksel, George Stepanovich, Ken Rohloff, Whitey Bell, Bucky Waters, Phil DiNardo and John Maglio. Also Paul Brandenburg and Nick Pond. And countlss others.

Even through the bad years, Case wasn't forgotten. In the good times, they named him ACC "Coach of the Year," in 1954-55-58. After the bad times, they inducted him where they have inducted no other basketball coach — into the North Carolina Sports Hall of Fame.

It was a fitting honor, for the career, like the man, was a great one. But even the great are not immune to illness. So in 1964, after splitting a pair of basketball games, Everett Case stepped down, with a lifetime record of 1,161 wins and 214 losses.

"The emotion and tension are just too much," he said then. "But you'll find me at press row . . . that's as far away from the floor as I wnat to get."

Tar Heels Meet Deacons Today In Quest For Title

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

According to an old superstition, things come in threes. Today, weather permitting, the Tar Heels go after the first of the three victories they need to clinch the ACC baseball title.

If Carolina gets by Wake Forest in the 3 p.m. tilt here, Coach Walter Rabb and Tar Heel fans can start making incantations in hopes that the superstitition will prove true.

Beattie Leonard (3-3) is the probable starting pitcher for the Tar Heels, although Rabb has indicated that he hopes to give sophomore Mike Flannagan a start soon.

In his last start Leonard pitched six shutout innings against South Carolina before going out for a pinch hitter. George McRae got the win when the Tar Heels got a run in the tenth inning.

Next to the Tar Heels, who stretched their winning streak to six games with the weekend victories over South Carolina and Clemson, the Demon Deacons are the hottest team in the league.

The Deacs have won four in a row and six of their last seven. Over the weekend they beat Maryland 5-1 and crushed Virginia 10-0. The spurt has carried Wake from the depths of the league into third place.

The Deacons are clearly a much improved team. When they played Maryland and Virginia earlier in the season, they lost both games by scores of 8-4 and 7-2 respectively. The Wake pitching, which had given up such interesting single-game totals as 14 runs and 12 runs (twice), has been vastly better of late. The Deacon hurlers allowed only two runs in the three victories they scored last week.

Leading the Deacons' attack is Tommy Cole. The senior outfielder has been in a slump and has dropped out of the ACC lead, but through the Duke game, he still sported a healthy .403 average.

Philly Fires Dolph Schayes

The Philadelphia 76ers yesterday fired Dolph Schayes even though he led the club to the National Basketball Association's Eastern Title and was named NBA Coach of the Year.

Schayes was repleaced by Alex Hannum, who refused to be a fulltime coach at San Francisco.

Irv Kosloff, owner of the 76ers, said he made the change solely to win the NBA championship next year.

The fact that Schayes coached Phildadelphia to the Eestern Division title, ending Boston Celtics supremacy there after nine years, apparently did not impress Kosloff. He said he was "very unhappy" that Boston came back to bounce the 76ers out of the championship playoff.

"It has been my goal to bring the NBA championship to this city," he said. "In order to achieve that objective, it seemed to me there was only one man for the job. That was Alexa Hannum."

Hannum coached the St. Louis team that won the NBA title in 1958 — the only time in the past 10 years that Red Auerbach of Boston lost it.

Hannum had coached the NBA's San Francisco Warriors for the last three years. He didn't get his contract renewed because the owners wanted Hannum to devote full time to the job, and spend less time in a contracting business in California.

About Schayes, notified last week privately by Kosloff that he was through, there was little said except that he was a nice guy who was sensitive, a gentleman, and didn't push the players.

Hannum broke in as an NBA coach with St. Louis in 1956-57, leading the Hawks to two Western Division titles and the NBA championship in 1958.

Hannum has a big factor going for him. He has coached Wilt Chamberlain and reportedly knows how to handle him.

Tampa Tourney Taps Carolina

UNC is one of four teams which will appear in the Tampa Invitational Basketball Tournament in the Florida city next Dec. 19-20, it was announced by C. P. (Chuck) Erickson, Tar Heel athletic director.

Other schools which will participate are Florida State, Citadel and Columbia. Pairings have not been announced.

Erickson said that the two tournament games would be included in a total of 25 now being scheduled for Coach Dean Smith's Tar Heels. Also on the slate is the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament, set for March 9-11 at Grensboro.

1. Repairs in space. If something goes wrong with a vehicle in orbit, how can it be fixed? Answers must be found, if large-scale space operations are to become a reality. For this and other assignments Air Force scientists and engineers will be called on to answer in the next few years, we need the best brains available.

2. Lunar landing. The exact composition of the lunar surface, as well as structural and propulsion characteristics of the space vehicle, enter into this problem. Important study remains to be done—and, as an Air Force officer, you could be the one to do it!

3. Life-support biology. The filling of metabolic needs over very extended periods of time in space is one of the most fascinating subjects that Air Force scientists are investigating. The results promise to have vital ramifications for our life on earth, as well as in outer space.

4. Space orientation. The orbital problems of a spacecraft, including its ability to maneuver over selected points on the earth, are of vital importance to the military utilization of space. There are plenty of assignments for young Air Force physicists in this area.

5. Synergetic plane changing. The ability of a spacecraft to change altitude can also be crucial to space operations. Where but in the Air Force could Sc.B.'s get the chance to work on such fascinating projects right at the start of their careers?

6. Space propulsion. As our space flights cover greater and greater distances, propulsion—more than anything else—will become the limiting factor. New fuels and new propulsion techniques must be found, if we are to keep on exploring the mysteries of space. And it may well be an Air Force scientist on his first assignment who makes the big breakthrough!

7. Pilot performance. Important tests must still be made to determine how the pilots of manned aerospacecraft will react to long periods away from the earth. Of course not every new Air Force officer becomes involved in research and development right away. But where the most exciting advances are taking place, young Air Force scientists, administrators, pilots, and engineers are on the scene.

Byrd Played . . . Kids Romped On A Sunday Afternoon Jubilee

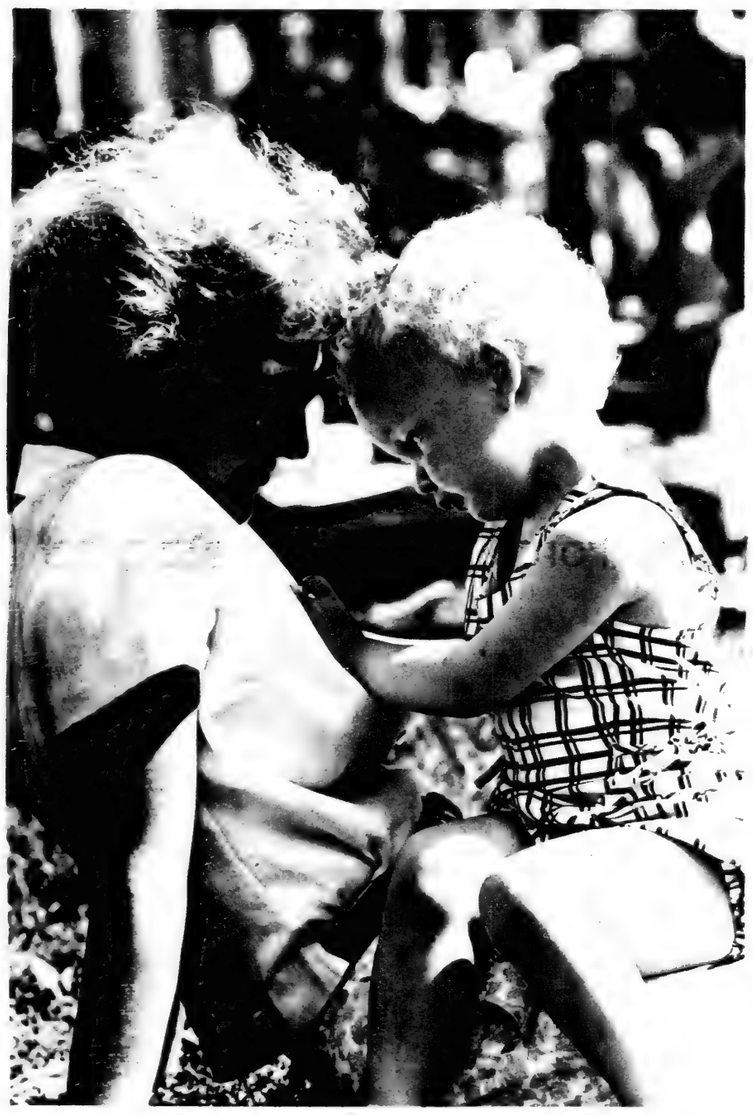
Charlie Byrd Wowed The Little Kids As Well As The Larger Variety



Quiet Guitar Music Sooths A Meditative Pair

Kids At Jubilee

It was Sunday afternoon at Polk Place and for a brief interlude, the sun was actually out and shinning.

Charlie Byrd sat on the stage before the well-behaved multitude and worked his mouth like a goldfish as he played pieces by Vivaldi and Bach. The crowd loved it.

But the children seemed to be enjoying the sun and grass more than anyone else. Rough and tumble with tousled blond hair, one Brian Gullette gleefully attacked his daddy in the grass, riding him like a hobby horse, stealing his wallet, and chortling when hoisted aloft by daddy Gullette's feet.

Little Peter McElroy, in a green set of overalls, squatted like a frog in the middle of the walk surrounded by milling adult feet. Then he looked up, bounded off his imaginary lily-pad and scampered, almost falling with each bound, down the walk. His feet went "whap, whap!" on the cool bricks.

Children would sit with their heads cocked to the music as a dog will do when you play a sour note on a harmonica. One pair of twins in a double stroller clapped in unison when Charlie Byrd finished.

Jubilee Viewed From The Steps Of The Library

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

The UNC spring football game won't win any awards for excitement, brilliance or polished play. It was, after all, only a glorified scrimmage, so spectators shouldn't have expected too much.

If the game showed anything, it was that the Tar Heels need Danny Talbott and-or Jeff Beaver at quarterback, at least for now. Tim Karrs, who took over the Blue team when Beaver got sick, showed flashes of promise, especially as a runner, but his passing was erratic. Several times he threw behind the receiver. He should improve with experience, however.

Dick Wesolowski got most of the publicity as the big runner coming up from the freshman team, but Mark Mazza, also a rising sophomore, was easily the star of the show. The big fullback rolled up 67 yards in a dozen carries and was named the game's outstanding back. Wesolowski aggravated an old rib injury in the second quarter and left the game. Coach Jim Hickey said later that the injury wasn't serious, though; and Wesolowski showed enough in the few times he carried the ball to warrant the praise he has received. He will be trouble for Tar Heel opponents in the fall.

As for the game itself, there isn't much to say. The Blue team won, as expected — the Blues were the first-string players on both offense and defense. They showed some offense, mostly on the ground, but had trouble putting the ball over the goal. One of their two touchdowns was set up by a fumble and the other came on a pass interception.

There's a bright side to the lack of scoring, though: the defenders were all Tar Heels, too. Hickey said he would have been worried if the Blues had rolled over the Whites. I'll go along with the coach on that point. Defense is the most important part of football, and a low-scoring game is an indication that the defense is working. The Whites were tough when they had to be, and the Blues all but stopped the White offense cold. Last year the Tar Heel defense was spotty, to say the least. Serious defenseive lapses cost Carolina victories over Virginia and Georgia, to name two. There's some reason to look for improvement, but the Tar Heels must, of course, prove their defensive worth against somebody else's offense.

Another factor added to the dullness of the game. Coach Hickey was not anxious to display next year's attack for the benefit of opposing scouts at the game. To reveal as little information as possible, Hickey had the Tar Heels sticking to routine plays. Never, it is to be hoped, will Carolina run the halfback off tackle as much as both units did in the spring game.

Spring games don't really prove much. The team is under wraps; and, most important, it is playing against itself. This particular spring game proved even less than usual because of the absence of so many key players. Hickey seemed satisfied with the spring practice, however, and the sizable number of young players who played well Saturday and who will apparently see action this fall, give some grounds for optimism.

Illness Claims 'Gray Fox'

Case Takes Last Defeat

By DENNIS SANDERS
Special to the DTH

Saturday, Everett Case took his last defeat.

"The Old Gray Fox," the man who brought big - time basketball to North Carolina, died after 47 years of caoching. It took two years of illness to outscore him.

When the announcement came, a kid who once met Case thought back to a night in 1957, when the silver - haired Hoosier told him, "Play basketball. You'll never regret it."

The kid didn't really understand who Case was then. All he knew was that Case coached at N. C. State, where Dad had gone to school.

Saturday, the kid realized who Everett Case was. And he regretted he hadn't played a little more basketball.

When Case left Indiana and came South, North Carolina counted a field goal three points. And William Neal Reynolds Coliseum, State's home court, was a skeleton of rusty girders, abandoned because of war. That was 1946.

When Case left Indiana, he had won 782 games, and he had sent a team on the court only 862 times. What would be do at State? North Carolina teams were mediocre then. But that was in 1946.

He Won Games

Case did what he had to do; he won basketball games. He won so many that Duke, North Carolina and Wake Forest had to win to keep up. Even at that they often fell short.

But when he left, Saturday, April 30, 1966, North Carolina basketball teams were not mediocre.

From 1946 to 1956, Case's Wolfpack won at least 20 games a year. In 1950-52, he won 30. Over the 10 - year period, he won 267 games and lost only 60, six Southern Conference titles and three ACC titles, and six of the seven Dixie Classics played.

During his 19 - year career at State, Case won 379 games and lost 134. He brought 10 conference championships home, and he won seven Dixie Classic titles.

Started The Classic

The Dixie Classic was his baby. When he came to North Carolina, there was no holiday basketball tournament. And there were no great basketball teams. So he built great basketball teams, and then he started a tournament. He made it successful by inviting the country's best cage talent, and by beating them with regularity.

If there was heartbreak, and there has to be in such a successful career, it came during the 1960-61 season. The point-shaving scandal rocked the country. The NCAA and the ACC and several other conferences were mad, indignant. Case was hurt.

"The involvement of some of our players in the betting scandals," he said then, "was the darkest day in my basketball coaching career." It had to be. Officials cut his schedule and canceled the Dixie Classic.

"The Old Gray Fox" had an 11-15 record one year before the scandal broke. The season it happened, he was 16-9. Then came the bad years.

Following the heartbreak Case's Wolfpack was 6-11, 10-11 and 8-11. They were the only three losing teams he coached in his 47 years on the bench.

Luckily, there were many more good years than lean. He did it the hard way, importing a few great players from the North and surrounding them with a lot of average players. But they all hustled for Case.

Case's Stars

He had a few All - Americas. There was Dick Dickey, back in 1948-49-50. And Sammy Ranzino, who was honored in 1949-50-51. In 1952, big Bob Speight made it. Ronnie Shavlik, who played with rolls of tape and pounds of plaster all over him, was All America in 1955 and 1956. Little Vic Molodet, a scrappy backcourt player, was on the 1956 mythical team. And more recently, was the "Mutt and Jeff" combination Case coachd in 1959—Lou Pucillo and John Richter, 6-8 and 5-9, respectively.

Some of these stars came back to Raleigh on Feb. 27, 1965. It was "Everett Case Night," and while they stomped the Wolfpack freshmen, Case sat back and remembered.

He remembered the others who never achieved "star" status, but who made significant contributions to a great record. Players like Bob MacGillivray, Lee Terrill, Vic Bubas, Pete Auksel, George Stepanovich, Ken Rohloff, Whitey Bell, Bucky Waters, Phil DiNardo and John Maglio. Also Paul Brandenburg and Nick Pond. And countless others.

Even through the bad years, Case wasn't forgotten. In the good times, they named him ACC "Coach of the Year," in 1954-55-58. After the bad times, they inducted him where they have inducted no other basketball coach — into the North Carolina Sports Hall of Fame.

It was a fitting honor, for the career, like the man, was a great one. But even the great are not immune to illness. So in 1964, after splitting a pair of basketball games, Everett Case stepped down, with a lifetime record of 1,161 wins and 214 losses.

"The emotion and tension are just too much," he said then. "But you'll find me at press row . . . that's as far away from the floor as I wnat to get."

And it may well be an Air Force scientist on his first assignment who makes the big breakthrough!

7. Pilot performance. Important tests must still be made to determine how the pilots of manned aerospacecraft will react to long periods away from the earth. Of course not every new Air Force officer becomes involved in research and development right away. But where the most exciting advances are taking place, young Air Force scientists, administrators, pilots, and engineers are on the scene.

Hodges Well; Comes Home

Luther H. Hodges, former governor of North Carolina and former Secretary of Commerce went home yesterday to recuperate after spending nearly two weeks in the Memorial Hospital.

He underwent surgery April 19 and has been in the hospital since

Hodges is expected to remain in bed for several weeks and will not be accepting any speaking engagements for the next month.

Fast Against War Goes Into 2nd Day

The Student Peace Union sponsored five-day fast in protest of U. S. participation in the war in Viet Nam continues into its second day today.

The eight students participaing in the fast are drinking only orange juice twice a day until 6 p.m. Friday. Others are fasting in the day and eating only suppers.

A fast "feast" was held Sunday night to aid the fasters before fasting. The five-day fasters were scheduled to wear black arm bands.

Assistant Professor of Political Science Lewis Lipitz will head a discussion in Gerrard Hall at 2 today on the legality of the war and th question of the draft.

Magnus Gunther, graduata instructor in political science, will direct a seminar on Thursday on the world revolution and American containment policies.

The Wednesday seminar on "Saigon and Selma" — will concern the relationships between the war in Viet Nam and the war on poverty.

Residence hall discussions on the war are planned nightly during the week. One in Ehringhaus' Green Room has been scheduled for Thursday night, and others are tentatively planned for Craige and Morrison.

The fasters' statement of principle asserts that the group is fasting "because we cannot be silent and passive in the face of massive injustice. To be silent is to consent. Not to dissent as individuals is to participate in collective national guilt."

SOMEONE UP THERE hates us — There's a nasty rumor going around that this fellow named Noah, (UNC- class of '2000 B.C.), is down in the Arb with a big boat and he's taking in campus dogs two by two. He's run into a snag—there's only one Sebastian. Seriously, this stuff has got to stop. Here is the hole where Davie Hall used to be and where a mud puddle now is.

State's Everett N. Case Paid Tribute By Throng

RALEIGH (AP) — Former players, fellow coaches and fans paid final tribute yesterday to Everett N. Case who coached the N. C. State Wolfpack to the peaks of national basketball success.

Case, 65, died at Rex Hospital Saturday night of complications resulting from massive internal bleeding. Removal of a bleeding ulcer by surgery Friday came too late to save him.

A large throng assembled at the Church of the Good Shepherd to hear three ministers recite the simple rites of the Episcopal Church. Burial followed in Raleigh Memorial Park.

Members of the last basketball team recruited at State by Case, who are now seniors, served as active pallbearers. Serving as honorary pallbearers were former players, fellow coaches, officials of N. S. State University, officials of the Atlantic Coast Conference and some of his friends in press, radio and television.

Case retired at N. C. State in December, 1964, near the start of what would have been his 19th season. His retirment came earlier than he had planned because of ill health. He suffered from diabetes and myeloma, a disease of the bone marrow which eventually left him unable to walk.

Because a live-wire Sophomore class at CHHS decided to have a benefit book drive about a week ago, the Old Book Corner is setting some kind of a record for tempting-books-to-the-square inch this week.

In the nature of things when you turn a whole class loose on a bookish community, you're going to get a wide range of loot, and that's what happened this time. There's not a single corner of our old book display that isn't brighter and more tempting for this collection.

A couple of rare North Carolina titles joined our display, quite a clump of religious books turned up, and you'll find books of literary biography and history scattered all over the place.

Used Books for Children

Not the least delightful contribution of our Sophomore contribution was a really large collection of used, but top-quality children's books, and we're so pleased with them that we are putting off our usual Graduation Gift display for a week in order to show juveniles in the Old Book Feature case.

If you have a youngster in the Junior High set or younger (or if you are one, for that matter) here's a chance to lay away some lively reading chosen by experts, at a very moderate price. The titles range from picture-books for the very young to Landmark titles and Junior Science books, and while they are all definitely used, most are in surprisingly good condition.

Parents — bring your young reader with you. In this collection his wildest yearnings will leave the family budget in good shape, and you'll enjoy watching him discover the real satisfaction of old book treasure-hunting!

A Trifle for History Students

We have just bought in a broken set of THE GREAT EVENTS BY FAMOUS HISTORIANS, and are selling separate volumes at $1.25 each. This set was one of those fancy Victorian parlor decorations, issued about sixty years and seldom read. In this case, however, the pretty binding actually enclose many of the basic documents of history, plus authorative writing by really good men.

We're sure that the publishers of this set will spin in their graves if they reasilze that anyone would buy a volume to read, but we venture to suggest that you can look far and spend much without getting as much historically useful material.

—o—

That's about the week's news, except that we've just issued a catalogue of North Carolina books, which is yours for the asking.

A formal proposal began under the administration of tormer Chancellor Paul F. Sharp and continued with Sitterson. It was submitted several weeks ago and the formal announcement was made yesterday.

The William R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust was founded in conformance with Kenan's will. He died in 1965.

His total estate, estimated to have a value in excess of $100 million, places the Kenan Charitable Trust among the richest educational foundations in the nation.

In his presentation address, A. R. MacMannis the trustee of the fund, said:

"This is a special occasion . . . by this first educational grant of the Kenan Charitable Trust foundation we believe that we are beginning a program what will enable you to be one of the greatest Universities in the country."

MacMannis explained that the responsibility of selecting these professors was being left to the University, but asked that arrangements be made to insure that the professors selected "work as close to the students as possible . . . as Professor Francis Venable did with William Kenan.

Kenan made most of his fortune as a pioneer industrial engineer, and in Florida real estate, hotels, electric power companies, railroads and banking. Most of it will be used, according to his will, to establish professorships, instructorships, scholarships and fellowships.

Lipsitz Opposes Draft Deferments

By AL BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Political Science Professor Lewis Lipsitz told a Student Peace Union - sponsored seminar yesterday that he opposed draft deferments for college students and professors.

"There are legitimate bases for deferment," he asserted, "but I don't think being a student is one of them. I fail to see why the government endorses education as a way out of the draft."

Speaking on "Individual and Dissent in a Free Society" before a Polk Place group of about 100, Lipsitz said the only two good things the war have caused are "re-thinking about the nature of military service" and the "development of a self - conscious political community in the U. S.

"This is not a question of draft deferment, but one of compulsory military service in a war that is regarded as unjust. I would have fought in World War Two and in the Korean War — I'm no pacifist — but not in this war."

Lipsitz, who received his bachelor's degree from Chicago in 1957 and master's and doctoral degrees from Yale, noted that the American Civil Liberties Union now feels that conscientious objection to a particular war should be allowed.

He said, "It strikes me how little issue has been raised over the legality of the war. The American academic community and diplomatic community doesn't pay very much attention to it.

"There are two senses in which the question is important," he said, "whether collective security is a substitute for legality and whether the spirit of the Nuremburg Trials has veen violated furing the Vietnamese war."

The professor also pointed out that "the U. S. has minimal support from its allies in the war" and that "the allies are distrubed by the U. S. unilateral involvement in the war."

He asserted that "the fact that two or three Vietnamese civilians are killed for every Viet Cong is a moral question that has hardly been asked.

"The Viet Cong are certainly a horrible people; they have killed some 4,000 village leaders and 60,000 civilians, according to the New York Times. But the U. S. itself is killing some 10,000 civilians a month.

On the subject of draft deferment, Lipsitz declared, "It is simply an illusion that, for instance, our political science department is helping or sustaining our military effort in Viet Nam.

Some persons instrumental to the defense effort at home should be deferred, he added, including nuclearphysicists and those in natural sciences.

Late Applicants For Draft Test Get Another Try

The Selective Service announced this week that it would give another chance to students who missed the April 23 deadline for filing applications for the Selective Service Qualification Test.

The state Selective Service Board in Raleigh told the DTH yesterday that they had not been notified of a new application date or whether or not there would be an additional testing session scheduled.

They expect notification in the near future and will make the information public as soon as they are notified.

About 1 million students had applied for the test to determine whether or not they will keep their draft deferments by the deadline.

Additional thousands had failed to sign up until the last day found that local draft boards were closed because the deadline fell on a Saturday.

Tests have been schedlued for May 14, 21 and June 3 at 1,200 locations in the 50 states, Washington, D. C., the Canal Zone and Puerto Rico.

IT WON'T BE LONG NOW — Yack members unloading plastic dust covers for this year's yearbook means that the books themselves can't be far behind. Expected distribution date for the books is May 16, according to Scott Castleberry, Yack Editor. Watch for a special DTH series beginning Saturday for an advanced look at the new edition.

Lurleen Wins Alabama Vote

From The Associated Press

Segregationist Governor George C. Wallace's wife, Lurleen, took an early lead in last night's Alabama primary and held it throughout the counting. She will now represent the Democratic party in November's gubernatorial election.

She was a favorite to win.

Tuesday's election was massive — long lines of persons waited outside polls for a chance to vote — and will measure this new found power of the southern Negro, the ballot.

Alabama's primary was the first major Southern election since passage of the 1965 Federal Voting Law.

Federal poll watchers were in severn counties to guard against election law infractions.

The earliest closing hour for any Alabama polls was 7 p.m., EDT. Some polls had a 9 p.m. EDT, closing time and it could be well into the night hours before any clear picture developed of how Mrs. Lurleen Wallace did in her effort to succeed her husband. She was opposed by nine male opponents.

Most political analysts expected Mrs. Wallace to be the leader among the field. Advance questions were whether she could get a majority and, if not, who would be the runnerup, and contestant in a runoff May 31.

Contenders against Mrs Wallace were State Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers, former Congressman Carl Elliott, former Gov. James E. Folsom, State Sen. Bob Gilchrist, E. I. Gore, former John Patterson, Sherman Powell, State Agriculture Commissioner A. W. Todd and Charles Woods.

Mrs. Wallace was running for the nomination on a platform of her husband's record, replete with attempts to thwart racial integration in Alabama.

Fifty-two Negro candidates were also running for county offices or legislative seats — the first serious political efforts by Negros in Alabama since reconstruction.

Both Wallace's attempt to succeed himself by proxy and the massive Negro vote — about 20 per cent of the 1.4 million voters - were unprecedented in the state. Wallace put up his wife when the state senate killed a succession bill.

Atty. Gen. Flowers, the only gubernatorial candidate actively seeking the Negro vote, was expected to garner nearly all of it. Flowers, a racial moderate and outspoken critic of Wallace's segregation tactics, has plugged for "reason and realism instead of resistance and rebellion."

Wallace and his wife voted at their hometown of Clayton in the southeastern part of the state and then were presented an American flag by some Girl Scouts. The Governor predicted victory for his wife, both in the primary and the November general election against a Republican.

An official in Montgomery said long lines resulted partly from the length of the ballot, slowing down the rate of voting.

Wallace won office in the 1962 election on a pledge to stand in the schoolhouse door and block integration. He made the doorway stand at the University of Alabama, Tuscaloosa, in 1962 but yielded to federalized National Guardsmen.

His efforts to prevent school desegregation that first year of his term resulted in a federal court injunction against interference by the Governor. Wallace entered several nonsouthern presidential primaries in 1964 ang got sizeable votes but withdraw after Barry Goldwater became the Republican nominee.

Alabama racial conflict played major roles in the Civil Rights Law of 1964 and the voting rights legislation enacted last year. The 1965 law resulted directly from a Selma-based civil rights campaign led by Dr Martin Luther King Jr.

Magazine Featuring UNC Professor Now Available

By ERNEST ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

He "wears scuffed shoes, drooping socks and chalk-streaked jacket, goes everywhere accompanied by a kindly dog named Poppo, and makes literature an urgent affair."

This is the way Time magazine describes Osborne Bennett ("O. B.") Hardison, UNC English professor, in its current issue now being distributed.

Subscription copies of the issue, which features Hardison the cover along with nine other top professors from across the nation, began arriving in Chapel Hill yesterday.

Newstand sales are expected to begin today.

Time devotes about approximately 300 words to the 37-year-old professor, and descirbes him as "humming in tune with the student wavelength." Hardison currently teaches undergraduate and graduate English courses on Milton, Medieval and Renaissance literature, and literary criticism.

In the publisher's column at the front of the magazine, Bernhard M. Auer says that the cover story has been in preparation for more than a year.

Time staffers visited thousands of classes in preparing the story and finally submitted 150 nominations for the top professors in the nation. This list was then trimmed to 74, halved, and finally narrowed to the top ten.

Each of the stages in this elimination process was accompanied with intensive interviews and research.

A writer - photographer team from Atlanta visited Hardison's classes last month, in preparation of the final version of the article which appeared in this week's Time.

Time Associate Editor Ed Magnuson comments on the final selection, "Any selections of this sort have to be somewhat arbitrary since there are so many good ones. The ten are models, but we could have listed many more."

Peaceniks Listen As Prof Hits War

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

More than 90 students yesterday heard Prof. Lewis Lipsitz of the Political Science Department say he would rather go jail than fight in Viet Nam.

He spoke at a seminar sponsored by the Student Peace Union, some of whose members have been fasting since Monday to protest the war.

Orange juice and vitamins will constitute the only nourishment to be taken by the eight students who began fasting early Monday.

The fast will conclude with a silent vigil Friday afternoon.

Lipsitz, a short thin man wearing glasses, sat Indian - style on a newspaper while he explained he would have fought in Korea or World War II, but not Viet Nam.

He said the Viet Nam war had two desirable effects. It enforced a reconsideration of the draft, he said, and (2) prompted greater political interest by "the intellecutal community. It was their bar mitzvah . . . their becoming men."

"The war," he continued, "also provided an opportunity to test weapons. Some people think this is desirable . . . I don't."

Among the buttons' messages were:

—"Draft Beer — Not Students."

—"Kill For Peace, Kill for Freedom, Kill Vietnamese, KILL, KILL KILL."

—"All Hands Off Vietnam."

Nearby was a bulletin board with a pamphlet proclaiming that electric shock as being used for torture in both Viet Nam and Georgia.

Chuck Schunior, UNC SPU head, said his group will discuss "Saigon and Selma" at 2 p.m. in Polk Place. He says the civil rights struggle and the war in Asia are related.

Schunior says the war on poverty is being handicapped by students' having to stay in school to avoid military

Models

Interviews for models for the fashion magazine Mademoiselle will be held today from 4-6 in Gerrard Hall.

Particularly urged to come are girls between five feet, five inches and five feet, ten inches in height. The girls should be thin and preferably have long straight hair.

All interested in being interviewed must sign up beforehand at the Information Desk in GM.

Selections for the magazine will be made by Nonnie Moore, sportswear editor, and photographer George Barkentin.

Orientation Counselors Selected

Tenative selection of men's orientation counselors for next fall were announced today by Bill Long, Men's Co-ordinator. Letters of congratualations were sent to 250 men students today.

These men were chosen from over 300 applicants on the basis of grades, personality and knowledge of campus affairs as determined by a newly developed quiz.

The first of three mandatory training sessions for prospective counselors, will be held Thursday night at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall. It will cover the Honor Ssytem.

Final selection of the 230 counselors will be based on attendance and on an exam coving the material discussed in the training sessions. The other twenty counselors will be used as alternates.

A plaque will be awarded to the fraternity or sorority house which raises the most money for Project Hope. Another plaque will be to the dorm that raises the most money per resident.

The names of the dorm fund raising chairman must be turned in to the Smith Residence Hall basement no later than Friday.

The appointees are Jean Winter, Presicilla Hager, Mary Alice Morris, Betty Jo Grey, Candy Brown and Linda Johnson.

Help For S.S. Hope

Alpha Phi Omega, national service fraternity, has announced plans to help the S. S. Hope, the hospital ship of Project Hope, bring medical aid and technology to the ports of the underdeveloped countries in which it docks.

A fund raising drive here and at UNC-G will begin Monday and continue through May 18.

Tapestries Shown

Tapestries which were made by the Indian children of the Peruvian Andes are on display through Saturday in the Art Gallery of Chapel Hill.

Over 200 children spend their spare time working on the tapestries as a result of an idea from a Peace Corps Volunteer. Since the children began work in 1963, they have become a major part of the local arts and crafts industry.

The exhibit is open from 3 to 5 daily.

Wolfe Award

Pi Kappa Phi will present the secnd annual Thomas Wolfe Award for an outstanding short story on May 16, at 8 p.m. in the Peabody Hall basement.

The award consists of a $100 check and an engraved silver trophy.

Judges for the contest are Leon Rooke, writer - in - residence, William Hardy, author and professor of RTVMP, and Forest Read of the creative writing department.

All contestants have been urged to attend the presentation. There will be an informal discussion with the judges.

WHC Appointees

Six appointees to the Women's Honor Council are being considered by Student Legislature. The resolution which approves their appointment is in the Ways and Means Committee.

Handbook Material

Heads of all campus organizations are requested to submit resumes of the purposes and activities of their organizations to the GM information desk for use in the Carolina Handbook by May 11, according to handbook editor Steve Hildenbrand.

Busy TV-Radio Men, Monitors, Wires In UNC Educational TV Mobile Unit

"This is Remote KC 5-662. Are both machines free?. . . I have two tapes ready. Stand by to record . . . Check the audio board for level."

That's the sound of WUNC Educational TV Mobile Unit preparing itself for work. From the outside its an innocent enough looking gray and white 38' 15 ton Trailways bus. The wires and black cable coming out of its door indicate it might not be an ordinary little bus.

Inside there are no passengers or seats, but busy radio-TV men, six small monitors, one medium one, voices coming out of complicated little boxes, and a real hub-tub of activity prior to "air time."

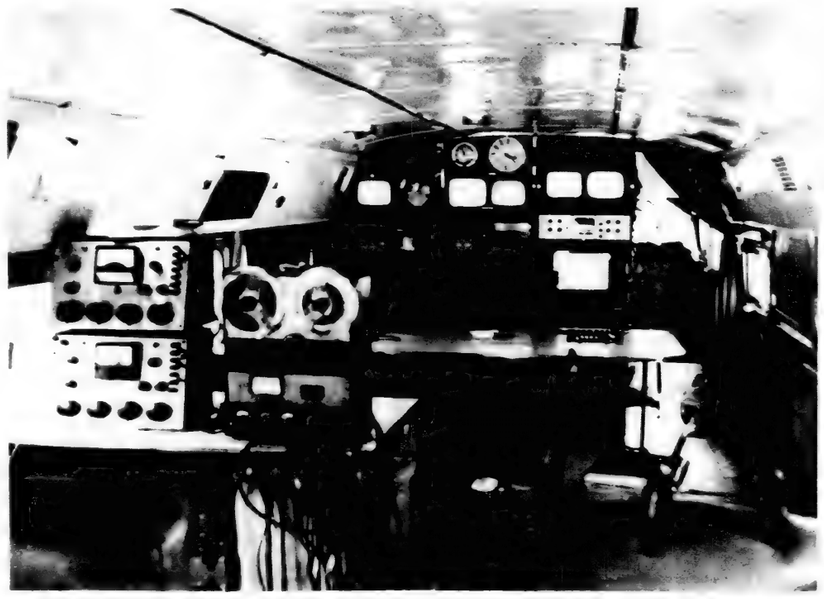
The WUNC Mobile Unit, one of the best in the South, is used at Raleigh, Chapel Hill and Greensboro. "The Bus" as it is affectionately called in Swain Hall makes its home at the transmittor some five miles from Chapel Hill. Most mobile units are bread trucks or vans instead of a bus, so there is some distinction in the name.

The Unit travels extensively. One day it may be at Hill Hall for a recital, one week situated at Memorial Hall, for the Symposium, or covering Speaker Ban Hearings in Raleigh. It has been used by all three major networks and NBC used it in Washington to cover election returns from the White House and a parade for the astronauts.

"Bus" has everything needed for direct transmission of an event. Shows can be televised directly from the bus or later via video tape. There is room for four cameras assorted audio equipment. Thirteen or fourteen men usually accompany the unit, including Don Callahan, remote engineer who always goes along and is in charge of keeping the bus in running order.

Last summer the unit traveled throughout Eastern N. C. for two weeks recording some 14 shows and a number of short interviews. Eventually, through a system of interconnected transmittors, the state will be covered by programs that are now received only in the channel 4 area.

The Mobile Unit, worth upwards to $100,000, was a gift from Carolina Trailway



"BUS" — SUCH an affectionate sound to the name. Those mysterious technical people in Swain Hall have nicknamed their mobile unit, a 15-ton Trailways Bus, just plain "Bus" because unlike most mobile units it is not just a van or a bread truck. Shown above is a view of "Bus's" innards with the myriad dials, meters, tapes, wires and even a human to aid the machines in their task.

Pub Board Will Meet

The Publications Board will meet at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

The Pub Board's agenda for the day includes:

INTERVIEWING APPLICANTS for business manager of the course evaluation booklet and the Summer Tar Heel.

CONSIDERING CONTRACTS for the course evaluation booklet and the Carolina Quarterly.

All members are urged to attend.

The Student Legislator has appointed Tommy Cannon and Steve Salimony as members of the Pub Board. Frank Longest has been reappointed to another term on the board by the speaker of the legislature, Bill Purdy.

Anyone interested in serving on the Pub Board as presidential appointees should contact Pub Board Chairman Hugh Blackwell, at 968-9215, by Thursday.

Rebirth Of Speaker Ban Sought By Maryland VFW

(ACP) — A top official of Maryland's Veterans of Foreign Wars has announced that his group will seek to reintroduce the controversial college speaker ban resolution when the State Legislature meets in January, 1967, the University of Maryland Diamondback reports.

This session's speaker ban resolution, which died in committee, asked that state - supported schools prohibit Communists or Communist sympathizers from speaking or participating in programs at state institutions.

The official, Commander Charles A. Kreatchman, said: "We're not afraid of having students learn about Communism. It's just that we don't like the idea of them learning about it from Communist dupes."

Delegate Edward T. Conroy said the VFW and five other large veterans' organizations asked him to introduce the resolution. The groups were state chapters of the American Legion, Catholic War Veterans, Disabled American veterans, Jewish War Veterans, and Veterans of World War I.

The groups will try to present another bill to prohibit state-supported projects from purchasing goods in Communist or Communist-dominated counties.

Group To Pick Top Professor

The Excellence in Teaching Commission is now accepting nominations for an award to go to an outstanding professor on campus.

Under the auspices of Student Government, an outstanding UNC professor will receive and a $1,000 check for his ovcampus - wide recognition er - all excellence in the teaching profession.

According to chairman Bill McFadden, the commission is looking for a professor who is inspiring both in and out of class. It seeks a professor who excells not merely as a lecturer but as one who is personally interested in students and their activities and problems. Academic competance as well as apersonable manner of dealing with students will be examined. The professor's activities in aiding students beyond the classroom situation will thus be of primary consideration.

Teachers in the humanities, social sciences, fine arts, and sciences are eligible for the award.

Those interested in nominating a professor in any of these fields should submit a statement outlining in detail why they feel this professor is qualified for the award.

Nominations should be submitted to the secretary in the Student Government Office in Graham Memorial. The deadline for nominations is Friday, May 13th.

SPU Goofs

The Student Peace Union is defeating its own purpose.

When their Y-Court demonstrations were in full swing last fall, the majority of the student body here joined blindly against the SPU and in favor of U. S. military involvement in Southeast Asia.

Then the peaceniks quietened. And while they rested, many average Joe Colleges began to consider seriously the possibility of the U. S. finding an equitable means of bowing out of the Vietnam conflict. When John Kenneth Galbraith suggested during the Carolina Symposium that we have no business in Vietnam, he was cheered by many students who would have thrown eggs at him for such a statement six months earlier.

The idea of evening workshops and discussions in residence halls is a good one. Perhaps for the first time since the origination of the SPU on this campus, the tenor of student opinion recently has been such that a profitable exchange of ideas between the peaceniks, the militarists and those in the middle ground could have been conducted without the affair erupting into a name-calling sessions.

But the members of the SPU have stabbed themselves in the back. An orange juice fast. Black arm bands. Daily meetings around the flagpole for "meditation and sustenance." Really people, you have to be kidding.

This is exactly the type action that sets the blood to boiling in the veins of most of our students. What can you expect to accomplish after you have set yourself and your cause up to be ridiculed.

We remember the early days of demonstration when we were dead against the anti-war boys and all they had to say. Since that time, we and many others have given a little ground — maybe a lot of ground in some areas. We really believe there are some good ideas within the group that wears the black and white chicken's foot button.

But we suggest that if you intend to convert anyone else to your viewpoint, you use your head. A little strategy can go a long way — much further than a gallon of orange juice.

God's Candidate

This morning the Alabama Democratic Primary is history.

At least the first ballot is history. At the time we are writing this, we do not know who has tallied the most votes or if there will be a runoff.

Of course it has been speculated that Lurleen Wallace, wife of the present governor, would easily capture the party position on the November ballot. Although it is too late now to change anyone's mind or primary vote — if, indeed, any Alabama voters read the DTH — we would like to share with you part of an article written for The Charlotte Observer by Charles McDowell Jr. These are the last paragraphs of an otherwise serious commentary on the Alabama primary race:

"Waiting on the sidelines is Rep. James D. Martin, a conservative Republican segregationist, who currently is favored to beat any of the Democrats, including Mrs. Wallace, in November.

"Pending the showdown, we have the feeling that not enough attention is being paid to a Democratic candidate named Eunice I. Gore. Eunice is at least as interesting a name as Lurleen, but there is the additional factor that Eunice I. Gore is a man, and says he is running because God asked him to.

"Gore — one of his campaign slogans is 'Call Me Mister' — is traveling around the state, speaking from a motor boat. He tows the boat on a trailer behind his car. And to finance his inspired campaign, Mr. Gore is selling raffle tickets with the motor boat as the prize.

"Sounds to us like a natural."

Intervention In Viet Nam Unjustified

I have spoken recently with several students who support their country's war in Viet Nam. The arguments they put forth differ, but the gist is almost always the same, and boils down to something like this: "We are in Viet Nam to prevent the communist aggressors from taking over the country by force. If we don't stop communism in Viet Nam, it will spread all over Asia."

A day after Dien Bien Phu, the representatives of the French and the Viet Minh met in Switzerland and agreed on what have since been called the Geneva Accords of 1954. By these agreements, all of Viet Nam was temporarily divided into two parts, and universal elections were to be held throughout all of Viet Nam within two years in order that the country should be reunited.

The reason for this provision should be obvious. Viet Nam is not two, but one. The present boundary between North and South has no relation to language, culture, custom, religion, or family ties. It is an artificial boundary, and to speak of the North Vietnamese as "foreigners" is absurd. They are Vietnamese, and many of them have brothers, sisters, fathers or mothers who live in the South.

The Geneva Accords also contain other important provisions, all intended to keep foreigners out of the country. Articles 16, 17, 18, and 19 ban the introduction of fresh troops, military personnel, arms, munitions, military bases, and foreign military alliances on the part of either zone.

The United States did not permit the universal elections to take place. The reason should be made clear by these astounding words, which come from no less a person than Dwight D. Eisenhower (Mandate For Change, p. 372): "I have never talked or corresponded with a person knowledgeable in Indochinese affairs who did not agree that had elections been held at the time of the fighting (1954), possibly 80 per cent of the population would have voted for the Communist Ho Chi Minh as their leader rather than Chief of State Bao Dai." And no one who knows anything about Viet Nam will deny this: had we allowed the people to decide their own destiny, Ho would have been elected by a landslide margin.

Little wonder that the communists were eagerly looking forward to the elections. Little wonder that they called the Geneva Accords a "great political victory won by a great military victory." They felt that they had all of Viet Nam in their hands, and they were perturbed (to say the least) when the United States:

1. co-operated with Diem to prevent the elections (the Dulles mentality of "rolling back" communism);
2. formed SEATO;
3. began sending troops into Viet Nam, albeit under the verbal camouflage of "advisers";
4. began building military bases in the South — all in violation of the Geneva Accords.

Well, as everyone knows, a war broke out. This country intervened massively to save the South Vietnamese government from collapse, and the situation has escalated upwards from the point in a spiral which has blown to smithereens all the earlier foolish predictions of Pentagon officials that we would be out "by the end of 1965" or "by Christmas of 1966."

We are there now, supposedly, to prevent the communists from taking over the country. And what right do we have to do that if the communists there are native to Viet Nam and if they are in the majority?

The only foreigners in Viet Nam are ourselves. There are no Chinese or Russians there. There are only Vietnamese and about a quarter of a million Americans who have no business there.

There could only be two justifications for our presence:

1. If there were other foreigners there — Chinese or Russians — as there were Chinese in Korea or Russians in Eastern Europe; 2. If the government that invites us is obviously representative of the vast majority of the people.

The government in the South today is a farce, and represents no one except itself. It has alienated the Buddhists, the Catholics, the students, the police, the soldiers, and even some of its own generals, and it loses control of nine tenths of the countryside at night. By contrast, not only is there no guerilla war in the North, but from the few films we get, we see mostly large crowds with helmets on, cheering "Uncle Ho," as they call him.

The point is this: you cannot stop communists or anyone else if they are homegrown. You have no right to do so. If you do, you are junking majority rule and the self-destiny of nations, and no little country on earth will have any sovereignty. It is as absurd to demand that the North Vietnamese should get out of the South as it is to claim that Federal troops should have gotten out of the South in the American Civil War.

In Viet Nam, the so called "aggressors" live there, and they are tearing up their country (which they have every right to do), because they were cheated out of it before. The VC are willing to hold an election this instant. Indeed, it is part of their platform, since they are confident of victory. Only our side speaks of the "impracticability" of elections now. It is easy to see why. If we lost, which we would inevitably if all of Viet Nam could speak, it would prove to the world that this huge country had gone wrong, and that several thousand of its young men died in an unjust cause.

As regards our loss of pretige and the loss of confidence in us by other little nations of the world to whom we are committed—both results, supposedly, of our immediate withdrawal—I reply only that you cannot lose what you have not got. No one in Latin America or Canada or Africa supports us. We have little support in Asia, and hardly any in Europe.

"Sit-in, lie-in, sing-in, sleep-in, yes; but starve-in – Never!"

The French spent millions of francs and thousands of lives in Algeria. No one supported them. One fine day De Gaulle picked up and pulled out completely. People have chosen to forget this incident. De Gaulle took a huge risk in pulling out: he implicitly admitted to the world that the whole mess was a blunder. Regardless of how much his actions since then have angered us, we cannot take this from him he saw the light and got out. Nor did his prestige suffer; in fact the contrary was the case.

I don't think that bombing the North will solve any of our problems. The French did not need to bomb Hanoi or Haiphong they controlled the cities. The real war is in the countryside. To "win" you must destroy the VC, who are inextricably mixed with the native population. The whole idea of a guerilla war is that "supply lines," in a conventional sense, do not exist. The only real organization is local, and the average VC gets his small arms from those he is fighting. His food he carries on his back. There is no front line in this type of war, and no over-all organization, directed from one headquarters.

General Thomas S. Power, former head of SAC, already had said that bombing of selected sites in the North would bring surrender within a few days, but years of this bombing has only consolidated support of the government in the North. Our own guerilla forces in the Philippines never suffered a casualty in three years of air strikes. "Operation Saturate" in Korea was a failure, as was the German Blitz on Britain. The Allies bombed Germany almost to ruin, but German war production rose steadily until the summer of 1944.

Even supposing that a meteor came rushing out of space and obliterated the North completely, yet still the war would go on. The substantial majority of VC in the South now are native to South Viet Nam.

Finally, I think the whole idea of "stopping communism" should be re-examined. If communists from other countries try to take over a neutral nation, then we have a right to stop them. But if they are native, we must let the country go as it will. If we are afraid to sit back and let the world choose, since it might not choose our system, then it proves that our system is rotten. We are not primarily defending capitalism. Capitalism does not work well in poor countries, and it is an open issue as to whether or not it is obsolete. But freedom and self destiny are always in vogue. We should be concerned less with stopping communism, which has done some marvelous things in certain areas of the world, and more concerened with stopping totalitarianism. If we set ourselves to this goal, we will not support the "government" in Viet Nam another day. We will pull out and let them elect whomever they wish.

Southern Fundamentalists Use 'God Is Dead' To Cover Issues

Harry Golden, editor of The Carolina Israelite, confirmed his reputation as "a man seeing the obvious before the rest of us can see it" when he related the "God Is Dead" concept to Southern Protestant guilt about segregation.

Eager to avoid dealing with this region's greatest social problem, the churches here for years have diverted their flocks' attention to matters far less important.

For years, preachers have been vainly warning Southerners about the relatively mild evils of sex, liquor and, God help us, tobacco.

Now, as shown by the recent resolution passed at church conventions, many Southern Protestants are beginning to realize that they have, in Golden's words, "backed away from (the) great moral revolution" of civil rights. And moral revolutions, mind you, are supposed to be well within the church's' realm.

But what to do? One way out is simply to say that God is dead, that God — the hallowed father figure who struck terror into the hearts of the "God Is Dead" Southerners before they "learned" he isn't alive —really wasn't watching over their church during the time it tolerated the gross immorality of racial segregation. Isn't it convenient to exonerate yourself from your guilt by insisting there has been no one around to see your wrongdoings? "The God Is Dead" thinkers may not themselves be guilty of these evils, but their consciences compel them to answer for the entire South.

Of course, if the Almighty has really passed away, there arises the question of when he died.

For instance, was He alive in the days of slavery?

Had God died by the time the Ku Klux Klan got started?

Was He alive when the churches were sanctioning the doctrine of "Separate and Unequal"?

Was God alive when Protestants bombed other Protestants' churches?

Quite likely, the "God Is Dead" Protestants in the South fervently wish He had conveniently passed away before any of these things took place.

Personlly, I believe He is still around today, and if I'm right, many "God Is Dead" Southern Protestants will be awfully embarrassed upon reaching Heaven and discovering that He was watching them all the time.

And, should God still be alive, another group will also be embarrassed — the Protestant Fundamentalist preachers who, like the Rev. B. H. Ingle of Raleigh (a former Klan member), insist Negroes will not "enter the Kingdom of God until they are white."

When these preachers reach Heaven—and they'll make it only because they were preachers — they will discover that the place was integrated long before the 1964 Civil Rights Act.

Then, they will join the professors at Emory University in wishing that God, who witnessed their sins, has been dead.

UNC Conducts

The University of North Carolina has been awarded a grant by the Office of Economic Opportunity to conduct an "UPWARD BOUND" Project.

This is pre - college preparatory program designed to generate the skills and motivation necessary for college success among young people from low - income backgrounds and inadequate elementary and secondary school preparation.

Approximately 120 rising eleventh graders from Orange and Chatham counties will spend eight weeks on the campus this summer in an intensive residentail session.

It will be conducted by a staff of administrators, faculty, and tutors, the latter of whom will live in the residence hall with the boys and girls participating in the project.

During the academic year the staff will continue to work with the participants in a follow - up prgram.

NC Symphony

The North Carolina Symphny, under the direction of Dr. Benjamin Swalin, will present its annual evening concert in Chapel Hill on Thursday, May 5, at 8:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall, with Kenji Kobayashi, violinist, as solosit.

UNC students and spouses will be admitted free through the courtesy of Graham Memorial. Otherwise, admission is by N. C. Symphony Society membership.

Two children's concerts are also on the State Symphony's schedule for Chapel Hill, one at 2:00 p.m. on May 5 in Memorial Hall, and the other at 10:00 a.m. on May 6 in Memorial Hall.

For the 8:30 p.m. performance, Dr. Swalin has planned a varied and interesting program. The first portion of the concert will be composed of Berlioz "The Corsair Overture," followed by Brahms' Concerto for Violin and Orchestra in D major, Op. 77 with Kenji Kobayashi, violist, as soloist.

Following the intermission the Orchestra will perform Bach's "Brande'nurg" Concerto No. VI, followed by Schoenberg's Vergangenes (Of The Past) and concluding with Richard Strauss' Till Eulenspiegel.

The Orchestra's appearances here are sponsored by the Chapel Hill Chapter of the North Carolina Symphony Society through the sale of memberships in the Society. Memberships not only support the children's matinee but are also valid for admission to all evening performances throughout the State that are sponsored by local chapters of the North Carolina Symphony Society.

Dr. Swalin and the State Symphony will present 50 concerts this season, of which 29 will be educational concerts for school children. In January, February and March, the North Carolina Little Symphony gave 43 children's concerts and 20 evening performances.

Pharmacists

An industrial drug researcher who holds even pharmaceutical patents will present a public lecture at the School of Pharmacy on Wednesday, May 4.

Dr. Joseph V. Swintosky, head of the pharmaceutical research section for Smith, Kline & French Laboratories in Philadelphia, will speak at 8 p.m.

His topic will be "How Drugs Are Absorbed and Excreted."

Dr. Swintosky is one of 95 young men of science chosen to take part in the 1965-66 Visiting Science Program sponsored by the American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy.

Dr. George P. Hager, dean of the UNC pharmacy school, is president of AACP.

Dr. Swintosky is an adjunct professor at the Temple University School of Pharmacy in Philadelphia. He is the author of about 55 scientific publications covering original research in pharmacy.

Thets To Build

Kappa Alpha Theta sorority has won a rezoning appeal that will enable team to build a $250,000 house at the corner of Rosemary Street and Cottage Lane.

The sorority announced plans for colonizing here last Thursday.

The zoning adjustment was made Monday night by the Board of Aldermen after the Planning Board had approved the sorority's request—against opposition from the Thetas' neighbors-to-be.

The planning board included in their approval five stipulations:

THETAS MUST donate a 10 foot easement parallel to Cottage Lane.

A PLANTING screen of at least six feet must be built around the parking lot within two years.

NO PARKING will be allowed in the area now occupied by an old house on the property.

AN 18-FOOT public easement must be maintained through both Friendly and Cottage Lanes and the house's parking lot.

Opponents of the rezoning had protested that building a sorority house in their neighborhood would disturb their peace and quiet and lower property values.

THE RADICAL AMERICANS — NET "The Angry Negro" Probing the more extreme ideologies and militant movements within the Negro community, this program seeks to explore the whole spectrum of attitudes toward how the Negro may go about attaining equal rights, freedom, education, and political power. Using the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) as the bench mark of the more militant groups, th program presents voices from the more radical. Among these are: Bill Epton, candidates for the New York Assembly, representing the Progressive Labor Party, a militant offshoot of the Communist Party USA: Daniel Watts, editor of Liberator magazine (which predicted the uprising in Watts, Los Angeles, by two months), predicting more riots throughout the U.S.; Fannie Lou Hamer, one of the founders of the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party; Julian Bond of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) refused a seat in the Georgia legislature because of his voiced opposition to the U. S. participation in the Vietnam war; John Lewis, co - founder of SNCC; Jimmy Garrett, co - founder of CORE; Andrew Young of the Southern Christian Leadership conference; and the Honorable Elijah Muhammad, the last Messenger of Allah to the so - called American Negroes — a movement popularly known as the Black Muslims.

SCIENCE AND NATURE — UNC-CH "Earth and its Sturcture" Dr. David Dunn, geologist at the University at Chapel Hill, notes that in the Space Age we are primarily concerned with satellites and spaceships, leaving the earth and exploring beyond; however, here he provides a look in the other direction — taking viewers inside the earth for a new adventure, to discover what manner of "ball" is this—on which we stand. Moderator-host for this series is James Wadsworth of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

SING HI, SING LO — NET "Farms" Music and folklore of America is presented through folk dances and folk song during this series of 52 programs designed for youngsters. Guitarist Bash Kennet plays and sings familiar folksongs and some lesser known ones that are none the less descriptive of America's past. She is joined on each program by a group of young dancers who further interpret music of the past. The opening program illustrates life on the farm in the early days of our history and provides a comparison to modern specialized farming methods.

BLACK GOLD — PART II Produced on-location in the small Ohio community Mt. Gilead, this program continues documentation of the effects on this town of the discovery of oil in the area. Dealing with the latter days of the oil rush in Mt. Gilead, the program traces the actions the townspeople took to finally overcome threats to the well being of community relations—laws passed and enforced returned the town to a more normal atmosphere, although the smell and profit of oil hangs on. Produced by WOSU-TV, Columbus, Ohio, this program received the special Readers' Digest Award.

AT ISSUE: NIKE X — NET This hour-long program presents a detailed report on the very important nationwide controversy regarding a proposed anti-missile defense system for this country which would cost an estimated $30 billion and would involve a nationwide fallout shelter program.

Six Female Students Will Enter

UNC School Of Medicine Next Fall

Six of the 70 new medical students will be female. The largest previous female representation was in the class entering in 1964, with four females.

The total number of females studying medicine will rise to 17 here next year. This, too, will be record -setting. This year the school has 13 women doctors - to - be.

The new group of medical students will come from 34 counties and eight other states. Wake County, with seven members of the class, has the largest county delegation. Orange and Rowan counties each will have four residents in the class.

About four of every seven in the Class of 1970 are completing their pre - medical studies at UNC here. Seven will come here from Davidson College and five from Duke University.

Twenty - three colleges and universities will be represented in the new medical school class.

The 70 new students were chosen from more than 650 applicants.

Dream Study Shows Men Prefer Status

By WILL BERNARDIN

It's the lion who does the lion's share of status seeking in American society.

Dr. Robert Van deCastle, a UNC psychologist says that judging by the 1,000 dreams analyzed in his new book, The Content Analysis of Dreams, "men are much more interested in status than women are."

Van deCastle, former associate director of the Institute of Dream Research in Miami, Fla., co - authored the book with Dr. Calvin S. Hall, director of the Institute.

Men see and describe people according to obvious status symbols, like cars, money and position, he says; and women are alert to physical appearances and less apparent symbols of status.

The book lists, 1,170 different objects that turned up in dreams, and notes their frequency for each sex.

The authors have tried to give other dream researchrs a standard by which to judge whether subjects are dreaming abnormally or not.

Obvious status symbols came out heavy on the men's side — cars, for instance, 86 in men's dreams to 63 in women's; airplanes 16 to 8; foreign countires 25 to 5 and money 27 to 16.

But status isn't the only thing measured in these particular figures, says Van deCastle, though he feels that it is the most important.

Men are naturally interested in cars and airplanes, he says and generally are more curious and ready to travel (Highway were 12 to 1 for men and home 71 to 47 for women.)

So anothe. thing that the figures measure is the natural interests of each sex — men in travel and mechanical workings, and women in the home and family.

Supporting the idea that women are more interested in physical apperances, or the less obvious symbols of class standing, is the female - dominated 31 to 8 figure for occurence of dresses and clothing; 32 to 14 for faces; and 24 to 8 of hair.

These are not status - oriented ways of describing people.

Men are much more likely to identify other individuals on the basis of the occupations they engage in, and are more concerned with success and failure in these terms.

Dodd's Former Secretary Says She Pulled Files

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP)-Sen. Thomas J. Dodd's former personal secretary was quoted by a newspaper yesterday as saying she helped columnists Drew Pearson and Jack Anderson to get information about the Connecticut Democrat.

The New Haven Journal-Courier said the ex-secretary, Marjorie Carpenter, related that other Dodd staff members also helped the columnists obtain data from the senator,s private files.

"Each of us, in our own way, became disenchanted with him," she was quoted as saying.

The Journal-Courier said Mrs. Carpenter, by telephone from Washington, told an interviewer she expected to testify at hearings of the Senate ethics committee.

The committee, acting on Dodd's request, is investigating charges made against him in the syndicated columns of Pearson and Anderson.

These charges included the accusation that Dodd performed favors for a lobbyist paid by the West German government. After the committee began its work, the columnists added the charge that Dodd made personal use of funds from dinners held to raise campaign funds.

Dodd said some weeks ago the charges were distortions by Pearson and Anderson of information taken from his files by members of his staff without his permission.

Mrs. Carpenter said that assisting Pearson and Anderson "was a very difficult thing to decide. It was a terrible chance we took."

They decided to do it, she said, because "what we had seen was so important" and "we were given an opportunity to do something about it."

Another former member of the Dodd staff, James P Boyd Jr., was quoted by the newspaper as saying thet Pearson and Anderson were correct in reporting recently that former employees of the senator have been harassed.

Boyd noted that he recently lost his job on the staff of the House Public Works Committee. He was informed that it was because the appropriation had run out but that "seems to be too much of a coincidence," Boyd said.

Federal Agency Grants NC Funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Office of Education has approved grants totaling more more than $4 million for construction of new buildings at 10 North Carolina Colleges.

The action was announced Tuesday through Sen. B. Everett Jordan, D-N.C. Total cost of the buildings will amount to more than $14.5 million.

The grants:

N.C. State University, Raleigh, for $2,758,049 physical education building, grant of $467,225.

Davidson County Community College, Lexington, for $1,041,295 classroom and administration building, grant of $350,000.

Wilkes Community College, Wilkesboro, for $1,730,000 total for three classroom buildings, a grant of $350,000.

N.C. College at Durham, for $765,000 chemistry building, grant of $255,000.

Fayetteville State College at Fayettevelle, for $431,000 science building, grant of $143,667.

Wilmington College at Wilmington, for two new academic buildings and renovation of three classroom laboratories at a total cost of $800,000, grant of $143,667.

Methodist College at Fayetteville, for fine arts building and administration building to cost total of $1,310,402, grant of $360,000.

US Hits Viet Cong Units In Cambodia

SAIGON (AP) — B52 bombers pounded enemy positions near the Cambodian border yesterday ahead of the U. S. 1st division, which appeared to be closing one southern exit of the Ho Chi Minh trial after seizing the largest Viet Cong supply dumps ever captured in the war.

As the Stratofortresses bombed Viet Cong storage and supply areas 75 miles northwest of Saigon, the U. S. command conceded for the first time that the "big red one" division had sent a heavy artillery barrage hurtling into Viet Cong positions in Cambodia. That was Saturday after the Viet Cong in Cambodia had fired on U. S. positions.

A U. S. spokesman said the 1st division had killed 83 Viet Cong and captured 13 in nine days of what is called Operation Birmingham. American casualties were described as light.

In a second operation 170 miles northeast of Saigon, the 101st Airborne Division has killed 192 Viet Cong, captured 44 and detained 280 suspects in an operation that began March 25, the spokesman said.

On the political front, Premier Nguyen Cao Ky indicated on a visit to the northern air base at Quang Ngai that the general elections promised by September at the latest may be postponed.

"We will try to hold the elections by October," he told a reporter. The elections will give South Viet Nam a civilian government, as demanded by Buddhists.

The B52 raids on the Southern exits of the Ho Chi Minh trial — the main supply route from Communist North Viet Nam — were designed to put storage terminal out of action and were in their third successive day.

Earlier, B52 raids on North Viet Nam hammered Mu Gia pass in an effort to block the northern end of the trail, bringing a North Vietnamese charge that the United States was trying to spread the war to Laos. The pass is between North Viet Nam and Laos, along whose eastern border the trail winds down to South Viet Nam.

The fact that U. S. artillery fire had been directed into Cambodia was reported from the front last Saturday, but the U. S. command had never acknowledged this, apparently because Cambodia is a touchy neutral.

A U. S. military spokesman said a U. S. battalion ran into heavy Viet Cong fire from mortars and automatic weapons in Cambodia as it approached the village of Lo Go. The village lies on the Cai Bac river separating South Viet Nam and Cambodia.

The battalion commander called for artillery support and U. S. artillery unloaded a heavy volume of 105MM shells into the jungles of Cambodia, silencing the enemy fire. The spokesman said the Cambodian area contained no villages.

Cambodia has denied the Viet Cong use of its wild frontier as a refuge, and has frequently accused the United States and South Viet Nam of violating its order.

The spokesman announced the 1st division's haul of Viet Cong supplies now had reached 1,367 tons of rice, 6,800 Viet Cong uniforms, 1,925 gallons of fuel, 1,000 punds of medical supplies, 35 sampans and 19 boats with motors.

In the drive, the 1st has overrun 27 base camps and destroyed 695 buildings and huts. Also seized were quantities of mortar shells, grenades and small arms ammunition.

A U. S. Military spokesman said he believed the Viet Cong were critically short of supplies. He advanced this as one reason for the lack of all but minor ground contact with the enemy for the last three weeks.

"I believe the Viet Cong just don't have the supplies to support the troops they have here," he said. "We have captured a lot of their supplies."

Hanoi's radio, broadcasting a statement by the North Vietnamese foreign ministry, charged the United States with making B52 bombing raids on Laos and said it was part of a plan to intensify and expand the war to that country.

In the air war over North Viet Nam, a Navy skyraider was shot down by enemy ground fire 10 miles northeast of Vinh Monday, the U. S. spokesman said. The pilot parachuted and is listed as missing. Two other pilots shot down over the north were rescued the same day.

Despite bad weather, U. S. Navy pilots carried out 27 missions over North Viet Nam and the air Force eight missions Monday, attacking highways, staging areas, storage and river traffic. It was on one of these missions that Navy pilots reported obliterating a missile site and knocking out two rocket launchers.

The tempo of aerial warfare was swifter in South Viet Nam. Navy, Marine and Air Force planes carried out 305 sorties — or individual flights —in attacks on enemy troop and bases.

Two Air Force B57 Canberras claimed they wiped out a Viet Cong camp 40 miles southeast of Da Nang. A provincial chief, who tipped off the Air Force said about 300 Viet Cong were in the camp at the time of the air raid.

Capt. Merlin X. Smith, 31, Lafayette, La., forward air controller, said the Canberras destroyed 36 buildings and damaged four. He added that there was one large explosion, followed by two smaller ones.

U. S. 3rd division Marines operating 20 miles south of Da Nang shot up small Viet Cong units with artillery. The Marines now claim 76 enemy killed, 20 captured and 233 suspects seized in the 13 days of the operation. Marine casualties were light.

U. S. 7th fleet gunfire slackened, only two ships firing in support of ground forces inland.

The destroyer Ernest G. Small blasted Viet Cong infiltration routes with 120 rounds of five - inch shells in the Vietnamese 3rd corps area in the south. In the extreme north, the support ship Carronade fired 190 five - inch rockets at Viet Cong concentration points in the Vietnamese 1st corps area.

In Saigon, a Vietnamese policeman was wounded when a terrorist hurled a grenade near the national police headquarters in the center of the capital. By unofficial count, it was the 24th grenade attack in the Saigon metropolitan area since April 1.

Two Scientists Discover Cell Defense Of Virus Infection

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two scientists, one a 19-year-old college dropout, reported yesterday that they have found the apparent way living cells fight off virus invasion.

Cells under attack produce a substance, interferon, that blocks translation of the genetic message carried by the viruses, said Dr. Philip I. Marcus and Jesse M. Salb of Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York City.

Marcus is an associate professor of microbiology and immunology. Salb is a laboratory assistant who until recently had worked with Marcus each summer since 1961. They described the results of their research to the American Society for Microbiology.

Viruses attack target cells by introducing their own genetic material — RNA or DNA — into the cell, forcing the cell to produce viral messenger — RNA that instructs the cell to make proteins for viruses.

The virus infection, however, also stimulates cells to produce interferon, a protective protein.

Marcus and Salb find that interferon induces the cell to produce another protein — which they call translational inhibitory protein. This protein apparently binds to ribosomes, the cell's protein factories, and blocks the translation of "orders" contained in the virus messenger — RNA, they said.

Interferon can block production of viral RNA without disturbing production of the cell's own kind of RNA. Just how the cell can distinguish between its own messenger—RNA and viral RNA hasn't been determined.

Young Salb, at 14, approached Marcus in July,1961, saying, "I've read all your papers and I wonder if I could work for you during the summer," Marcus recalled. Marcus said Salb had a home laboratory and was performihg "very sophisticated experiments for a boy his age."

He attended City College of New York in 1964-65, while working in the laboratory, but did rather poorly in biology, the medical college said. He was co-author with Marcus of an intricate research report published last November in proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Dr. Marcus D. Kogel, Dean of Albert Einstein College of Medicine, said the staff is urging Salb to continue his formal education.

"Although a college dropout, the boy is intellectually on the level of a young Ph.D. who has been able to open new areas of knowledge in a most complicated field, and who cannot afford to spend the time to meet formal requirements set for ordinary students," he added.

Low-flying Plane Snatches Three Men On Long Line

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — A cargo plane snatched three men from the desert by cable yesterday in daring tests of a new way of rescuing downed fliers and astronauts.

Air Force Capt. Gerald T. LyVere, 48, was the first to be subjected to a jerk of six G's — six times the normal pull of gravity — as a four engine cargo plane swooped low and snagged a nylon line running from a balloon down to a harness stitched into Ly-Vere's flight suit.

The plane circled and snatched simultaneously two other men — Col Allison Brooks said after landing. "It was surprisingly comfortable on the end of that line, after the first fast lift.

"I had been expecting something terrific when the plane hit the cable, but I was not aware of a jerk or even any acceleration. I'd like to do it again."

Brooks said the recovery method has definite applications for wars such as that in Viet Nam — "assuming there is enough time for the subject to get ready on the surface."

He said ground preparation time could re reduced to 15 minutes with the kind of training military men are to be given when the system becomes operational June 30.

In a real - life situation, the cargo plane parachutes two packages to the downed flier. One package contains helium to inflate a small balloon. The other contains the balloon, a nylon cable and a body harness integrated into a bright orange flight suit.

The pilot first gets into the suit, inflates the balloon, which ascends to a height of 500 feet. The end of the line is attached to flight suit.

The line is locked into the fork and the man on the ground is lifted into the air.

Crewmen standing in an open door at the rear of the plane lower a weighted hook and snag the line, pull it up and fasten it to a winch. The winch reels the subject into the plane.

The same procedure was used to pick up Brooks and Doll, both of whom were attached to the end of one line and hooked together at the belts of their flight suits.

An Air Force spokesman said the Lockheed HC130H can fly more than 2,000 miles from its base, loiter long enough to locate a downed flier and rescue as many as five men in one- or two-man pickups from land or sea and return home.

The number that can be rescued by one plane is limited by the number of recovery packages the plane can carry.

Thurmond Says Civil Rights Bill Changes Criminal Laws

WASHINGTON (AP)—Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., said new civil right bill won't make it a federal crime to beat your wife unless she says she was engaged in civil rights work when you beat her.

"The bill creates a new class of federal protectorate by establishing a whole new series of criminal offenses based not on the act committed but on the identity of the person against whom the act is committed," he added in a statement.

"Not all the provisions of this bill are aimed directly at the South. Perhaps this time the constitutional objections will be more discernable to members of Congress from outside the South than was the case in 1964.

Under Title II, the national government would, in effect, prescribe procedures and qualifications for selecting jurors for all state courts down to and including city recorder courts.

Title II would empower the attorney general to bring suits in federal courts to desegregate schools and other public facilities even when he had no complaints."

Another senator, Sam . Erwin, D-N.C., told the Senate he'd hoped Congress could have one session without civil rights proposals.

"It falls to my unhappy lot to be the chairman of the civil rights subcommitte of the Senate Judiciary Committee to which all civil rights bills come," he said. "And it falls to my unhappy lot to analyze a bill which the Department of Justice had 600 or 800 lawyers to draw.

"I'd hope one session of Congress could be without civil rights proposals because every civil rights bill to come before Congress does violence to the American system of government, providing one minority of the United States should be singled out and given rights and privileges."

Gregory Given Sentence For Civil Rights Arrest

CHICAGO (AP) — Entertainer Dick Gregory was sentenced to five months in the Cook County (Chicago) jail and fined $1,400 yesterday on charges of resisting arrest and of battery during a civil rights demonstration June 11, 1965.

Magistrate Maurice W. Lee in circuit court, in passing sentence on the Negro comedian, said that although Gregory contended he was exercising his consititutional right "No one has the right to break the law."

Gregory's attorney, Mrs. Jean Williams, asked the magistrate to permit a stay in the jail sentence. Lee denied the request. Mrs. Williams then said that she would appeal the verdict to the Illinois supreme court and that "even the most wanton criminal" is granted a stay in such a case.

Mrs. Williams also argued that "it would be expedient to have Gregory" out of circulation during the forth-coming election "campaign."

After spending more than an hour in a criminal court cell, Gregory was released on $5,000 appeal bond. He told newsmen he spent most of the time in the cell sleeping because "I'm just getting used to this sort of thing."

Gregory was convicted in a jury trial April 22 on two charges each of battery and resisting arrest. He was accused of biting the police during his arrest and the arrests of some 220 other demonstrators who were protesting against the administration of school Superintendent Benjamin C. Willis.

Regarding Mrs. Williams' claim that Gregory was convicted for political reasons, Jack Micheletto, asst. state's attorney, said: "He is being tried for the specific charges of resisting arrest and battery, not because he is a candidate for Mayor."

Gregory has announced plans to oppose Mayor Richard J. Daley in the Chicago mayoral election of 1967.

Illinois will have a primary June 14, 1966, for nominating candidates for U. S. Senator, Congress, state legislature and two statewide offices — treasurer and state school superintendent — in the election of Nov. 8.

Chicago will have a primary to nominate candidates for mayor Feb. 28, 1967. A mayor will be elected April 4, 1967.

UNC Signs Charlie Scott

LAURINBURG, N. C. (AP) — Charlie Scott, widely sought scholastic basketball player, said yesterday he had signed a full scholarship agreement with UNC.

Scott, bespectacled New York City Negro, was believed headed for Davidson College, which had signed him to a letter of intent last winer.

Scott, who is 6-foot-5 and weighs 175, starred for the Laurinburg Institute team last season.

The signing becomes binding May 17, the effective date for the so-called national letter of intent.

Scott said he had received queries from 93 colleges.

"I cut this list to 10, then to three— Davidson, Duke and North Carolina," he said.

"I visited Chapel Hill last March and again last weekend. I like Chapel Hil and the students. They seem much more cosmopolitan.

"I told Coach Lefty Driesell at Davidson of my decision last Monday. I think a lot of him and I hope we will remain friends.

Golf, Tennis Teams Post Victories, Lacrosse Beaten

Golf and tennis triumphed in weekend sports action for Carolina, but the lacrosse team took it on the chin.

Saturday Don Skakle's tennis team drubbed South Carolina, 9-0. The victory ran the team's record to 19-1 and was the 12th win in a row. The match finished the regular season, with the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament remaining to be played from May 12-14.

The golf team played host to VPI at Finley Golf Course Friday and posted a 15 1-2 - 5 -1-2 win, increasing the record to 9-2, not including yesterday's match with Duke.

The lacrosse team traveled to College Park to tangle with always - strong Maryland on Saturday. They received a 18-0 shellacking for their trip, their fifth loss in six games.

Magic Number Now Two; Bonczek, Carr Key Win

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

"Moonbeam" was really on the beam yesterday.

The tough Tar Heel lefthander spent the afternoon shooting blanks at Wake Forest bats, as Carolina downed the Deacons 4-0 and reduced their "magic number" to two.

In order to annex the ACC baseball title for the second time in three years, the Heels must win but two of their remaining four league games. Only two more steps are left, and Moonbeam took a very big one for UNC yesterday.

The six - foot, 185 - pounder from Kings Mountain fired an impressive four - hitter at the Deacs, fanning four, walking only one and effectively scattering four singles.

In no inning did Wake put more than one man on base, and only once were they able to advance a runner as far as second. That was in the first inning, when Bill Myers singled with one away and moved up on an infield out.

Beattie yielded singles in the first, third, seventh and eighth, and gave up his only base on balls in the fourth. After walking opposing pitcher Steve Wreenn with one out in the fourth, Leonard retired 10 batters in succession until Don Rich ripped an infield hit off his glove with two down in the seventh. Only six fly balls were struck by WF, none of which threatented to go out.

Beattie also rapped a double in the second.

Bonczek, Carr Lead Attack

Bob Bonczek and Charlie Carr provided some lusty hitting in support of Leonard's sterling effort. "Snapper" smashed a pair of RBI doubles in the first and fifth, and Carr clubbed his third home run of the year in the second and added a single in the sixth. Bonczek lifted his average to .316, and Carr's zoomed to .345. Each has 15 RBI.

Danny Talbott cracked his eighth double of the year for his 18th RBI in the fifth, that being his only hit of the game as his average "dropped" to an even .400.

Cole Collared

Wake Forest's Tommy Cole, who entered the game leading the club in hitting at .357, was blanked by Leonard. So was opposing pitcher Steve Wrenn (4-2), who is the Deacs' second-best hitter and runner-up in the ACC with eight homers.

Early UNC Lead

Hume led off in the first by attempting a drag bunt. The ball was popped halfway down the first base line, about five feet fair. Wrenn came off the mound and tried to spear it in flight, but the best he could was to get his glove on it as he dove.

Wrenn fanned Mike McLaughlin for the first of three times, and disposed of Talbott on a bouncer to short as Hume advanced to second. Then Bonczek found the alley in right-center with a line drive which went for a double and scored Hume.

Carr Poles Homer

Carr, who blasted a two-run homer which provided the eventual winning margin in the 5-3 win over Clemson last Saturday, was the first batter up in the home half of the second. He took a few pitches to size up Wrenn, and then served the big lefty's third offering deep over the left field screen for his third homer of the year. Leonard also added his two - out double to the inning, but was left stranded.

Hume "Bleeds"

Carolina collected no more hits off Wrenn until there was one out in the fifth. Hume then stepped to the plate and dropped a second bunt along third. Wrenn, catcher Bill Molloy and third baseman Sonny Swails charged the ball and hovered over it in hopes that it would roll foul.

But Humey had the ball "trained," and it hugged the line to give gridder - turned-baseballer his second "bleeder" hit.

Hume stole second with McLaughlin batting, and came around to score on Talbott's booming two - bagger to the 362 - mark in left center. Moments later, Bonczek exploded on a pitch and drove his second double over Cole's head in center. Talbott scored easily to conclude the run-making.

Carolina next plays at Maryland this Friday, and moves to Virginia Saturday. Both games will be broadcast by WCHL - Radio. A sweep of the northern series would clinch the ACC championship for UNC.

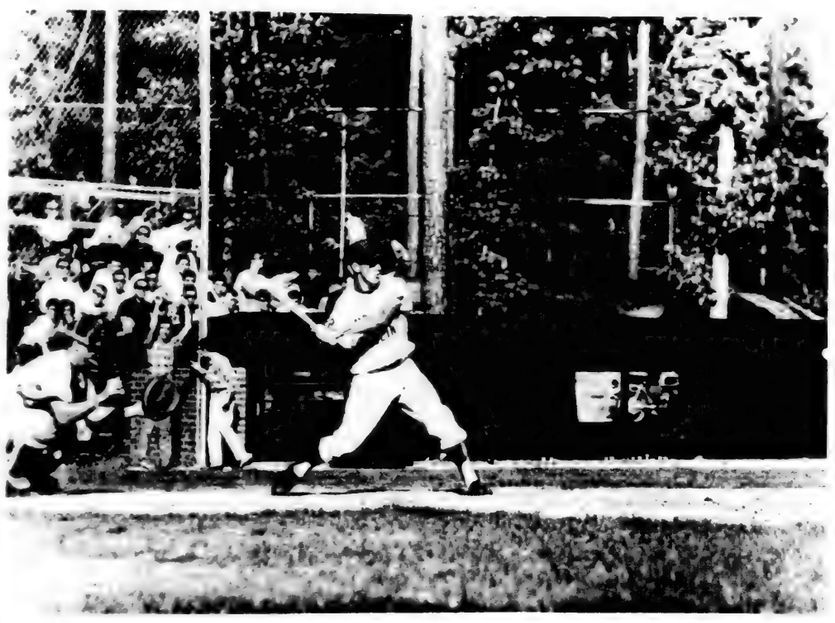
BEATTIE "MOONBEAM" LEONARD goes into his stretch while pitching a four-hit, 4-0 shutout over Wake Forest yesterday. Leonard upped his record to 4-3 with his second shutout of the year, which eliminated the Deacons from title contention.



BOB BONCZEK STRIDES into a Steve Wrenn pitch in the first inning of yesterday's 4-0 UNC win over Wake Forest. "Snapper" connected for one of his two RBI doubles a split-second later, providing the biggest stick in the victory.

Big Four Sport At Wake

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Carolina sends a flock of athletes to Wake Forest today for the 20th annual Big Four Sports Day with Wake, State and Duke. Events will be held in golf, tennis, horseshoes, handball, softball, table tennis, volleyball, badminton, bowling and rod and gun.

The intramural office requests that anyone who feels he is particularly good in one of these categories come by the office this morning. The bus will leave at 11:15. Although most teams are set, the addition of a couple more men will help considerably.

Representing UNC in badminton are John Long, Mercer Reynolds, John Edgerton and Sam Littlejohn. In table tennis, Bill Field, Joe Harriman, Dan Dworkin, Thurston Cobb, Enoch Wei and Essa Abdulla compose the UNC team.

Tom Krones, Woody Bowen, Ira Shapiro and Billy Broadfoot make up the bowling entry. Buddy Dixon, Charlie Lynch, Jerry Davis, Chip Smith and Bob Kulp will tee off in golf.

Ken Galloway and Bob O'Quinn will shoot target rifle, Charles Payne and Jerry Brake will shoot archery and Hunter Galloway and Tom Kaiser will handle trap shooting.

In volleyball, Al Ellis, Bob Coleman, Chuck Gore, Buddy Sesenbach, Bill Early, Tim Carr, John Wainio, Jim Smith, Ned Faulkner, Al Westerland and Bill Day will compete for UNC.

State has won the affair for the last five years.

Managers Interviewed

The Intramural Department will be interviewing all boys interested in becoming intramural managers next year in residence halls on Tuesday - Thursday, May 12-14 from 1:30-3:00 p.m. Applications may be picked up at the office in Woollen Gym Monday through Friday from 1-6 p.m.

The positions are paid, equivalent to a year's room rent.

HOLLYWOOD, (AP) — Actor George Hamilton plans to visit Viet Nam and entertain troops, probably in mid - June.

He is starting a movie Monday and this will take nearly eight weeks, a spokesman at MGM studio said.

Outstanding Law Students Receive Awards At Banquet

Outstanding law students were recognized here Monday night when the UNC Law School held its annual awards banquet.

William M. Allen Jr. of Elkin, president of the Student Bar Association which sponsors the event, presided at the dinner at the Carolina Inn.

A number of different awards were presented, and the staff of next year's North Carolina Law Review was named.

Serving as Law Review editor will be John Troy Smith Jr., of Charlotte. Ralph Kinsey Jr., also of Charlotte, will be business manager. Associate editors will include Martin Erwin of Lexington, John Jolly Jr. of Charlotte and John Garrou of Valdese. Thomas Smith of Pittsburgh, Pa., was named as research editor.

William L. Stocks of Greenville was named as recipient of the Lawyers Title Award, given to the senior with the highest average grade in the three property courses.

Five seniors were presented the Chief Justice Walter Clark Awards, given by his son John W. Clark, to the five seniors with the highest cumulative average during their first five semesters. Named were Doris R. Brady of Reidsville, William L. Stocks of Greenville, Charles B. Robson Jr. of Chapel Hill, William S. Lowndes of Durham and Thomas C. Wettach of Sewickley, Pa.

Chosen as winner of the Block Improvement Award was Thomas J. Bolch of Hickory. This award is given by Greensboro attorney Norman Block and was established in memory of his father Max Edward Block. It is given to the senior who has made the most consistent improvement throughout his law school career.

Ray Russell of Guatemala City, Guat., was selected to receive the Van Hecke-Wettach Citizenship Award presented to a student who has performed the greatest service for the students and the school during the year. The award is given in memory of the late professors M. T. Van Hecke and Robert Wettach.

Teachers Try Paying Students For Learning

STANFORD, Calif. (UPI) — How do you get a bright teenager from the slums to go to college when he hates school and gets poor grades?

A group from Stanford University has come up with an idea that seems to work — pay the student $1 an hour for attending class, with bonuses for good grades.

The pay-for-study plan was started last fall as a private experiment by a few staff members and graduate students at the Counselling and Testing Center at Stanford. They are paying the bill themselves.

They picked three students who were regarded as poor college risks because of their high school grades, but who showed exceptional potential.

As the school year draws to a close, all three are reported doing well. One of them plans to become a teacher.

Co-ordinator of the program, Dr. Bernadene Allen of the center, explained that many bright students living in a ghetto environment see higher education as an impossible attainment.

"What we did was to offer these students a 'job' which required that they go to college," she said.

The students were enrolled at the College of San Mateo. One of them was so doubtful about waiting for his pay that he would stop by Mrs. Allen's home every night to collect it.

After the first week, he felt confident enough to shift to a weekly paycheck.

One of the other students recently asked to have his pay stopped, explaining that he no longer needed such an incentive.

"Many youngsters in these families have great potential, but unless they are assisted they are apt to succumb to their common heritage of failure, defeat and discouragement," Dr. Allen said.

She admitted that such a system of rewards is not as good as the daily interest, concern and prompting that middle class parents give their children.

But in the absence of such boosting, pay seems one answer. The payment for class hours and bonuses for good grades are only part of the battle, she said. Many simple problems can become mountains of discouragement for such impoverished youngsters.

"They do not know, for example, that one can get a temporary loan to pay for a textbook," she said. "They do not know to go to teachers for advice, because they have never talked to teachers."

And Dr. Allen is ready at the first sign of faltering to give counsel and advice.

Morrison Named No. 1 On Campus

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

The long - standing battle between Big Mo and Maverick House was settled for this year last night at the annual awards program of the MRC as Morrison was named the Outstanding Residence College for 1965-66.

In addition, "Mighty Mo," the Morrison College newspaper, received the Outstanding Newspaper Award. In presenting the award, retiring MRC president Sonny Pepper said, "The only problem with the paper is that it was not published often enough." He added, "The Mighty Mo presented more than rehashed Playboy jokes."

The Most Outstanding Residence Hall was Mangum, cited in particular for its high percentage of intramural participation.

A new award given this year was the Roger A. Davis Memorial Award for Outstanding Service. A permanent plaque for this award will be placed in the lobby of Craige Residence College, where Davis was a resident until his death last fall.

Pepper received this award as well as the President's Plaque, which is traditionally given to the outgoing MRC president. The awards were presented to Pepper for his work in helping to establish the residence college system on a firm basis.

The Craige Heart Fund Walk was named the Outstanding Service Project.

Parker was the Most Improved Residence Hall, and Morehead College was the Most Improved Residence College. Craige ran first runner-up in the Residence Hall division and Scott College in the Residence College division.

Parker President Bob Farris was named Outstanding Residence Hall President. Scott College's Bob Hunter received the award for Outstanding Residence College Governor.

Pepper cited three areas of accomplishment in this year's MRC work. First, he pointed out the Women's Visiting Agreement, calling it a milestone for residence halls.

Second, Pepper mentioned the increase in residence hall student fees to add financial support to residence halls and colleges. Finally, he said that this year's MRC had laid the groundwork for a complete residence hall system.

Sophomore Injured By Flying Glass

Hubert Parrott, of Kinston, N. C., said he heard bottles being broken outside the Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house, where he lives, and went to the third floor bathroom window to look out.

When he did, a bottle few through the window, shattered as it hit a foot-and-a-half from his face and sent splinters flying into his eye.

Parrot went to the infirmary where the splinters were removed. Wendesday, he said he was seeing alright.

Dean Long said that disciplinary action may follow an investigation. No one has been accused so far.

GOP Views Wallace Win As Expected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Alabama Republicans took the view today that temporary emotional factors propelled Mrs. Lurleen Wallace to her sweeping victory in the state Democratic primary and that their party's chances of winning the Governorship are bright.

"I think there will be a different story in the fall, Rep. James H. Buchanan of Birmingham said in an interview. Bucchanan is one of five Republicans elected to Congress from Alabama last year.

Mrs. Wallace, who made it clear Gov. George C. Wallace will continue to run things if she is elected, outdistanced nine male opponents and captured a majority vote for the Democratic nomination for governor in Tuesday's primary.

Rummer-up but still far behind was State Atty. Gen. Richmond Flowers who had openly bid for the Negro vote and received strong support in Negro voting precincts.

It was the first major voting in the South since enactment of the 1965 Voting Rights Law, and Negroes made their strength felt in many local offices. A Negro was nominated for the legislature and three Negroes ran ahead in races for sheriff.

A FEW TENSE MOMENTS and it was all over — and not so bad afterall. These girls have just finished their interviews in bidding for model positions for Mademoiselle Magazine. Of the 130 who were interviewed yesterday, only four or five will be selected.

130 'Model' Coeds Vie For Mademoiselle Pix

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

There it was, right on the front page of The Daily Tar Heel — "Models needed for Mademoiselle Magazine, THE magazine for fashion - conscious coeds." The announcement did not go unnoticed by Carolina coeds and 130 of them signed up for a Wednesday afternoon interview.

By virtue of the fact that I'm a reporter and somewhat incidentally a girl, I ventured over to Gerrard Hall, notebook in hand, to see how the interviews were going.

Say what you will about the Carolina coed, Carolina Gentleman. They looked fashionable, and Nonnie Moore, sportswear editor of Mademoiselle was most complimentary about the girls who had come for interviews. She and photographer George Barkentin said they had found the girls "most attractive and nice." Unfortunately, only four or five will be selected for the August "Back To College" issue of Mademoiselle, not ten as was originally announced.

Zackie Murphy, a member of the Mademoiselle College Board and a model for the magazine herself greeted the girls at the door — girls with carefully made up faces and nervous smiles. They were handed little pink cards to fill out with necessary information. No, not that necessary information, just name, height, dress size, weight, hair color and class.

The interview consisted of the girls walking up to the table Nonnie Moore and Barkentin were seated at, handing them the pink card, the entire groups exchanging smiles, and the Mademoiselle representatives nodding and saying "thank you very much."

After this extensive interrogation, the girls could leave. Some were asked to return at 6:30 p.m. to try on the clothes, "really wild" as Zackie put it. Barkentin said it was largely a matter of finding the girls to fit the clothes.

The girls selected will appear in the August issue tenpage spread on Carolina. The other school selected to be featured was "William and Mary." This particular issue is actually edited by 20 college girls selected as editors.

As a final flourish I decided to get comments from some of the observers in Y-Court who had been there "Oh, a couple of hours." One boy, leaning back heavily, folding his arms and gazing meditatively into the sky said . . . "Oh, if only that were the door to my apartment."

Correspondence Courses Offer Students Credit

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

This summer any Carolina student can complete one or two correspondence courses for credit from a selection of over 100 courses that are offered through the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction.

Each course consists of about 24 assignments which must be mailed in — no more than four a week — and a final exam which must be taken under the supervision of an administrative official.

A student should generally allow three hours a day to finish one course in six weeks, which is the minimum amount of time in which a course may be taken.

A student may take up to 13 months to complete a course, but cannot take the course while he is enrolled in classes here at the University unless he receives the written consent of the dean of his school.

Miss Mary Elizabeth Henry, head of the Bureau of Correspondence Instruction, said, "I advise students who will be working this summer and would like to take a correspondence course to begin by taking only one course and decide later if they will have time to complete another one before classes begin in the fall."

Miss Henry recommends that students who need to earn quality points should enroll in the courses in which they have made the best grades.

"It calls for a student's own self-dicipline to get through the correspondence course, Miss Henry said.

Fees for the courses are payable when the student enrolls and usually runs about $36 for a three-hour course. These fees cover the cost of the preparation and grading of the course assignments by members of the faculty.

The required texts listed with each course should be brought through the Bureau which keeps the edition of the text on which the course is based.

The final exam may be taken when the student returns here in the fall. Exams are scheduled by the Bureau every Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

Information and catalogues on correspondence instruction may be obtained in Abernathy Hall.

'Jeff's' Pushes Playboys Monthly

STUDENTS BROWZE through the offerings at Jeff's. Best seller is Playboy, which goes at the rate of 1,600 every month—and the customers buy it "inside" unseen.

By JOHN GREENBACKER

"Jeff's Campus Confectionery" the painted gold sign on the front window proclaims.

The real spice inside, however, is not the candy which lies neatly wrapped in rows on the counter.

"I sell 1,600 Playboys every month," proprietor James A. "Jimmy" Mousmoules said in a matter - of - fact tone of voice early one spring morning.

Mousmoules, a thick - set middle - aged man with burly arms, has been running the newsstand - soda shop for 17 years since his uncle died.

"This place sells more magazines than any newsstand in this part of the country," he said with more emphasis. "I don't even know how many kinds of magazines I sell."

Taking up a third of the wall next to the front door is a magazine rack that must hold about 40 different publications. On rotating racks nearby are at least 50 different types of salacious paperback novels.

"We have young college boys for customers," Mousmoules said. "If they don't go here they'd go to Durham to buy it."

He said he hasn't had ny trouble with little old ladies with umbrellas.

Mousmoules doesn't know which magazines will be put in stock and which will be taken out. It's the job of the distributer to keep the racks filled with everything from Popular Mechanics to Pain Lusters.

"Playboy is the only magazine the students will buy without looking at it," he said.

Every afternoon students file into the store and thumb through the magazines, trying desperately not to be recognized by their fellows.

"The same guys that come here and look at the magazines in the afternoon are the same guys who come back at night and buy three or four dollars' worth," Mousmoules said.

Tht titles catered to any interest: Escape; Adam; Pix; The National Informer; Man To Man; Sexology; Realities; Muscular Development; Harpers; The Atlantic; Track and Road; Rogue; The New Yorker.

"We run an over-the-counter business here," Mousmoules hastily clarified.

Jeff's has been in business since 1927 at the same location. It was originally owned by Mousmoules' uncle and father.

"We've been selling beer longer than anyone in North Carolina," he said.

Photos of famous UNC athletes, yellow with age, cover the walls at the back of the building above the stall seats and tables.

Mousmoules said all the athletes come to Jeff's when they return to Chapel Hill.

"This is the only place they know," he said.

Mousmoules was born in Virgina, grew up in New York and came to Chapel Hill to run his business.

Trustees To Name Chancellor Monday

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

Consolidated University President William C. Friday announced yesterday that he has called a special meeting of the UNC Board of Trustees for Monday morning to select a chancellor for the University.

The meeting will be at 11 a.m. in the House Chamber in the State Capitol in Raleigh. It is open to the public.

Formal notices were sent to the trustees Wednesday morning by Miss Billie Curtis, assistant secretary of the Board of Trustees. Friday had conferred with Gov. Dan Moore, chairman of the Board of Trustees, and the two called the meeting jointly.

At the meeting Friday will nominate for chancellor one of the three names submitted to him by the Advisory Committee on the Chancellorship, chaired by Kenan Professor of English William Wells.

A simple majority vote of a quorum of board members is required for an approval of Friday's selection.

The chancellors of the four branches of the University, including Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, were invited to attend the meeting, according to custom.

Their attendance is not compulsory, but Sitterson, a probable nominee for chancellor, is expected to attend, according to his secretary. Sitterson said he had not received a special invitation. He is considered the most likely nominee.

Otis Singletary, chancellor of UNC-Greensboro, could not be reached for comment, and his secretary said he would not be in Greensboro on Monday morning. She said she did not know whether he would attend the trustee meeting.

Wells said that he and all members of the Advisory Committee on the Chancellorship were invited to the meeting.

The chancellor approved by the Board of Trustees will take office immediately.

He received his A.B. degree from UNC in 1931, his master's here in 1932 and Ph.D. from the University in 1937.

Sitterson taught at the University from 1935 until becoming a teacher at Georgia Military Academy. He returned here in 1946 as a professor of history and became dean of the College of Arts and Sciences in 1955.

He also served as dean of the General College and was named a Kenan Professor of History in 1961. He was a vice-chancellor here from July, 1965, until Feb. 15, 1966.

Kenan Endowment Complete In 1972

By RON SHINN
DTH News Editor

The last of the 25 William R. Kenan, Jr. Professorships established Monday at a cost of $5 million will not be set up until 1972.

"We just won't have all the money until then," said Charles M. Shaffer, director of University development.

A check for $1 million was presented to Gov. Dan K. Moore here Monday by the William R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust of New York. Additional checks for $1 million will be presented each January until 1970 when the $5 million pledge is filled.

"The principal cannot be touched under the terms of the endowment," Shaffer said, "so we will invest the money and use the interest.

"Since we have only one-fifth of the endowment at the present time and cannot touch the money, we will have to wait until next spring to see the results."

The million dollars, invested for the University by the Wachovia Bank and Trust Company of Winston-Salem, will return approximately $40,000 by next May.

The first William R. Kenan, Jr. Professorship will be awarded then. About $8,000 will be added to the yearly base salary provided by the State of $12,000 to $15,000 for each professorship.

A. R. MacMannis said Monday when making the presentation that the responsibility of selection is being left up to the University, but asked that arrangements be made to insure that the professors selected "work as close to the students as possible . . . as professor Francis Veneble did with William Kenan."

The nominations will probably be handled the same as the present Kenan professorships. A committee appointed by the Chancellor presents the nominees to the chancellor's advisory committee, who in turn screen the applicants. The final decision is up to the chancellor.

The new professorships will go primarily to new professors here and not administrators. "The trustees of the estate specified this," said Shaffer.

The William R. Kenan Jr. Charitable Trust was founded in conformance with Kenan's will. His total estate, estimated to have a value in excess of $100 million, places the Kenan Charitable Trust among the foremost of educational foundations of the nation.

UNC was the first recipient of an educational grant from the estate.

The professorships represent the third and largest bequest memorializing members of the Kenan family. Kenan's sistr, Mary Lily Kenan Flagler Bingham, established the first Kenan Professorships in 1917 as a memorial to her father and her two uncles, all graduates of the University. There have been a total of 68 Kenan Professors in the University here since that fund was established.

Two additional professorships were established in 1964 through the Sarah Graham Kenan Foundation; the Graham Kenan Professor of Law and the Sarah Graham Kenan professor of Medicine.

Fast Protest Continues Into 4th Day

Some six or seven students continued to fast yesterday on the third day of their Student Peace Union-sponsored five - day fast in protest to U. S. involvement in Viet Nam.

Wednesday afternoon SPU Chairman Chuck Schunior addressed a group of about 80 students on "Saigon and Selma in an open-air seminar in Polk Place. Students continued to gather to discuss and debate the war for some time after the speech.

Schunior asserted that the war in Viet Nam "grotesquely distorts our own national priorities, causing beneficial social legislation to be subordinated to the politics of war-making.

Seminars were scheduled last night in Ehringhaus and Craige to discuss the fast and the war.

One of the fasters, who are drinking only orange juice and water until 6 p.m. Friday, said he felt "lousy physically, but morally and spiritually I feel reinforced in my own personal convictions.

"I really enjoy talking with people who have opposite, hostile views. When I feel I get a point across I feel satisfied, and when someone teaches me something I didn't know, I consider it a learning experience.

Fraternity Pledges Paint Red Cross Headquarters

Fraternity pledges — 99 of them — painted the Red Cross building in Carrboro Wednesday as part of the IFC's program of community service.

"They painted the whole building and did the trimming too," said project chairman Drummond Bell, a St. A.

Asked why, Bell said that "the main thing was that the Red Cross needed someone to do it and we thought we could do it and it wouldn't cost them anything but the paint—which they already had."

Brushes and pledges were supplied by the houses, Bell said, and ladders by Chapel Hill merchants.

Bell said he thought the community service projects such as the Greek Week clean-up day and the Red Cross painting would continue next year.

Grow Up

Saturday night's bottle-throwing incident, which resulted in an eye injury to a UNC student, stands at the height of irresponsibility and immaturity.

It's no secret that a great deal of alcoholic beverage is consumed by UNC students. Many people around the state — and some here on this campus — frown on students' drinking at all. We do not.

What we do violently oppose is the attitude of far too many college men that they have to prove their masculinity, independence and "coolness" by getting themselves into a drunken state, making excessive noise and destroying property.

The incident in point is only an isolated example. It became a matter of public knowledge because, unfortunately, a student was injured.

But it is only good fortune that has prevented just as serious, or more serious, consequences from an untold number of similar occurances here this year.

Throwing a bottle isn't a "cool" thing to do. It is a stupid thing to do. The same goes for the various other wild outlets of emotion often employed.

We urge all students to use a little common sense. If you have to hit something, hit your fist against a tree. If you have to show something, show your ability to keep your mouth shut. And if you have to throw something, throw up.

Juice Stock Up

Late yesterday afternoon local brokers were still reporting a rising trend in orange juice stock.

Pay C. Fist, owner of the Get Out of Vietnam Orange Juice Company, told the DTH that stepped up aggression by cold germs — carried to Vietnam by U. S. military troops from Chapel Hill — had spurred the increased intake of Vitamin C by local sympathizers with the oppressed Southeast Asian people.

A check with B. F. Burger — local dining establishment operator — revealed that his business has suffered a slight drop in the past week.

"We realized a 33-cent smaller intake on our Super Man Special Sandwich than we had been earning. But we're not giving up. Those people can't starve forever," he said.

Untold Value

Durham Morning Herald

The value of the $5 million William R. Kenan Jr. bequest to the University of North Carolina and to the state is beyond calculation.

This money will have a snowballing effect in promoting the University's effort to achieve academic excellence. As a starter, it means that 25 professors in various fields can be offered salaries at a level the University simply could not approach otherwise. But this fact doesn't begin to explain the implications of such a bequest.

Those implications don't stop, either, with a recognition that the University will be able to attract and keep 25 men or women whose academic abilities put them in demand by better endowed institutions. Getting and keeping such individuals is only a starter, too.

The presence of eminent teachers and scholars on campus serves as an attraction to other promising faculty members in their fields. It is a lure to the able graduate students whose presence on campus also contribute much to academic excellence. Last, but hardly least, it adds both directly and indirectly to the educational experience of the mass of undergraduates. Thus it is a positive gain for the entire state.

A windfall like the one provided by the Kenan trust shouldn't mislead anyone about the University's need for even more funds to attract and retain distinguished faculty members. Despite this latest bequest as well as many other generous gifts and much hard work on the University's behalf, it is still relatively poor in this area. Moreover, the search for supplemental funds is never ending at the best endowed institutions.

But all of this simply emphasiezs the value of the Kenan bequest to the University. It is one for which the University and the state should be thankful, indeed.

Letter Was Hoax

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Holy hoax! Would the real J. C. Poindexter please stand up?

When I got to my 9 a.m. class on Friday April 29, I was awakened from my early-morning trance by a multitude of cheers and jeers. "For what?" said I. "For your letter in The Daily Tar Heel," said they. "A trick!" said I, for indeed, you are reading the first letter I have ever written to the DTH.

Perhaps I should be pleased that someone holds me to such esteem that they would falsely attach my name to their letters. However, the trivial content of the letter does not excite me and the artistry of the imbecilic writer leaves me less than impressed. I am, in fact, appalled that the DTH would waste valuable (?) space on such a piece of trash and attach my name to it, especially without being reasonably sure that I was the author.

Someday, perhaps, Carolina students will find more worthwhile subjects to challenge their mammoth intellects. Perhaps, too, the DTH will become more responsible. Meanwhile, my sleuths are searching the nooks and crannies of Hanes Hall for the perpetrator of this dastardly fraud; my lawyer, Mr. Mason, is preparing suits for invasion of privacy (my thoughts), libel, forgery, etc.; and I am busily burning every Daily Tar Heel in sight.

Kay Unsure?

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Michael Alan Kay was indignant, unsure that he wasn't being threatened, and he broke the great rule of the great game of American democratic competition: he gloated explicitly and in public.

Strange that he spoke self-stultifyingly, hacking unwittingly at the planks of his podium, ridiculing the shared values which sustain his prestige by vulgar consent.

Stranger still, and yet all too explicable as the brutal price of a seat in the game, that his intended victims, disguised as avengers, stole his suicidal hatchet, rescued him with fervent reaffirmations of their faith in pins before he could split the first plank.

Fraternities, student government, ROTC: they surround us like nets — power-elite micro-mimicinstitutions farcically instilling a sense of legitimacy in the young automatons who man them and wait nourishing their greed and contriving their credentials for the bigger and better that is being held for them in trust.

Support WSEX

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The enthusiasm that greeted the Teague radio station last week by the boys in that dormitory may well cause UNC legislators to re-evaluate their thoughts about a carrier-current station for the entire campus. There were few radios that were not tuned to station WSEX.

The boys relished the idea of hearing their names and voices come out the music box. And no wonder — it usually was filled with the same old top 40 format and tons of commercials. Who ever heard of getting excited over radio in recent years? The boys in Teague proved it could be done.

They were broadcasting lots of music, to be sure, but it was well mixed with dormitory and residence college news and views. Even though the first evening of transmission was crude, the station did show promise of becoming polished with time.

The core of Teague's station stems from the need of a campus station that will furnish this college with programs geared to the needs of the university life and its students. There is an obvious void of this type of programming in Chapel Hill.

By its very nature WUNC radio is unable to fulfill all the needs this campus has for its students. WUNC is geared to those who enjoy slow music, usually classical. Many of its programs, particulary those during the Carolina Sumposium, are of good general interest.

For the most part, however, UNC's programming is too high strung. The mass at Carolina are active, energetic people who might prefer a faster pace on their station. More UNC news, sports, interviews and programs-at-large would be attractive to the Chapel Hill listener.

The new campus station could utilize talent from the University's drama and RTVMP departments. Good radio drama and documentaries concerning today's college students would be a welcomed change-of-pace from what we are now accustomed to in the media.

The Teague pilot project may or may not be successful. The very fact that it did go on the air and got such quick raves from the dormitory's residents shows a positive need for a full-scale investigation and re-evaluation on the needs for another University radio station.

Editor Errs

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The remarks in the "foreword" to Pastor W. A. Bell's letter on fornication in Saturday's DTH were quite unwarranted. Your first sentence would have been sufficient to introduce the author and his purpose. The second and third ones, however, became progressively worse as you proceeded to present your own conjecture as to why you received such an article.

Simply from the fact that Pastor Bell sent his 1st letter to Harvard and to Chapel Hill to be published, you declared, "Possibly Pastor Bell believes there is more fornication at these two places than there is elsewhere. For this reason, all you detestable fornicators out there' better read and heed." If he thinks this, let him say so himself, if you please. Nowhere in the article do I find any mention of a specific town being more given to fornication than others. Bell's objection was to Dr. Joseph Fletcher's view of premarital sex relations, and his message was not to Chapel Hill or to Harvard as such, but to individual people wherever they might be. To quote him, "Any person who wants to do the will of God and who wants to live a life of sanctification must abstain from fornication as stated in I Thessalonians 4:3."

I think you have displayed a lack of editorial courtesy, and suggest that you be more considerate in the future.

Loud Yankee Broads

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I cannot pass up this opportunity to express my opinion of Robert M. Payton's last letter. While a Southerner, I have spent much time in the North and have known many Northern girls, and therefore feel qualified to make a few statements about them.

Northern women are far superior to those of the South; indeed, seeing a specimen of yankee womanhood is an experience not soon forgotten. She walks across campus with her hair radiant in curlers, dressed in absolute conformity to the latest styles, a cigarette hanging daintily from her lips. Her speech is even more striking that her appearance, for rarely needs she to resort to standard English, her command of profanity being sufficient for almost any conversation. And she forms her own opinions — I have yet to meet a Northern girl who did not have an opinion on any subject, from the tactical feasibility of using the Me. 262 as a bomber to the culture of African violets. These profound statements are usually expressed at such a volumn as to be audible across Carmichael Auditorium during a basketball game.

Indeed, she is independent, for as long as "Mamma and Poppa" make the payments on her Mustang and maintain her bank account, she rarely thinks of them. Her sophistication, whether she is drinking County Club from the can or making out with someone else's date at a football game, is far beyond that of the Southern belle.

She is sincere, too; just pick up a book she has dropped or open a door for her and watch her walk off with her nose in the air, sincerely expressing her views about such vain pretentions as "gentleman ly conduct". She demands complete equality, and it would not surprise me to find her leading a sitdown strike in the men's room.

In closing, I would like to express my sincere regrets that Payton and his loud mouth yankee cohorts are being forced to endure four years in the South, yearning for that paradise just north of the Mason Dixon line. But life has its compensations Bob: I am sure that by now you've gotten dozens of calls from intelligent, attractive sophisticated northern girls asking you for a date.

Editor Misinformed

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Misinformed is perhaps the best word t describe your editorial of Saturday, April 30, concerning the approval of Frank Hodges as attorney general.

It is certainly unfair to characterize the University Party stand as "petty partisan political thinking," while the straight-line Student Party vote is ignored.

First, it should be noted that it is the duty of a political party to take that stand which it feels to be in the interest of the student body, even if it means opposition to an appointment of the president.

Second, the reason for the UP opposition to Hodges was not to promote former assistant attorney general Jim Aplin, who contrary to your assertion is not a UP member, but for reasons pertaining to Hodges alone. Even if Hodges had been turned down, Aplin still would not have been appointed by President Bob Powell. Thus, boosting Aplin could not have been a motive for the UP vote. What were the reasons that were given so little attention in your column on Saturday?

1. That, according to the former attorney general and current members of the AG Staff, Hodges did not have the specific experience necessary to do the job.

2. That going outside the AG Staff for the appointment was not good policy in view of the separate natures of the executive and judicial branches of Student Government.

3. That, the appointment of Hodges, former SP chairman, was not in the tradition of an apolitical judiciary.

These, then, were the reasons that convinced the UP caucus, not partisanship or political coercion. I hope that, with this letter, the matter will be closed. Frank Hodges has taken on a rough job. Now that the question has been decided, the University Party joins with the rest of the campus in offering him whatever support and cooperation we can give for a successful year in the jduiciary.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Chapel Hill Actor Plays In 'Liliom'

Edward Kenestrick, an experienced young actor from Chapel Hill, is playing the role of Ficsur, Liliom's miscreant sidekick, in the Carolina Playmakers' season - ending production of Ferenc Molnar's "Liliom". The play, to be presented May 13-15 in the Forest Theatre, is the textual basis for Rodgers and Hammerstein's hit - musical, "Carousel"

A graduate of Purdue University and a former graduate student in the Department of Dramatic Art at UNC, Kenestrick is now serving as instructor and technical director for the Department of Dramatic Art at North Carolina College in Durham

With a list of theatrical experience that would do credit to an oldtimer, Kenestrick appeared in numerous leading roles at Purdue and in 1960 and 1961 won awards for his acting. Theatre goers in this area will remember him for his comic portrayals in the Playmakers' productions of "The Braggert Soldier" and "The Fantasticks"

U.S. Congressman Attacks France's NATO Policy

PARIS (AP) — France has told the NATO allies that it will review every month its permission for Allied military planes to fly over France or to land, well informed sources reported yesterday.

This means that overflights or landings in France by Allied aircraft could be terminated on 30 days notice, the sources said. There was no sign this was about to happen.

The move was the latest in President Charles de Gaulle's program to divorce France from the military activities of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

It came as Rep. Wayne L. Hays, D-Ohio, delivered a stinging attack on De Gaulle's European policies and won hearty applause from European legislators at the European Consultative Assembly in Strasbourgh.

In another development, Britain announced that George Thomson, the no. 2 minister in the Britist Foreign office, will go to Washington and Ottawa to discuss NATO questions generally and the prospect of moving its political and military headquarters to London.

De Gaulle has announced that France will no longer participate in NATO's integrated military structure, and he has ordered the withdrawal of all Allied military forces from France by next April 1.

But he says France remains committed to the political principles of the Atlantic Alliance, and he wants to retain the NATO council, the organization's political body, in Paris.

Thomson, who has been in Strasbourgh, has been sounding out European leaders on the possibility of moving both military and political headquarters of NATO to London.

The French decision for a month - to - month re-examination of Allied flight privileges starting June 1 was communicated to the NATO partners yesterday.

The United States, directs about 100,000 separate airplane and helicopter flights over France in the course of a year and would be most affected by the move. Other major allies, such as West Germany, Britain and Canada, also would be hit.

In the past permission for overflights and landings have been given almost automatically on Dec. 31 for the following year. The 1965 authorization had been normally extended for 1966.

If allied military overlfights were to be barred by France, an east-west barrier in effect would be erected across Europe from the Atlantic to the Iron Curtain. Military flights are not permitted over neutral Switzerland and Austria.

Allied officials consider the question of guarantees for overflights and landings by NATO aircraft to be one of the most important questions to be negotiated with France in connection with her withdrawal from NATO military activities.

The United States has already been restricted in its European military operations by its agreement to halt refueling of nuclear bombers over Spain.

The agreement stemmed from the collision of a bomber and a tanker during a refueling operation in January. Three of the four nuclear weapons the bomber carried fell on Spanish soil but did not explode. The fourth fell into the sea a short distance off the coast and was recovered only after a long and costly search.

The meeting in Strasbourg was called to discuss current problems of the Atlantic Alliance. The assembly is a part of the 18-nation Council of Europe and serves as a semi-official forum for its members.

He contended that De Gaulle's policies would show disarray in the West and result in weakness.

Government And Industry Sign Contract

WASHINGTON (AP) —Signing of the first contract to operate high-speed, modern passenger trains on a regularly scheduled basis was announced yesterday by the Commerce Department and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Beginning in October of next year, 50 self-propelled electric cars — the most comfrotable in the world was the description used by Pennsylvania board chairman Stuart T. Sanders — will begin whizzing between New York City and Washington in less than three hours.

It's part of a three-year, $90-million program of high-speed ground transportation research and development adopted last year by Congress.

To test consumer reaction, hourly service at fares lower than those now charged will be provided between New York and Washington at speeds up to 110 miles an hour. Service every 30 minutes is planned between New York and Philadelphia.

Speeds up to 150 miles an hour are contemplated by 1970.

The fastest scheduled time on the 226-mile New York-Washington run presents is three hours and 35 minutes. Most trains operate near a four-hour schedule.

Secretary of Commerce John T. Connor called the contract the beginning of a new era in ground transportation and a significant development in government and industroy cooperation.

If the test in the heavily populated Northeast corridor is successful, he told a news conference, the concept could be extended to such areas as San Francisco - Los Angeles - San Diego; Milwaukee - Chicago - Detroit - Toledo - Cleveland and Portland - Seattle.

The two-year project will cost the government $9.6 million but the railroad is expected to spend substantially more than that for improvements, Connor said. Saunders said he couldn't pintpoint a figure but it would be less than $20 million.

The commerce Department earlier this year awarded a $950,000 contract for four stripped-down test cars scheduled for delivery this summer. They will be tested on a 21-mile stretch between New Brunswick and Trenton, N. J.

In addition to New York, Philadelphia and Washington, the demonstration runs will serve Newark and Trenton, Wilmington, Del., and Baltimore. The railroad expects to announce on Friday selection of a contractor to build the 50 cars.

Saunders said the number of trains — both high-speed and conventional — will be increased from 66 to 96 daily as part of the project and fares will be made competitive with other forms of transportation.

In addition to higher speeds, other time savings will be effected by limiting intermediate stops and by quicker loading and unloading of passengers through sliding doors at the same level as station platforms.

Red Chinese Newspaper Reports Rebellious Group

TOKYO (AP) — The army newspaper of Red China reported yesterday there is a rebellious group in the Chinese Communist party and the survival of Mao Tze-Tung's ideology is at stake. It seemed to hint that influential elements seek a reconciliation with the Soviet Communists.

The editorial in Liberation Army Daily, broadcast from Peking, was the latest of recent statement indicating concern in the Peking Politburo about trends among intellectuals and some sections ot the armed forces.

The editorial said there were in the party certain "antiparty" people who wear "a veil of Marxism-Leninism and Mao Tze-Tung's teachings."

"The activities of these antiparty, antisocialist elements are not an accidental phenomenon," it said. "They are responding to the great international anti-Chinese chorus of the imperialists, modern revisionists and various reactionaries to revive the Chinese reactionary class which has been struck down."

This seemed an indirect way of saying that pro-Soviet elements should be rooted out. By "imperialists and modern revisionists," the Chinese Communists mean the Americans and the current Soviet leadership. Peking has been accusing the Kremlin of plotting with the United States against Red China.

The presence of pro-Soviet elements in China, possibly in influential places, conceivably might explain why the Soviet leaders have seemed restrained in dealing with cascades of anti-Kremlin vituperation from Peking. The Kremlin replies only with appeals for world Communist unity.

Analysts have suggested that any significant change in leadership or policies in China might clear the way for mending relations with the Soviet Party. That could mean much economically and perhaps in modernizing China's armed forces.

The present Politburo in Peking seems set against a reversal of policy which would permit better relations. The Kremlin leaders are accused of revisionism and reversion to bourgeois—meaning capitalist—ideas.

Liberation Army Daily, probably speaking for both the party and the armed forces command, demanded the resolute elimination of "the blank line of bourgeois, antiparty, anti-socialist revisionism." It said a rebellion against party leadership was widespread and serious and "It is a struggle to the death between us and them."

The chief target of the editorial was the intellectual class — writers and artists and people "with some authority and some fame." But it made clear that others were involved, those "linked with the antiparty activities of right wing opportunists within the party."

The terms "antiparty" and "right wing opportunists" often are used to describe Communists outside China who disagree with Peking policy, including some Soviet Communists. Such terms are directed only infrequently against Communists inside China.

Editorials in the official Peking People's Daily have warned against antiparty elements but have said that despite ups and downs Communism would win out.

Liberation Army Daily was more cautious. It said intellectuals are trying to defend bourgeois ideology and if this continues "There is the danger that one corner of our socialist fortress will collapse and . . . There will be a change in the color of our country."

"It is an extremely acute class struggle," the paper continued. "It is a long-term, fierce struggle as to whether the proletariat or the bourgeoisie will triumph in the field of ideology."

Wins And Losses

ACC Title Now In Sight

Carolina hasn't won the ACC baseball crown yet, but the title is now clearly in sight. The big hurdle was the road trip to South Carolina and Clemson over the weekend, and Coach Walter Rabb's warriors came through like champions to sweep both games. The win Tuesday over Wake Forest has put the Tar Heels within two victories of clinching the title, and they could do it this weekend.

The Tar Heels have been winning like a good team should. They have solid pitching, particularly from Danny Walker and Beattie Leonard on the starting line and George McRae in the bullpen. McRae's ability to come to the rescue in tight situations has been a key factor in Carolina's success. Few teams at any level can win without a dependable relief pitcher. A college team, with its sporadic schedule, can get by with one, if he's good. McRae is.

As for hitting, the Tar Heels have the winning formula there, too: one big man plus help from one or two others in every game. Danny Talbott, currently hitting .400, has, of course, been the Mr. Big of the Carolina attack.

All the others on the team, though, have contributed key hits in one or more ball games. This weekend Charlie Thomas got three hits against South Carolina. Talbott and Charlie Carr were the big guns against Clemson, with Carr snapping out of a slump. Carr continued his hot hitting Tuesday against Wake Forest, with Bob Bonczek and Bob Hume producing important helpat the plate.

Carolina has also been incredibly lucky with the weather. Perhaps Coach Rabb has been practicing voodoo. Whatever the reason, the Tar Heels have not had a game rained out, despite a two-week seige of Noah's Ark weather. The charm almost failed in Clemson, where the ninth inning was washed out, but the game still counted. The Wake Forest game looked like an odds-on bet to be cancelled, but the sun came out Tuesday morning. (In contrast with the varsity's luck, Bill Lovingood's freshman team has had six straight games washed out.)

Rainouts can hurt a team by fouling up the pitching rotation. They can also serve to stop the momentum of a hot team — which Carolina certainly is — and increase the pressure at the end of the season. A game that's won is a lot better than one that has to be played over.

Good Luck, Press Maravich

I want to wish Press Maravich luck in his new job as head basketball coach at LSU. He's going to need it.

Louisiana is my home state, and it just isn't basketball territory. The Tigers haven't had a really good team since Bob Pettit left in 1954, and that's a pretty long time. Maravich won't be able to build a top team on Louisiana players — there aren't that many really top cagers in the state. Whether he can bring enough boys in from outside the state remains to be seen.

Maravich will have to face one thing. In the Southeastern Conference in general and at LSU in particular, football is the big sport. If Ole Miss beats LSU in basketball, it's not the end of the world. If the Rebels beat the Tigers in football, it is.

Last year LSU had one of the worst teams in the SEC. The coach, Frank Truitt, left after only that season to go to Kent State. He was laboring under a peculiar arrangement in which the former coach, Jay McCreary, remained on as associate coach. If that system still prevails, it won't help Maravich any.

LSU does have one plus: a big new field house is being built. It will be up to Maravich to get the players to play in it. He's going to have trouble.

Abe's Hope Choice In Kentucky Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Abe's Hope, coming out of the stall made famous five years ago by Carry Back, remained the luke-warm choice Wednesday as candidates for Saturday's Kentucky Derby wound up serious training at Churchill Downs.

"I don't know if being in stall 10, barn 42 will help him," said Jack Price, owner-trainer of the famous Carry Back, as he recalled the hectic pre-Derby days of 1961. "But that is where Carry Back was quartered."

"I sure hope it is a good omen," said Del Carroll, pole playing trainer of Abe's Hope from the Grand Prix Stable of John Bartell and Robert Byfield.

Meantime, the size of the Derby field remained fluid with the prospect that as many as 16 or 17 names will be entered by closing time at 10:30 a.m., EDT, Thursday.

With Abe's Hope, to be ridden by a three-time Derby winner, Bill Shoemaker, the 5-2 choice in the Downs unofficial listing the odds, the only question marks Wednesday were among the lightly-regarded eligibles.

Doug Davis, trainer of Duc D'Eclair who ran second to Exhibitionist in Tuesday's Trial, said he would take a long look at the weather forecast Thursday before deciding whether to post the $1,000 entry fee for owner Dabney Crump.

"My horse moves up 10 lengths in mud," said David.

There is no rain in the forecast for Saturday. "Cloudy and cool" says the weather bureau.

Abe's Hope remained the choice off his victory over previously unbeaten Graustark in the Blue Grass Stakes, a close second to Buckpasser in the Flamingo and first place, from which he was disqualified, in the Florida Derby. Injuries to Graustark and Buckpaser threw the Derby into a wide-open scramble. Not so many weeks ago it had been considered a two-horse showdown.

"He is better than when he ran in the Florida Derby," said Carroll.

However, there was much to be said for Michael Ford's Kauai King, whose only bad race this year was in the Florida Derby as he won six of his eight starts while racking up three stakes triumphs. He'll have cool Don Brumfield, new to Derby competition, in the saddle.

Campus Atmosphere Helps Bring Charlie Scott Here

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

Carolina has won the three - school fight to sign Charlie Scott, and Tar Heel Basketball Coach Dean Smith is a happy man.

"We're real pleased that he'll be coming," Smith said yesterday of the highly-touted Negro cage star. "He was one that we wanted from the beginning."

Smith credited "the atmosphere for a Negro student" at UNC as being the primary factor in Scott's decision. Smith said that Scott saw that he could be a part of the student body here and "not just a gladiator."

Scott had said some time ago that he had narrowed his choice of school down to UNC, Davidson and Duke. Most observers thought Davidson would land Scott, but it didn't turn out that way.

Scott had, in fact, filled out an application to Davidson; but he did so in the capacity of a student, not a basketball player. He applied for early-decision admittance, which does not preclude his finally deciding to go to another school.

First Athletic Intent

"This is the first time he's signed anything to do with athletics," Smith said of the grant - in - aid Scott has inked with UNC. The coach added that Carolina would not have contacted Scott if he had signed a grant with another school. March 15 is the earliest that a player can sign with an ACC school.

Scott cast his lot with the Tar Heels Sunday night. Smith, along with Assistant Coaches John Lotz and Larry Brown, drove to Laurinburg, where Scott is a student, to sign him. The announcement was delayed until Tuesday afternoon because Scott wanted to tell Davidson Coach Lefty Driesell personally of his decision, rather than have Driselle read the story in the newspapers.

Scott visited the Chapel Hill campus in March. Smith said yesterday that the boy had liked the campus then, but felt a strong obligation to Davidson — and pressure from Davidson alumni.

Everyone Recruited

Smith said that Scott got along well with the coaches and players when he was here. The Tar Heel coach mentioned freshmen Dick Grubar and Rusty Clark and varsity star Larry Miller as players who've been friendly to Scott, but added that these weren't the only ones.

"An excelletn prospect" is the label Smith puts on Scott as a basketball player. "He's in the top category because of his great speed and his ability to handle the ball," the coach explained. Scott can apparently shoot, too. He averaged 29 points per game last season. Smith said Scott can play either frontcourt or backcourt.

Scott will not be the first Negro to play ball for Carolina, but he is the first to sign an athletic grant-in-aid. Smith emphasized, however, that there is no restriction on recruiting Negroes. "We recruited Louis Hudson about five years ago," Smith recalled. Hudson didn't come here.

Smith said he will recruit Negroes if they can fulfill the academic requirements at UNC and also do the job athletically. "Carolina's policy has been in this direction," he added. Smith said some other Negroes he might have been interested in didn't have the grades. "Scott's the first one to have both the academic and athletic qualifications," Smith said.

Pre-Medical

Scott is a good student as well as a good basketball player. Smith reported that Charlie is first in his class at Laurinburg and plans to pursue a pre-med program here.

Smith expressed the hope that Scott will join with Carolina's other two signees to date, Eddie Fogler and Jim Delaney, to give Carolina its second top freshman team in a row. He pointed out that that getting good back-to-back frosh squads is important to building a strong team. A bad recruiting year "comes back to haunt you," he said.

BATMAN — Yup, that's what they call Joel Lovingood, five-year-old son of the freshman baseball coach, who donned an immense hard hat and scamptered after bats, carrying several times his own weight at times, at one of the freshman games. Joel hasn't had much chance to carry bats recently, as the frosh have had six games rained out.

Marauders Crush Murderers' Row

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The Morrison H. Marauders blasted four home runs as they cruised by the Morrison B. Murderers' Row, 17-3, in Tuesday's intramural softball. Sasser belted two homers and Strawbridge and Darling clouted one each. The Marauders had eight runs in the last inning.

The Parker Studs outslugged the Avery Apathetics, 15-12. Hughes, Hendrixs and Killian hit homers in the third inning to put Parker on top for good. Gatewood and Hanna homered for Avery.

The Craige C Clowns trounced the Craige A Zonkers, 20-9. The Clowns exploded for 15 runs in the first inning.

Sullivan scattered three hits and three walks in shutting out the Teague Totalers for the Parker Studs, 11-0. Killian added another home run in this game.

DKE White won a wild contest from Chi Phi Blue, 16-15. DKE rallied from 15-10 to get the victory.

The Lambda Chi Lo Balls also won a slugfest by 16-15. Seven runs in the last inning brought them the win.

Phi Delt Blue rolled over Phi Gam Purple, 20-13. Ed Williams had a home run in his four hits, Tom Parrish had a home run and a double among his four and Taylor also hit a homer. Phi Gam's Taylor hit one in their 10-run inning.

The NROTC Seabats downed the Geology Coprolites, 10-3.

Goetz hammered a home run in the last inning to beat the Public Health Hellcats for Law III Blue, 7-6. Sharpe homered for Law and Walsh and Willhoit homered for Health.

The PiKA Plummers spotted the Beta Bombers a 6-0 lead in the first inning, then roared back to take a 13-10 win. Winston Brown had the game's only home run for PiKA.

The Hilltoppers hung on to defeat the Town Tuffs, 10-9. A 9-2 Hilltopper lead was lost, and Bruce Nelson singled in Sam Griffin with the winning run.

Conference Officials Meet In Closed Sessions Today

GREENSBORO (AP) — Atlantic Coast Conference officials meet in a series of closed sessions today to discuss proposed legislation scheduled for presentation at the formal session Friday morning.

Four major items are on the agenda announced by Commissioner Jim Weaver.

Clemson University again has proposed that Virginia Tech, former member of the Southern Conference, be admitted to the eight-member league. A similar proposal was withdrawn last December by Clemson because of lack of support.

North Carolina State has recommended that the entire question of expansion be turned over to a study committee to determine whether the league be enlarged and, if so, how much.

Beginning July 1, the ACC will limit grants to 35 incoming football players and five in baksetball, eliminating the old 140 total rule. Wake Forest asked that the 140 rule be reconsidered.

Clark's Fate Still Undecided Today

SELMA, Ala. (AP) — The political future of Sheriff James G. Clark, the hardcore segregationist who arrested thousands of racial demonstrators, lay undecided yesterday in the ballots from six challenged election boxes.

The county Democratic executive committee met last night to settle it.

With all but those six boxes tabulated from Tuesday's Democratic primary, Clark was lagging behind Selma's former city public safety director, Wilson Baker, who became one of the sheriff's most vocal critics during the civil rights struggle last year.

Baker had 7,537 votes, Clark 7,445. Two other candidates, Virgil Bates with 372 votes and Murphey Suther with 696, were out of the running.

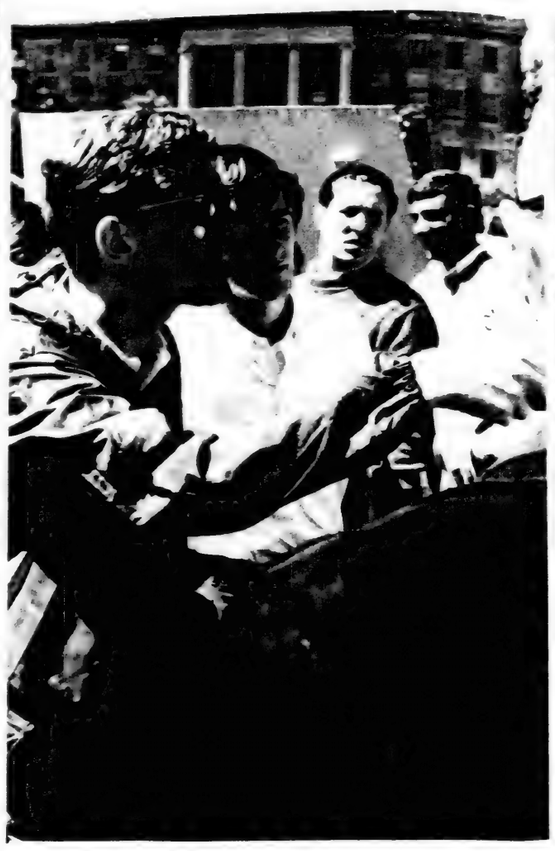
An election official said the disputed boxes came from a predominantly Negro district and contained enough votes to give Baker the nomination for sheriff without a runoff.

Clark protested that he had found two or three of the six boxes unattended, and the counting was stopped until the dispute could be settled. The Democratic Committee met briefly during the day but put off action until tonight.

The six boxes were locked meanwhile in the office of Probate Judge Bernard Reynolds. The Judge had designated additional election officials to help with the counting when Clark's complaint was brought to his attention, and as an added precaution, notified the Federal Poll Watchers who had been sent to Dallas and six other Alabama counties for Tuesday's election.

APOPLEXY

Apoplexy is a form of cardiovascular disease now commonly known as stroke, says the North Carolina Heart Association.



YES, THEY'RE STILL GOING AT IT. Amid finger-shaking and assorted harangues, the SPU carried on its discussion sessions during the fasting protest, which is runnning into its fourth day (and eighth can of orange juice). Stay tuned to Polk Place this afternoon. — DTH Photo By Jerry Lambert

Voice Commands Can Do Almost Anything Thanks To Spectrograph

Think it would be nice to throw away all your keys and have your room door open and your car ignition start at your verbal command?

This may seem like science fiction, but new developments in sound may make such uses of the voice possible in the near future.

One of the machines now used for study and analysis of sounds, with aims such as these and endless others, is now in use here. It offers interesting opportunities for a wide variety of departments to experiment with sound.

The machine is the spectrograph, a neat four-piece set of equipment which records three different variables of sound: frequency, intensity and time. It presents its information about sound in diagram form on heat-sensitized paper.

By simply examining the peaks and horizontal lines and their varying degrees of thickness, one can determine exactly what he just heard and is no longer dependent upon the ability of his own ear to catch fleeting differences.

Who wants to know about sounds?

The subject isn't just of interest to persons with hearing problems or to acoustic experts. Musicians, physicists, laryngologists, dentists, psychologists, and above all, linguists and phoneticians, are able to obtain and apply information from the spectrograph to their work.

In the Dental School, for example, the spectrograph has been intensively and very successfully used by Dr. D. W. Warren for diagnostic purposes in cleft palate cases. The sound diagram shows the dentists and-or surgeon just where the trouble lies — just what sounds the patient can't produce, what sounds he distorts, and how to apply remedial surgery or design appliances.

For the psychologist, the spectrograph can help determine whether some speech anomalies are psychological or physical.

The musician can use the instrument to test the precision of his performance and the qualities of his voice or his instrument. The language student can use it to compare his pronunciation with that of the expert and then see the diffence in black and white.

Linguistic issues such as whether or not the standard Polish language actually has nasal vowels can also be simplified by the spectrograph. The structural linguist can use it to study a great variety of articulatory, phonetic and dialectic problems in detail.

Physics (acoustics) and information science — a discipline which studies methods of measuring, coding, storing and transmitting information — can also turn the spectrograph to their purposes.

The UNC machine is at present housed at Dey Hall, where it was sent on loan from the Dental School. The Department of Linguistics, Slavic and Oriental Languages will co-ordinate its use by all campus groups.

According to Dr. W. W. Arndt, chairman of the department to which the spectrograph is assigned, this type of apparatus has been in existence for about 20 years, but the University is believed to be one of the few institutions in the Southeast which utilizes it.

Viet Protestors End Fast Today

A small group of Student Peace Union members who have been fasting since early Monday to protest American involvement in Vietnam will get their first full meal today.

Chuck Schunior, head of the organization, said that a half hour silent vigil in Polk Place from 5:30 to 6 p.m. will conclude the group's five day fast this afternoon.

Schunior said that only six rather than the eight earlier announced students had lived on two glasses of orange juice that "half - a - dozen to a dozen" others have been fasting from sunrise to sunset every day in sympathy with the group.

Following the vigil today, the SPU head said, the fasters will probably eat a small meal together, with a full meal to follow later.

Schunior said that the success of the fast was an "intangible factor," but that it had provided "a chance for engaging in dialogue."

He said that though THE group had been subjected to heckling, students had been much more receptive at SPU sessions during the fast than previously.

Most of the SPU-sponsored workshops failed to attract large crowds, with 90 to 100 people, including SPU members, being the largest number to attend any single meeting.

Parents' Day Festivities Set Sunday

The sixteenth annual Parents' Day sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, service fraternity, will be held this Sunday. Each May a Sunday is set aside in which the University is host to all parents, offering them an opportunity to visit the campus and participate in the day's events.

The highlight of the weekend will be an address by acting Chancellor Sitterson at 3:15 p.m. "on the green" in front of the Old Well. His address will be combined with a Glee Club and Band Concert, followed by an informal reception with the faculty, administration, and parents.

Letters to the parents of all freshman and transfer students were sent by APO. Planning for the event began in January.

Other activities for the day include a Pass - in - Review and Awards Ceremony by the Air Force and Navy ROTC units on Fetzer Fields at 1:30 p.m. The dormitories, fraternities, and sororities, as well as the departmental buildings will hold "open houses" in the afternoon.

Points of interest for the visiting parents will include Kenan Stadium, Carmichael Auditorium, Coker Arboretum and the Forest Theater. Guided tours at the Computation Center will be conducted from 2-5 p.m.

Tri Delts To Feast Tuesday

The traditional Tri Delt spaghetti supper to raise money for scholarships for two coeds will be held next Tuesday night from 5:30 to 7:30 in the sorority house.

Tickets for the supper cost a dollar and may be purchased in advance from any Tri Delta member. A small number of tickets will be sold at the door.

The ticket entitles the buyer to a complete dinner of spaghetti, tossed salad, French bread, iced tea and dessert.

Last year over 300 tickets were sold to finance the two $150 scholarships that were given. This year the sorority hopes to sell 400 tickets.

Toni Greenwood, Tri Delta publicity chairman, said that the dinner is sponsored by the entire house and will be served by all the members.

Saturday Show Features Togas

A fashion show of ancient dress will be presented Saturday night at 8:30 p.m. in the Playmakers Theater.

"The Descent of the Toga" will present replicas of ancient costumes ranging from 6th century B. C. to the time of Emperor Constantine the Great. The costumes will be compared with ancient paintings and sculptures.

It will be narrated by Mrs. Emeline H. Richardson, Etruscan and Roman archaeologist and author of The Etruscans.

The performance is a benefit sponsored by the N. C. Society of the Archaeological Institute of America. It is part of a nationwide drive to double the institutes endowment.

A performance will also be given Friday at 8:30 p.m. in Baldwin Auditorium on the East Duke Campus.

Tickets are $1.50, $1.00 for students. They can be obtained from the Classics Department, 103 Murphey, or at the door. No seats will be resrved.

Mademoiselle Clicks Around UNC Campus

"O. K., Bernard, you just walk up and down the steps. . . that's right. Now Zacki, you tie that shoe. Oh, what a face on that girl!"

Photographer George Barkentin tucked his head behind his motor - driven Nikon 35 mm camera. Mademoiselle Sportswear Editor Mrs. Nonnie Moore leaned over, adjusted the sleeve on Zacki's blouse, and ran a brush through her hair.

Barkentin moved a little closer to his student model, Zacki Murphy. "Look sad," he said. Zacki looked sad. "Bernard, you have dirty ankles," he said. "That's all right, it won't matter."

The team of photographers from Mademoiselle Magazine finished up their shooting session yesterday on the steps of the Playmaker's Theater. The pictures they took this week will appear in the "Back To College" issue in August.

Yesterday's session started out around the Old Well, moved to the Ram's Head parking lot, and finished at Playmaker's Shown with Zacki in the picture is Bernard Baldwin.

The pictures will be used to model new school fashions in the magazine. Tne student models were selected, and today is the last day they will shoot. Wherever the picture taking sessions get under way there is always a crowd of admiring Carolina Gentlemen to cheer the models on.

South Africa Symposium Coming Here

Plans have been announced for a symposium on South Africa to be held on campus this fall.

"Racial Tension in South Africa: Viewpoints for Americans" will be the topic of the conference which is sponsored by the World University Service.

The conference will be November 4, 5 and 6 according to co - chairmen Jim Medford and Nancy Wilkins. An estimated 400 representatives from colleges and universities throughout the Southeast are exptected to attend.

In addition to the overall sponsorship of the World University Service, local sponsors include the Hillel Foundation, the Wesley Foundation, the Westminster Fellowship, Catholic Students at State, the NSA, the Collegiate Council of the United Nations and the Public Affairs Committee of the YM-YWCA.

Graham Will Speak To 1966 Graduates

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The Commencement address for 1966 Graduation Exercises will be given by Frank Porter Graham, former president of the Consolidated University

The exercises will be held June 6 at 7 p.m. in Kenan Stadium for about 2,000 graduating seniors.

Governor Dan K. Moore and Consolidated University President William C. Friday will be in charge of the conferring of the degrees.

The Alumni Office urged that all graduating seniors and graduate and professional degree candidates participate in the graduation ceremonies

The graduation ceremony this year will climax several days of entertainment that has been arranged for parents and guests of the graduates

The University will provide guest accommodations for these visitors to the campus during the commencement festivities. Morrison Residence Hall will be used to house the guests.

The facilities and an information desk will open Thursday, June 2, and will remain open through Tuesday, June 7. Chase Cafeteria and the Morrison Canteen will remain open during these days, but Lenoir Hall will be closed

Scholarship Book Praised By Many

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

"We liked it so much, we did not stop using it long enough to write and thank you for it."

This is typical of hundreds of letters which the Scholarship Information Centre (SIC) of the YM-YWCA has received since it published "Financial Aid for Southern Negro Students."

The booklet, which lists 200 sources of scholarships and loans available to southern Negro students, was sent to all of the 406 Negro high schools in North Carolina as well as schools throughout the Southeast.

The first pringing of 1,000 was in January. By February, all of these were gone, most of them sent free.

SIC made a second printing of 500 booklet. Now they have distributed over 1,200. The sent 1,000 free and sold the rest of them under costs.

SIC began as a part of the Human Relations Committees of the YM-YWCA with the purpose of overcoming the "information gap" that exists in many parts of the South.

They said, "Basic information on scholarships, financial assistance and loans is not readily available to Negro high school students."

SIC also found that many scholarships were unused each year because information is not available.

The committee began to publish information, distribite it and serve as a center of information for individual students who have particular questions and requests.

Because of the initial success of the first edition, SIC is now compiling a second enlarged edition. They are now trying to get funds to finance it. Based on the $241 which the first edition costed, they estimate the next edition which will be available in the fall will cost $2,000 to $2,500.

The largest single contribution to date was made on April 27 when a check for $50 arrived. SIC also has a promise of a $500 grant from the Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Gal.

Requests for the first edition still come in. Students in Pennsylvania and New York want copies; requests have come from Alabama for copies; even the University of the Pacific wanted copies.

The first 1,000 copies were collated and hand-stapled.

YES Program To Continue This Summer

"It's one thing to read about the problems of public education. It's something else to be where the problems are and know you are doing something about it," says Mike Lawler, director of Youth Educational Services (YES).

YES, a statewide confederation of college students will give students a chance to do something.

Its summer program will try to help disadvantaged children living in low income neighborhoods. It plans to recuirt 500 students to tutor.

"College students living or working near one of the projects are recruited to participate in tutorial and educational activities," Lawler added

Areas are located in Boone, Charlotte, Fayetteville, Greensboro, Laurinburg, Raleigh and Bertie county.

'Tutorial services have already been developed in the sites. This is an effort to continue the work begun by local students during the academic year," he said.

YES is responsible for continuing sumer community activities carried out for the last two years by the N. C Volunteers.

"This summer volunteers will be expected to contribute a minimum of two hours a week to the program

Nurses Win Grade Trophy

The Nurses' Residence Hall has been announced as the women's residence hall with the highest average for the fall semester with a 2.767 average.

This is the second year in a row that the Nurses have received the Carolina Woman's Council Scholarship trophy. The presentation was made at the Valkyrie Sing last week.

Spencer Residence Hall came in second with an overall average of 2.569 and East Cobb came in third with a 2.567 over - all average.

The freshmen women living in West Cobb had the highest over - all average with a 2.759.

The over - all average for residence hall women for last semester was 2.383.

Astronauts Here

Astronaut Neil A. Armstrong, the first man to ever couple - up with another space vehicle, returned to the Morehead Planetarium this week for star studies with other members of his next mission assignment, Gemini Titan eleven (GT 11) back -up Command pilot.

The back - up pilot, William A. Anders, arrived here Monday evening and studied stars during every open period between Planetarium programs through Wednesday afternoon.

Anders was joined on Tuesday evening by Armstrong and Richard F. Gordon, the prime crew pilot, for a late Planetarium session from 9:30 to midnight.

The Command Pilot of the prime crew, Charles (Pete) Conrad of GT 5 fame, was unable to participate. Scientific experimentation planned for the GT 11 mission will probably require the entire team to return to the Morehead Planetarium for a pre - launch date review and simulation.

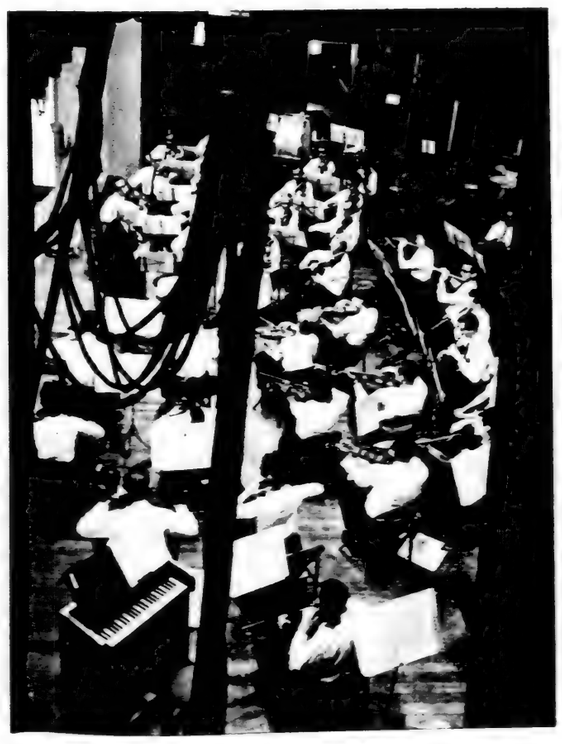
Humanities Confab

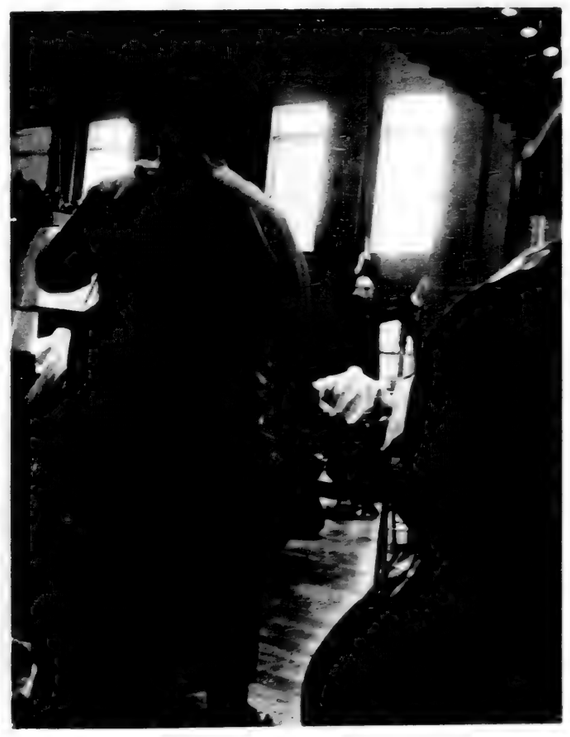
Presidents or representatives of 52 colleges and universities in the Carolinas and Virginia will meet here Friday to discuss the Cooperative Program in the Humanities and relationships between their institutions in the humanities area.

Saturday the group will hold their discussions on the Duke campus in Durham. The administrators will seek ways to strengthen humanities programs in their institutions.

Prof. Clifford M. Foust of the UNC History Department is in charge of the meeting. Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson of UNC and President Douglas Knight of Duke will welcome the visitors to their respective campuses.

N.C. Symphony Orchestra Wow's School Children, Pleases Teachers





YOUNG PEOPLE FROM ALL OVER flocked to Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon to listen to the North Carolina Symphony. The Symphony stopped here for an afternoon of entertainment amid a grand tour of the state. The tour is an annual affair, according to conductor Dr. Benjamin Swalin.

Confusion Abounds

The Durham Morning Herald

The National Student Association sent its own fact-finding delegation to South Viet Nam to back up its criticisms (moderate to bitter) of American policies there.

The report on what the NSA delegates learned from student leaders in Viet Nam exposes nothing so much as the confusion that clouds virtually all conclusions about Viet Nam. Predictably enough, the delegates discovered ample evidence that official American policy makers have helped foul up the situation in Viet Nam through blunders and misconceptions.

But unpredictably, the delegates discovered at least one serious misconception shared by their organization and some of the more self-assured oracles on how to straighten out Vietnamese affairs. Contrary to the advice of the NSA and an assorted group of U. S. senators, it turned out that Vietnamese students weren't interested in a coalition government with the Viet Cong or National Liberation Front.

The Vietnamese student leaders specifically rejected the idea (advocated by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy) of inviting the National Liberation Front into a coalition government that would presumably work out South Viet Nam's political future. Other objections and aspirations passed along to the NSA delegates do not, unfortunately, point a clear way out of the imbrogilio in Viet Nam.

If they clarified any misconceptions about their view of the Viet Cong as an expression of legitimate political expression by and for South Viet Nam, they indulged in a few of their own. Judging from the preliminary report of the NSA delegates, the South Vietnamese students want the kind of active help they are getting to establish an independent South Viet Nam, but they want none of the unfortunate side effects that massive military, economic or even technical aid produces almost as a matter of course.

For their part, the Vietnamese students put their faith for the future in a strong, unified, nationalistic government. But since the absence of just such a regime is one clear source of continuing chaos in Viet Nam, one must wonder if the South Vietnamese students don't labor under serious misconceptions of their own about what are ends and what are means in South Viet Nam.

That Special Day

Sunday is Mother's Day.

When this was first brought to our attention we had some hesitation about it. Our first reaction was that this is nothing but a capitalistic concoction, suitable for promotion of the sale of fancy cards and corsages.

However, we noted that Christmas might also be attacked on these same grounds, and rather than jeopardize our interests in this time of giving we abandoned this argument lest it result in the abolishment of Santa Claus as well as Mother.

Next we considered the possibility of Mother's Day as a communist front. After all, it heralds the word of love and mutual concession, and pink and red designs flourish on cards for the occasion. Then we discovered that members of the same legislative body that enacted the Speaker Ban Law are married to mothers and do, themselves, observe this day. We were also informed that various mothers have spoken on this campus in the past several years. We doubted that a subversive movement could pass this test.

We listened to charges that the whole affar is nothing but a front for the integration movement. This was based on the fact that white and black children stand side by side, hailing the founders of their families. This, supposedly, creates the impression in their minds that all families are the same, and, therefore, they should have no hesitations about interracial marriage.

This argument, however, was counter-balaneced by protests that Mother's Day is, in fact, a segregationist's delight since it imbeds the idea that "My mother is the greatest in the whole world. My children must have a mother just like her." Followers of this belief say this means, above all, a mother of the same race.

Therefore, after lengthy deliberation and consultation with some of the world's most renowned sociologists, economists, psychologists, political scientists, legislators and marriage counselors we have reached our decision.

We hope our findings will be helpful to all our readers in making their decision on this matter. And if any decide to join us in our observance, we remind them that the day is not long off.

Mother's Day cards must be in the Post Office today if they are to get home before the deadline.

Wilson Claims Hays Was Wrong About SL Session

(Editor's note — This article was written by the floor leader of the University party in response to charges made recently in an article by Elections Board Chairman Arthur Hays.)

By ED WILSON

Like many others who were present for last Thursday night's session of the Legislature, I was confused and bemused as the self - righteous, holier - than - thou blast which former Rep. William A. "Art" Hays leveled at myself and the University Party Caucus in Monday's DTH (intimate associates are allowed to address Hays, the Franklin Flash, as "Art"). Lo, I was accused of distortions and misrepresentation of facts.

Actually Artie Hays' column proved only one thing — that he is indeed the master of distortion and misrepresentation of facts. Therefore, inadequate as I feel attempting to match my feeble capabilities against the prowess of a second year law student (Artie is a second year law student you know) permit me to offer a few facts about Artie's barrage of distortions.

1. In the Ehringhaus re - election suit Hays appeared in behalf of the Elections Board as he has in every other case, not in behalf of the University Party. Hays is a very impartial chairman and has not appeared in behalf of partisan groups while holding that position.

2. The U. P.'s opposition to Doug McKeown was not ambiguous in the slightest. McKeown is an Student Party hack, and we felt that it would not be in the best interest of the student body to have an S.P. hack as chairman of the Elections Board.

3. Hays neglected to point out that a substantial part of the Student Party caucus, led by Rep. Ben White of Ehringhaus who lives one floor below McKeown, also opposed the appointment. Obviously they also felt that they were acting in the best interest of the student body.

4. Hays stated that no one was permitted to speak in McKeown's defense. He neglected to point out that the Student Party Floorleader, who sat with Hays during the debate, had full access to the floor at all times. He also failed to point out that an SP legislator, Jan Wuerhmann, did speak in favor of the appointment, and that the speaker continually called for debate in the affirmative. When the motion to close debate was made it was necessary for the SP to vote with the UP in order to obtain the necessary two - thirds majority.

The SP says that President Powell is now in a dilemma about whom to nominate as chairman of the Elections Board. I suggest that he nominate Arthur Hays who has been one of the fairest and certainly the most proficient Elections Board chairmen in many years. We would vote to confirm him without hesitation.

If Hays does not want the job again (and I certainly could not blame him for that), perhaps he might try his hand at going to law school. He certainly has the potential to become a fine attorney.

"Oh my gosh! Mother's Day is Sunday."

Letter To The Editor

Dale Strikes Back At Band, Critics

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Who the hell is James Dale?

James Dale is an average (which many may question) student, and he is majoring in physics and journalism. His attempts to express himself may not always be very clear, or in some cases not very agreeable to the elite of this university.

He is not a professed music critic, nor is he of any special talent as a musician. But he does like music and he has heard fine sounds come from the students in the University Music Department.

He is 21, definitely not completely "grown up" (nor does he consider himself less mature than others in this class) and enjoys listening to good music of all types, even military type music (not meaning that the music in the last concert was of a military type).

He believes Major Yesulaitis to be a very competent conductor and instructor for the band, if he desires to be so. He did not quit the band because he disliked the director, but because he worked during the hours of rehearsal. However, he did find that the rehearsals held earlier this year were in general very lax and often he was very irritated (along with many others in the band) by the attitude of the rest of the band members, their lack of attention to the conductor and the conductor's seemingly permissive attitude toward those constantly cracking jokes at every interval when they were not playing, even when the conductor had stopped to explain the correct interpretation of the music. The conductor did not do anything to alter the situation and the rehearsals became more and more a waste of time (in comparison to what the band had been able to accomplish in a similar period of time).

He also noticed that none of the members (or really relatively few besides those few that practice every day whether the band is there or not) attempted to improve their parts between rehearsals and each rehearsal was spent going over the same parts for the same people. A band doesn't improve that way!

A band must be inspired by someone, and that important responsisbility falls on the shoulders of the conductor, in this case Major Yesulaitis. The Major may have tried and been defeated by the apathy created after Dr. Fred left. This cannot be held against him if he really tried, and is trying to challenge now the band in a way that will produce a quality organization.

Many past members of the band and wind ensemble were very disappointed that the wind ensemble was discontinued (allegedly through lack of support by the administration of the Music Department) last year, but they were led to believe that it would be eventually organized. But nothing has happened and the band has developed into a rather obscure outfit unable to attract the quality musicians and the required public demanded by an accomplished group.

The marching band made a valiant effort under the leadership of Major "Y" to become something the students and public would want to see and hear, and new uniforms were even obtained, helping to produce a sense of drive and pride in the band, regardless of the attacks made on it.

But when the concert band began to practice no sense of price was felt throughout the band. The administration did not seem to recognize that the concert ban was there. The planned tour of the concert band devolved from a very ambitions program at first, into a mediocre trip, the reason being either mismanagement of the tour preparations or lack of support of the Music Department administration.

The concert last Tuesday could be considered only as an example of what the band has become. The Tar Heel missed the scene by giving the date of the concert as the previous Sunday instead of Tuesday. The students missed the scene by not coming (about 150 people were there and of that probably 70 per cent were directly asso- the band missed the scene by not producing a concert of the quality it would have been with a little more effort. Most of the members of the ban would probably admit that they did not practice as they should have and that if they had, the quality of the performance would have been improved considerably.

Dale was very pleased to find that many persons seemed to be interested in the welfare of the band, many more than he had anticipated. He sincerely hopes the band will improve (though he does not see how under the present system) and he hopes to play again in the band when his schedule will allow it and his ability enough to warrant it.

"Footprints" by Paul Dickson

It is hoped that this column will be informative and on occasion entertaining. Its scope will be anything from campus items to the war in Vietnam. The opinions expressedand there may be more opinion than fact, will be my own or in some cases the opinions of those whom I hold in high regard.

This past week was Honor System Week. Many students in the judiciary put long hours into preparing a program for communication and emphasis on the judicial system.

One of the articles appearing in the DTH this past week as a part of the honor system presentation discussed student autonomy and the right of students to set and maintain their own standards of conduct. The article was written by Jim Aplin, former assistant attorney general. Two of his comments merit considerable discussion.

"First," he said, "there is no such thing as "student autonomy.' " "Our student government," he later continued, "is a 'gift' from the Trustees and the administration, not an inalienable right." Both of these arguments are in many ways incorrect in light of the past 160 years of student government history.

They brought full force to me a serious failing on the part of students in and out of student government, i.e., a serious lack of knowledge and understanding of the history and traditions of the University and Student Government.

The administrative code written by former Dean of Students Fred Weaver does state that the responsibility for student discipline was delegated by the trustees to the faculty and from the faculty to the students. However, the force of history and common law developed over the past 160 years puts this matter of autonomy in an entirely different perspective which Dean Weaver also expressed in a booklet he wrote in 1953 describing the development of student history and traditions. Albert Coates, law professor and founder of the Institute of Government, in a speech to the Di - Phi Senate in 1951 also explains the meaning of student autonomy. This speech, "Out of a Classroom in Chapel Hill," has become a well known and much used historical document for student leaders.

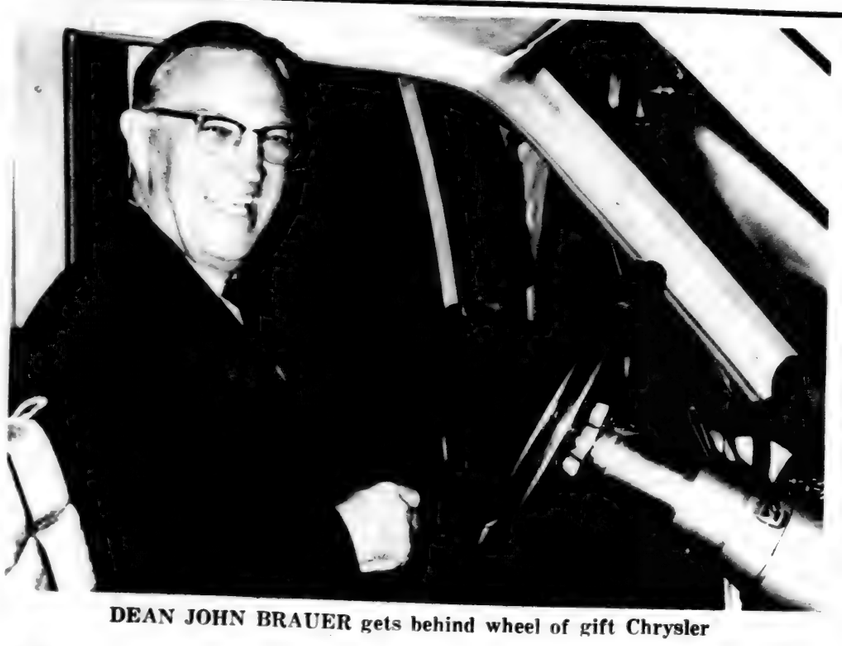
The Board of Trustees in the Medford Committee Report on a serious Honor Code case several years ago made some very strong statements in support of the "established student institutions at Chapel Hill" and students' rights with regard to minding their own affairs in the area of student discipline.

This matter of student rights and responsibilities is an important one. It is much discussed and debated especially during times of conflict between the administration and students. Students should understand their rights as well as their responsibilities in maintaining conduct.

For the next several days there will be reprinted in this space parts of "Tradition in Chapel Hill" by Fred Weaver and "Out of a Classroom in Chapel Hill" by Albert Coats. These should be useful to students, faculty, and administration in understanding the concepts of student government developed since the University opened it doors in 1795.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.



DEAN JOHN BRAUER gets behind wheel of gift Chrysler

John . Brauer, Dean of the UNC School of Dentistry who will retire from his top administrative duties here July 1, has been given a new 1966 Chrysler New Yorker automobile by the faculty members of the school.

At a dinner and ceremonies in honor of Dr. Brauer, who is the first dean of the Dentistry School and organized its teaching program from the beginning here in 1950, was given the keys to the new car by Dr. Ben Barker at whose home the reception was held.

Dr. Roy L. Lindahl presented Dean Brauer with a citation of appreciation from the McGraw - Hill Publishing Co. of New York along with two leather - bound books, "Dentistry for Children" and "The Dental Assistant" of which he is co - author and co - editor.

Dean Brauer was lauded for his leadership in dentistry education in the nation and mention was especially made of his work and publication in children's dentistry. He is a winner of the O. Max Gardner Award which goes to members of the faculty in the institutions of the Consolidated University who have done "most for the welfare of the human race."

Animals Make News All Over The World

African Crow Saves Friend

LIVINGSTONE, Zambia (AP) — For six days a puppy, trapped in an animal snare, was kept alive by a crow.

Both animals belong to a couple living at a temporary road construction camp.

Recently the puppy disappeared. The couple searched in the thick bush surrounding the camp but no trace of it could be found.

Then they noticed that their pet crow, brought to them by a servant, did not seem to be eating normally.

The crow wouldtake a bit of food in its beak, fly off and return a short while later to fetch another scrap of food. The crow, which normally ate his food straight out of the dish, would then repeat the performance.

The couple followed the crow when it felw offagain with a prive piece of meat. Keeping just ahead of the couple, the crow led them to the spot where the dog lay trapped.

Stephen Mails Easter Bunny

Five - year - old David Kleinof Salt Lake City was right. His 3 - year - old brother, son of Mr. and Mrs. Reed C. Klein, had indeed put his rabbit, an Easter gift, into a mailbox.

"I wanted to send it to Grandmother," he explained.

His parents called the post office, but no one answered, and the police just laughed, Mrs. Klein said. But a postal inspector rescued the rabbit this morning after the Klein children kept it happy by slipping clover into the mailbox during the night.

PROGRAM HIGHLIGHTS

FLAHERTY AND FILM — NET "Man of Aran" Frances Hubbard Flaherty, widow of the late documentary film maker Robert Flaherty, introduces this showing of her husband's first sound film, made in 1934. Excerpts from the film show the people of Aran (island off the west coast of Ireland) going to sea in their boats, watching the basking shark and finally braving a storm. As voices of the people mingle with the sound of the sea, students of the art of filmmaking may be assured of reasons for Flaherty's having received the compliment of being credited as the "father of the documentary film." This is the third of four programs presenting selections from work of Flaherty.

Harry's: The Beatniks Are Different Now, But Beer And Salami Are Still The Same

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

Th times — and Harry's — they are a changin'.

Harry's, which sells pizza and salami and beer and stuff at 175 E. Franklin St., has undergone a metamorphosis in the past few years.

Harry's was once a planning base for proest demonstrations of various types, much to the chagrin of co - owner Ralph Macklin.

Part of the reason the protestor types don't come around anymore, he said, is that they have changed themselves.

"I don't think, by and large, that the beat group has as much on the ball as it did five to seven years ago," said Macklin.

"Then they were mostly grad students and professors and all making excellent grades . . .

"At that time, the beats were damn talented people . . .

"Now, due in some part to the popularization of the movement, it's become open to anybody who wants to become let their hair grow long and look unkept."

Macklin, 27, is a 1961 Carolina grad with a major in Industrial Relations. He runs the place with his parents ("My father's name IS Harry".

Harry's is a family affair with Macklin. His uncle, Harry Sterns, opened it in 1926 across the street from where it is now. In 1927, it moved by the Carolina Theater.

Then, in 1939, Macklin's father bought out the uncle and kept Harry's until 1944, when it was sold.

Harry's went through two different owners, closed in 1952 and was reopend in 1954 where the Fireside is now. In 1960, it moved to its present location.

Another reason for the change in clientel, Macklin said, is the physical change that Harry's has undergone.

As one regular put it:

"Before, a beat could feel at home here. The place was dirty and so was he. Now, the place is clean and he is dirty."

During the past few vacations, Harry's has retiled the floor, panelled the walls, installed new booths and put in a new juke box system.

There is also this new menu with 101 different sandwiches that have names like High Rise (ham, corned beef, hot pastrami, chicken salad, chopped liver, tuna salad, Swiss and American cheeses and five pieces of bread), Lumpkin, College Bored and Coedible.

Since High Rise made its debut in September, Macklin said, only about a dozen of the $2.75 sandwiches have been sold.

"I had a lot of fun making up that menu," Macklin said. "I spent about two months dreaming — no, not dreaming — thinking up sandwiches and names."

Another regular thing about Harry's is the pictures around the walls. They're supposed to be changed about every six weeks, but the current batch of modern art works has been up for about six months, Macklin said.

And then, there are the new type customers, including academic types and sorority girls. Macklin says he knows 60 to 70 percent by name.

"The departments that come in here with the greatest frequency are Regional and City Planning and Anthropology and a lot of the local architects."

"The political science department "has a fairly large contingent," too, Macklin said.

"The fraternities don't come in much, but the sororities do, especially the Chi O's," said Macklin. "The only fraternity that comes in with any degree of frequency is the St. A's."

"A tradition that hasn't been kept up of late is that the editor of the Daily Tar Heel was one of our regular customers," he said.

"I could always understand why the editor would be one of our customers — because this is a place where you can relax."

Most the customers are from out of state, Macklin said.

Jumpingest Bull Frog Of State Will Be Named

RALEIGH (AP) — A contest to select North Carolina's jumpingest bull frog to represent the state in the world famous International Frog Jump jubilee at Angel's Camp, Calif., will be held on Capitol Square in Raleigh at 3 p.m. May 13.

The International Frog Jump is staged annually as a part of the Calaveras County Fair at Angles Camp and more than 2,000 frogs were entered in the event last year. A crowd of 60,000 watched. The jump will be held this year May 19-22.

It will be the fourth year that the state has entered its champion bullfrog in the California contest. The 1964 entry, which was named "Tar Heel Terror II," won the Governor's Cup contest with a jump of 11 feet 7 inches, but the 1963 and 1965 entries did not get off the launching pad.

Bullfrog fanciers who want to enter frogs in the state contest are requested to notify Wade Lucas, public information officer for the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development or have their frogs in Raleigh and ready to jump before 3 p.m. on Friday, May 13.

UC Berkeley Hit For 'Debauchery'

SACRAMENTO, Calif., (AP) — The State Senate Committee on Un-American activities pictured the Berkeley campus of the University of California yesterday as seething with communist and homosexual activity, and blamed UC President Clark Kerr. Kerr promptly denied it.

Under Kerr, charged the committee, Communist-oriented students and nonstudents have made the Berkeley campus the nationwide center for the anti - Viet Nam war movement. Homosexuality and sexual promiscuity, the senator suggested, are rampant.

Kerr called the committee's report "inaccurate" and "distorted" and repeated his challenge that the senaotrs produce the name of communists at the university.

Kerr said he has been asking the committee for four years to provide the names of communists connected with the university.

"No reply has ever been received," he said "I repeat my request."

Kerr said the university "by its nature is dedicated to freedom in a free society. It can become, consequently, an arena for dissent." He said he supports dissent as necessary for progress, and "we also support the principle of fair play."

The five - member committee accused Kerr of a "hostile attitude" toward its work, and said he not only didn't help in seeking out Communist activities on campus "but actually took steps that tended to prevent its being given."

The Senators also charged Kerr with being instrumental in re - hiring a teacher fired, the committee said, because he lied about his past when he took the state's anti - communist loyalty oath. It named the teacher as Eli Katz.

Kerr had been told by an unnamed "but responsible" federal agency that Katz was still connected with communist activities, the committee said. But the UC president failed to take steps to block the re - hiring, said the senators.

Katz, 37, now teaching at Western Reserve University in Cleveland, called the section of the report concerning him "a misstatement of all the facts referred to."

To back up its charge that homoseculaity is rampant at Berkeley, the committee cited a story in the Daily Californian, the student newspaper, which reported that 2,700 of the school's 27,000 students were homosexual.

Band Plays For Parents

The UNC Concert Band will present a Spring Pops Concert tomorrow during Parents' Day ceremonies at 4 p.m. in front of the Old Well.

Parents' Day speeches from Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson and other University officials will precede the show, which is open to parents and students alike.

Benches will be set up on the lawn and students are invited to come and sip lemonade while they hear selections from Broadway hits as well as some traditional march tunes.

Major Yesulaitis, band director, said the show will be in "the lighter vein." He stressed that "this will not be a symphonie concert" but a "pop program."

"Sound Off" by John Philip Sousa, "The National Geographie March" by Darcy will be contrasted by such selections as "The March of the Siamese Children" by Richard Rogers and Edwin Goldman's "Children's March."

Yesulaitis said highlights from "Gypsy," "My Fair Lady" and "Oliver" will be done by the 64-piece band.

Other novelty selections will be "The Girl I Left Behind Me," "Bolero Espagnol," "Music of Vincent Youmans," music from "The Student Prince" and a piece by Leroy Anderson featuring the entire clarinet section called "Clarinet Candy."

Yack Names '66 Queen

Toni Greenwood is the 1966 Yackety Yack queen.

Selection of Miss Greenwood along with a court of six other coeds was announced by the staff of the University annual yesterday.

In addition to Miss Greenwood, a junior from Sherman Oaks, Cal., the Yack court included Peg MacQueen, a senior from Clinton; Jackie Cole, a freshman from Roanoke Rapids; Judy Dudly, a senior from Washington; Anita Wilkinson, a sophomore from Durham; Peach Pearce, a junior from Gastonia; and Judy Howerton, a junior from Gibsonville.

Members of the court are featured in a special section of the Yack, distribution of which will begin May 16.

The queen and the court were selected by a panel of judges during the fall semester; the judging was held in a closed session and contestants were not informed of the choices of the judges.

The 496-page book is one of the largest annuals ever, 32 pages more than last year's.

Total production costs for the book exceed $60,000.

Mary Rebecca Rhodarmer, now a senior, was the queen of last year's annual; she is from Canton.

Carolina's Newest Sorority Selects Twenty New Pledges

Kappa Alpha Theta, the oldest Greek letter sorority and the latest sorority to colonize at Carolina, entertained their 20 new pledges at a service and banquest held at the Blair House Thursday night.

Also Mary Coleman, Charleston, S. C.; Alleen Cater, Anniston; Betty Jo Gray, Dover; Talmadge Hinkle, Lexington; Freda Howell, Gibson; Lloydetta Humphrey, Beckley, W. Va.; Saundra McCracken, Hamlet; Peach Pearce, Gastonia; Ellen Robinson, Huntsville, Ala.; Christine Schumacher, Annapolis, Md.; Terrell Seawell, Chapel Hill; and Barbara Wilkins, Greensboro.

The pledges were selected Wednesday after being interviewed by the sorority's national officers Mrs. Frederick D. Hunt of Washington, D. C., and Mrs. Fred Schmuck of Columbus, Ohio.

The colony hopes to build a $250,000 house at the corner of Cottage Lane and East Rosemary Street. The Chapel Hill zoning board agreed to the proposed location for the house at its meeting last week.

The colonization of Theta brings to eight the number of sororities on campus. The last sorority to colonize here was Phi Mu in 1964.

YDC To Hear Creech

The UNC and Orange Young Democrats Clubs will co-sponsor a speech by Bill Creech at its last meeting of the year on Wednesday at 8 p.m. in Howell Hall.

Creech is a candidate for the national House of Representatives. His opponent in the May 28 Democratic Primary is incumbent Harold Cooley who addressed the clubs earlier this year.

Festival Interviews

Interviews will be held from Tuesday through Friday for committee chairmen for the 1967 Fine Arts Festival.

Festival chairman Travis Abbott urged interested students to sign up for appointments now at the Graham Memorial information desk.

The festival, to be held the week of April 9, will feature musicians, artists, dancers and poets.

Student Party Meets

The Student Party will meet at 8 p.m. Sunday in Gerrard Hall.

The question of annulment of the action taken at the last meeting will be considered. Also, two positions on the Advisory Board will be filled.

A legislative vacancy caused by the resignation of Dick Capps will be filled in MDI (men outside corporate limits of Chapel Hill).

UP To Meet

University Party members will meet Monday at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall to fill a seat on the Excutive Council as well as several adminitrative vacancies.

A constitutional amendment modifying the present procedure in filling legislative vacancies will be considered for the second and final time.

All members and residence hall chairman, in particular, are urged to attend.

International Dinner

The Cosmopolitan Club will have an international dinner and entertainment tonight at 5:30 in the Presbyterian Student Center.

The meeting is for international students on campus and the local families who are serving as their hosts.

Awards will be given to persons on campus who have contributed to improve international relations.

Tickets, which cost $1.50, are on sale at GM, the Y, Kemps and Danzigers until noon today. There will be a limited number available at the door.

HINTON JAMES RESIDENCE HALL is showing signs of starting the long ten-story climb upward. This crane, moved onto the construction site last week, will lift men and material up as the residence hall rises. A chain-link fence has also been constructed around the area to keep wandering sight-seers out.

Freshmen Scooters May Be Outlawed

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Proposals have been made by the Traffic Advisory Committee to Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson that no freshmen be allowed to own motorcycles next year.

Sitterson said yesterday he has seen the proposals, but is waiting for advice from the head of the N. C. Motor Vehicle Department and from local town officials before he passes on the new parking rules.

Other proposed changes include strict rules on auxiliary safety equipment for motorcycle riders, tighter restrictions on commuting students, fees for faculty members, and higher quality point averages for upper classmen drivers.

Dean of Men William G Long, head of the traffic committee, refused comment yesterday. His assistant, Bob Kepner, would say only that the decision was now up to Sitterson.

Part of the proposals include making the intramural field beside Carmichael Auditorium into a parking area, and later building decks as more and more cars come on campus.

Sitterson recognized the critical parking situation on campus and said "there will have to be something done about it."

He did not say whether he approved of the proposals made by the Traffic Committee. Because of the large number of motorcycle accidents this year, Sitterson suggested that some type of instructional program be provided for motor bike owners.

Long said new rules will be approved before the end of this semester in order to include them in the Carolina Handbook to be mailed to incoming students this summer.

There is one student representative on the Traffic Advisory Committee. Other members include Long, Campus Security Chief Arthur Beaumont, Dean of Student Affairs C. O. Cathey, Dr. William Demeritt of the Dental School, and Fred B. Haskell of the personel department.

A proposal was also made to obtain buses to transport students back and forth from South campus.

As of Wednesday there were 627 motorcycles registered on campus, and 294 of them were owned by freshmen. Of the 6,544 cars registered 713 were owned by sophomores, 1,243 by juniors, 1,357 by seniors, and 1,969 by graduate students

SL Passes Six Bills In Session

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Student Legislature passed six bills and one resolution in a session Thursday night.

The only debate of the night came on the bill amending the by - laws of Student Legislature so that fraternities and sororities which have complied with the requirements on discrimination of the Faculty Committee on Fraternities and Sororities can receive funds for televisions under the TV Bill passed in the last Assembly of Legislature.

This debate centered on whether the word "immediately" should remain in the section of the bill defining when a fraternity or sorority begins eligible for funds.

The bill passed by a voice vote after its authors decided to agree to delete "immediately," since it added nothing to the bill.

Other action, all taken by voice vote, included passage of these bills and a resolution:

A bill providing telephones in the private residences of the chairmen of the Men's and Women's Honor Councils. It becomes effective Sept. 1, 1966.

A bill providing $125 to Alpha Phi Omega to help finance Parents' Day.

A bill establishing the NSA Commission and policies between Student Government and NSA. This bill consolidated and clarified the already existing statues.

Speaker Bill Purdy announced a special session scheduled for Wednesday to consider the budget.

Four bills and two resolutions were introduced and sent to committees.

One resolution would approve 11 appointments to the Judicial Branch of Student Government. Leon Woodruff, Buddy Wester, David LeBarre Gary Boggs and Tom Heys have been appointed as assistants to the Attorney General.

Diane Ricks was appointed as assistant attorney general for women and Alice Graham and Patty Delaney as her assistants.

The other resolution would approve seven appointments to the Executive Branch of Student Government.

The appointments were John Hamilton and Sharon Rose as co-chairmen of the Toronto Exchange, Taylor Branch as chairman of the Honor System Commission, Arthur Hays as chairman of the special legislative services, Robin West as chairman of the Carolina Forum, Hugh Saxon as chairman of the Budge Committee, James Rush as chairman of the Consolidated University Student Council and Phil Kirstein as Press Secretary.

The bills would provide $2,000 for Men's Glee Club's tour of Europe, $400 for social room improvements in Old East, $50 to the Orientation Commission and $136.55 to the Orientation Commission.

Dick Capps' resignation was announced.

Peaceniks End Fast

Thirteen Student Peace Union members gathered alone in Polk Place at dusk yesterday to mark the end of a five-day fast by six of the group.

The students conducted the "Fast for Peace" in protest of American involvement in Viet Nam.

The group gathered in the center of a nearly deserted campus while most students were eating supper. Occasional students who walked by glanced at the sign "For Peace in Viet Nam" taped to the flagpole and kept on walking.

Six SPU members — five boys and one girl — began fasting early Monday; their only food for five days consisted of two glasses of orange juice each day.

Pharmacy Has Big Weekend

The 1966 Pharmacy Weekend continues today with softball games at the intramural field at 1 p.m., 2-5 - 3-5 vs. 4-5 - 5-5. At 3 p.m. it will be Kappa Psi vs. Phi Delta Chi, and a picnic at 5 p.m. at the American Legion Hut.

At 8 p.m. "Gore and the Upsetters" Combo will play for an informal combo party at the American Legion Hut.

BULLETIN

Chez Kemp, Ltd., Franklin Street's most unusual phonograph record and novelty shop, was gutted by a fire which began in the attic and swept through the whole interior of the store at about 10:00 last night. Several hundred students stood across the street in McCorkle Place and watched firemen fight the blaze. No estimate of damages was immediately available.

DICK STARNES — newly-elected chief cheerleader, tours campus encouraging school spirit for next football season. Starnes heads a team of 12 cheerleaders, six of which were chosen last week from the freshman team.

Good Teaching Makes The Good University

Raleigh News and Observer

The good teacher makes the good university.

We're apt to forget that in these days of oversize campuses and oversize research programs; apt to forget the really good teacher in the rush of all those other matters which also go to make up the university of today. In its current issue, Time magazine reminds us about the central place of the fine teacher, and North Carolina can take pride in the fact that a Chapel Hill professor, Dr. O. B. Hardison, Jr., is one of the ten cited from across the nation.

It's not surprising to be reminded that there are very good teachers now at Chapel Hill. Down through the decades, the University has had more than its fair share of teachers who have brought excitement as well as learning into their classrooms. The University has been blessed with men whose teaching has meant that the campus had done great things for its students and, through them, for the State as a whole. The article in Time simply serves as a reminder that the days of good teachers are still with us at Chapel Hil.

This reminder is appropriate at any time. It tells us again, at a time when we need to be reminded, that Chapel Hill does things for its students. It does change them, to be sure, and if it didn't produce change it wouldn't be doing the job it must do to be worth while. If the day ever comes when Chapel Hill becomes a sterile place which can have a student on the campus and send him back home unchanged after four years, we will be a sadder and a sorrier state.

This necessary ferment has brought hard looks and harder blows to Chapel Hill during all its life, and the University is just now emerging from a season of such looks and blows. It has weathered this latest storm and has come out stronger than before, as is always the case with really strong institutions.

The presence of men such as Dr. Hardison on the Chapel Hill campus means, in its simplest terms, that Chapel Hill still is the kind of place where we can send our children with the justifiable hope that they will come back to us exciting young people who are excited about the things they can carry to their new world and the things that world can give to them.

The University system is the real capstone of all education in North Carolina. It reached that point by the kind of job it has done during all its long life. As long as it remains the capstone, education in North Carolina will be alive and vital and will have a real bearing on the lives of all the people of the State.

Weekly Awards

*Man of the Week: Charlie Scott, the much sought-*after super basketball star who disappointed Duke and Davidson (among others) when he signed a grant-in-aid to play basketball at UNC. (This award is no joke!)

Evolution of the Week: Statement by Jean Sprain Wilson, fashion writer for the Associated Press that "Ears and neck may replace bosoms . . . (we doubt it) . . . legs and midriff as the erogenous zones of the feminine figure soon, if fall style ideas introduced by Bonnie Cashin catch on."

Professor of the Week: The UNC student who is down six quality points at UNC and taught two classes in economics at Duke this past week.

Foolishness of the Week: The U. S. Army Military Police vehicle that detained a Soviet Military sedan carrying an officer and two enlisted men for 45 minutes at Checkpoint Charlie. Informed sources said the action was in retaliation for the detention April 23 of a U. S. military patrol in East Berlin.

Cut of the Week: University of Colorado scientists who departed from the normal pretty girl-pair of scissors ribbon-cutting ceremony yesterday. They used helium-filled balloons to hold the ribbon at waist height. Then they sent a laser beam to a reflector on top of the space science building four blocks away. The reflected beam passed through a telescopic photo electric cell to activate a machine that started the countdown. An electric pulse from this machine fired a ruby laser beam that causes a target balloon to explode and burn the ribbon in two places. The pieces were carried away by the helium-filled balloons.

Losers of the Week: Awarded jointly to DTH staffer Ernest Robl and Gov. Dan K. Moore. Robl's camera broke when he snapped a photo of the governor Monday.

Smoker of the Week: A youngster touring the campus with a group that looked to be eighth or ninth grade students yesterday afternoon. We looked out the window of GM and noticed him slyly puffing away behind the group of students being given instructions by their teacher.

Lizard of the Week: Any student that didn't send his mother a Mother's Day card.

"Footprints" by Paul Dickson

Former dean of students Fred Weaver wrote "Traditions in Chapel Hill" in 1953. For the next several days this column will be used to reprint excerts from that booklet.

Dean Weaver began his booklet by raising the question, "What is the legitimate University tradition? What is the essential theme of her history.

"The University of North Carolina shares with all other universities a heritage from the medieval universities of Euope and England and more immediately from the early universities of North America and especially Princeton, alma mater of her founder, William Richardson Davie. But her own tradition of student life follows from the circumstances of the founding as the first state university, and the main stream of that tradition is student government . . .

"It was natural in the first university to be created as an agency of the self - governing state for the students to think of a self - governing student community. If society was to be democratic, democratic student life seemed the logical way to train for "an honorable discharge of the social duties of life.' But the early trustees entertained no thought of student government. They imposed such a strict and authoritarian discipline that they soon had another revolution on their hands, only this time it was they who were the oppressors. . . . "

Rule by authority — "Each class had a student monitor to report absences and those who were disorderly. Saturday afternoons were allowed for 'amusements.' On Sundays all were required to attend religious services in the morning and in the afternoon they were examined on principles of religion and morality. Students were restricted by rules touching every form of vice and mischief such as keeping ardent spirits, association with evil company, and 'playing games of hazard.' It was forbidden to go out of sight of the buildings or hearing of the bell. A student could be expelled for associating with one who had been dismissed by the faculty.

Student revolt — "By attempting to regulate the personal conduct of students with unreasonable and obnoxious rules, and above all by compelling seniors to serve as monitors to inform on their fellow students, the trustees aroused the utmost hostility to authority. The faculty who had the duty of enforcing the trustee rules were caught between. The reports of the presidents reveal the indignities to which the faculty was subject by students whose devilish ingenuity was sharpened by resentment. They were locked in their offices, personally abused, caricatured, ridiculed, threatened, waylaid, stoned, even fired at with pistols.

"In 1805 the trustees passed an ordinance requiring the president and faculty to take an oath before a justice of the peace or judge promising to uphold the laws of the University. Seniors were designated monitors and likewise placed under oath. Even more stringent rules of conduct were applied. The result of this was at first an urgent protest drawn by forty - five students. When this proved unavailing, the entire number (a majority of the student body) left college. Among those who left were many who attained prominence in later life, including a governor, a judge, a state senator and several members of the General Assembly. Only a few of the students who withdrew ever returned. It was a 'disastrous experiment in college government.' It put an end to the requirement of an oath, but nothing was done to ease the regulations.

Rule within rule — "Happily there was in progress concurrently with these episodes of violence a more constructive trend; it was the gradual shifting of responsibility for student conduct to the students. The first student organization in the University was the Debating Socity (later the Dialectic Senate) formed in July, 1795. In the same year the Society was divided to form the Concord Society (Philanthropic Assembly). These socieites, whose histories are coextensive with the history of the University, were the generators of the tradition of student government.

"They (the societies) worked out careful procedures for bringing offenders to justice. Everystudent belonged to eigher the Di or the Phi, and the regulations applied to the members not only in the halls and on the campus but at all times and all places. By the conscientious enforcement of their own laws the societies soon demonstrated that they could govern the students better than the faculty could; but Reconstruction closed the University before recognition of student government was won."

Tomorrow — Post reconstruction University history. The coming of the Honor system, the student council, and our current form of student government.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Voter Pledge Urged

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel,

During the past few weeks copies of the Voters' Pledge have been placed in the mailboxes of most UNC faculty members. Additional copies of the pledge are also available at the Y. Students of voting age are being urged to secure a copy of the pledge, consider its contents, and if they agree, to sign it and mail to the address on the pledge card.

The Voter's Pledge is being offered in an effort to reveal to the political leaders of the country the sentiments of the American public on the Viet Nam war, and to support those leaders who have spoken out against current policies. In signing the pledge, the citizen makes no "protest," and he does not separate himself from the ordinary course of our nation's political life and traditions. What the pledge does is to give the voter a chance to say now, independently of all the other issues which work to obscure public sentiment on any single point at election time, that he believes our present course in Viet Nam is unsatisfactory, that he wishes to see a decrease in military activity there, that he wants to see negotiations which will include all our present enemies, and thus have a chance of success, that he is for the use of the international agencies we have and against further U.S involvements on the pattern of Viet Nam.

In signing the pledge, the voter is not presuming to be an expert on foreign affairs, but he is endorsing the statements of an impressive array of prominent persons who are calling for a change in our policies. Some of these people are listed on the back of the pledge form.

We must look anew for policies which will serve our national interest better, and which will allow us as a people to reunite in pride behind our own best traditions. There are elected representatives in Congress who have been trying to do this. There could be more. By giving your support in the form Americans have always used — the vote — you are telling them that you agree that we have gone "off the track" in Asia and that you care enough about your country and all humanity to support an end to the fighting through negotiation. Those of us who are distributing the pledge in Chapel Hill and on campus hope that many of those students who are over 21 will see this as something they can do about Viet Nam. For those who would like to participate further, there will be a peaceful demonstration in Washington on Sunday, May 15. Anyone with room for riders or wanting a ride call me at 968-1427.

DTH Unfair To Mangum

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The Daily Tar Heel has finally reached a point of unfairness that will not allow me to be quiet. I have been angered and upset the entire year by the Tar Heel's unfairness to Mangum Dorm, but you went too far Wednesday.

I suffered through the ridicule of the Tar-Heel's sarcastic - reports of Mangum winning several basketball games by protest (although you never mentioned that several larger dorms played with ineligible players). I also remained quiet while the Tar Heel did numerous reports on the activities of Craige, Morrison, and several other dorms and never mentioned Mangum's activities. However, the report of the MRC awards was the "cruelest cut of all."

Mangum won Most Outstanding Residence Hall, yet the Tar Heel could manage just one line while devoting two paragraphs to Morrison Residence College. Morrison should be commended. As a new dormitory and residence college they have done an excellent job. However, Mangum should not be slighted. There is no more spirited and active dorm on campus.

We have been hampered the entire year by the lack of funds and our small size. Despite these handicaps, we have competed in intramurals and beat all competitors. This is not Mangum's only claim to fame. We have also provided a good social life.

Yet Mangum has done more than just create a good dorm; she has created a brotherhood. We have a true feeling of allegiance and belonging not achieved by other dorms. Many people may be proud of being a member of their dorm, but we at Mangum are more than members — we are participating members. There is no group that runs this dormitory, but rather a joint effort. With good psirit and hard work we have achieved what dorms ten times our size have not.

We are very proud of being members of Mangum. We do not demand great praise and adoration, we only want to be treated fairly and equally. If the Tar Heel can not treat us as fairly as any other dorm, then I suggest that they don't write about any dormitories.

Skirts Of Local Gals

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Speaking of women, Mr. Kropelnicki chilly tone with Northern girls lead me t believe that he favors Southern women, a opinion I can't help but agree with in th light of his brilliant argument. Nothing ir ritates me more than a loud Yankee voice not even the dulcet-soft-honey-dripping-sacl erine-sweet tones of a Southern belle. And there's no doubt that the conformity among Northern girls is a serious drawback, why they all look so much alike that you ca hardly tell them from the Southern girls If it weren't for their dress, they might b able to get into the swankier Southern s cieties on campus. But who can afford u conventional fashions when she's paying fo her new car? Of course, who wants an ol Mustang anyway, when they can hav something so practical as 34 complete r wardrobes?

And as for smoking, we can see the Sou thern girls' feminine practicality. I hear one explaining it the other day to a friend (who was, incidentally, from the North, poo girl). The girl was telling her, "How ca you expect a boy to notice your skirt when you've got a cigarette in you mouth?"

And speaking of skirts, I was pleased t hear, the other day, an example of South ern hospitality here on campus. A South ern girl had obviously made it her projec to take this young Northern girl under he warm wing and help her find her way around. I heard her giving some valuable advice to her innocent Northern protegee

"Dearie, how do ya ever 'spect to ketch a man with your skurt belough your gar ters?"

As one Northerner to another, a piece of advice, girls. Try to emulate your Sou thern friends because, you know, "you'll catch 'em faster with honey than with vine gar."

'A Filmgoer's Companion' Provides Trivia Reference

By JOE DEPRIEST

Who directed the 1930 version of "Frankenstein"? (James Whale) Who was the cinema photographer for "Citizen Kane?" (Gregg Toland) What American movie made from a Mickey Spillane mystery influenced Francois Truffaut and film makers? (Kiss Me Deadly," 1955)

A game of Trivia? To some, no aspect of the media is irrevlevant or uninteresting and esoteric questions like these, while certainly not a matter of life or death, and still things they like to know and sometimes encounter difficulty finding out.

A new reference book, "A Filmgoer's Companion" by Leslie Halliwell will keep the student of movie details busy flipping pages for quite some time. This book is an encyclopedia of 3000 items covering cinema from its earliest days to the present. The individual entries are arranged alphabetically from Bud Abbott to Adolph Zucker and cover notables not only in acting and producing but directors, writers, composers, cameramen and some 500 films.

"The Filmgoer's Companpanion" is far from being an all - inclusive work. The entries are abbreviated, to say the least, and undistinguish-

One learns of D. W. Griffith: "America's first major film director, who improved the cinema's image, developed many aspects of technique. made many stars, and was only flawed by his Victorian outlook which was largely responsible for his premature eclipse," and Jeff Chandler: "American leading man with prematurely grey hair."

In his introduction Halliwell writes: ". . . .the more important the person, the longer the entry." Judging by that standard we find Elvis Presley rates 6 lines, Michaelangelo Antonioni 6 lines; Dan Martin 10 lines, Ingmar Bergman 10 lines. Halliwell dealing with everyone from Sergei Eisentein to Dale Evans in one sentence and then listing their most outstanding works. (In the case of Dale Evans the author doesn't list anything).

According to the book's dust jacket blurb, Halliwell's credentials for assembling this volume include being movie buyer for Granada TV in Britain and being "film struck as a child". For some reason, though, foreign films don't strike Mr. Halliwell very well. Again from his introduction: "The emphasis is firmly on Britain and Hollywood: the book is aimed at the general filmgoer, not at the egghead student of film culture who shuns commercial entertainments in favour of middle-European or Oriental masterpieces which never get further than the National Film Theatre, . . . however, references to important foreign films . . . are farily numerous . . . and the book still ranges more widely than anything else published in English."

"The Filmgoer's Companion" is not a volume to increase one's understanding of films, old or new, domestic or foreign. The book's sole value lies in its presentation of straight facts: lists of a film maker's work and their dates, births, deaths, etc. The author does insert some explanations of various technical processes — Cinerama, colour, etc. — and does so in his characteristically succinct fashion. He is stingy with his facts for good reason: the material covered is so vast it could comprise a 20 volume set. Still one wishes the author would have dwelt longer on some of the more important things.

Despite its shortcomings, "A Filmgoers Companion" will have a distinct appeal and usefulness for those who have gorged themselves on movies and retained an admiration for the good and a nostalgic affection for some of the mediocre and downright bad.

—George Orwell's "Animal Farm" was the first full length cartoon made in Britain. (1954).

—Guy Green, director of "A Patch of Blue", photographed the 1948 David Lean production of "Oliver Twist".

—Jules Dassin, director of "Phadedra", did a version of Poe's "Tell - Tale Heart" for MGM in 1941.

—Max Schreck played Count Dracula for the first time in 1923 German film "Nosferatu". Bela Lugosi played the role three times: in 1931, 1944, and 1948.

—Willis H. O'Brien did the trick photography for "King Kong".

—Brazilian director Alberto Cavalcanti did one of the best portions of the macabre British film "Dead of Night" in 1945.

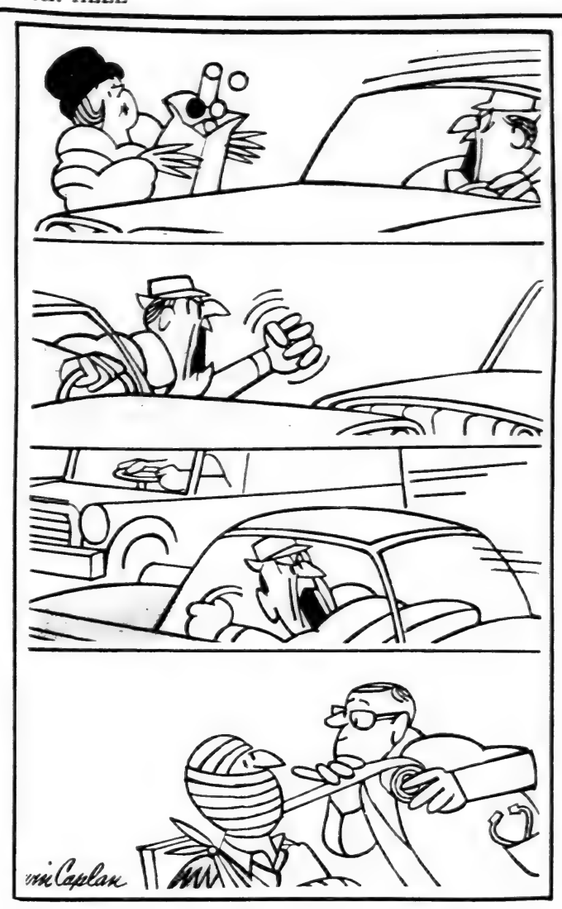
Halliwell's book provides the devoted filmgoer with a companion, a guide on a more educated journey through dusty memories left in his own mind by old celluloid. It is an imperfect guide but a good one to have, nonetheless.

Halliwell says he is open for comments and suggestions. We have two: more comprehensive comment on good films and more polish in the criticism.

The author says "The Man With A Golden Arm" was "rather a drag" but gives no reasons.)

Hopefully this edition will be revised from time to time and improve in the process. Also, we hope that the publishers will see fit to assign someone the task of compiling a companion volume exclusively on foreign films—and that someone should be a person more appreciative of these films than Halliwell.

But we can't knock Halliwell: he chose a Herculean task and its execution was obviously one of love. He has recorded a mountain of facts with a minimum of error. We agree with Alfred Hitchcock, who write in his Foreword to "A Filmgoer's Companion": ". . . the author has done his homework rather better than the villains in my films who always seem to get found out sooner or later."



Saturday Is Danger Day

More than 50 per cent of all highway deaths in 1965 occurred during the weekend from Friday through Sunday.

The most dangerous day? Saturday.

Traveler's Insurance Companies reports that 21.9 per cent of all fatal highway accidents occurred on Saturday. In addition, 15.4 per cent of all traffic deaths occurred on Friday and 18.7 per cent on Sunday.

The total number of persons killed in 1965 stood at 48,500 by year's end. More than 4,900,000 men, women and children were injured. The biggest per centage of those injured in auto accidents also occurred during the weekend

The most dangerous hours on the highways are those between 5 and 8 p.m. During that time, nearly 20 per cent of all fatal accidents occurred. This also holds true of the number of injured. Last year more than 19 per cent of all highway mishaps causing injury occurred during this same three - hour period.

Baritone Will Sing Sunday

A lyric baritonist will appear in concert at Graham Memorial next Sunday at 8 p.m.

Frank Little, assistant professor of voice and opera at Greensboro College, will present a program of classical and semi - clasical selections.

He will be accompanied on the piano by David Finnix, also an assistant professor at Greensboro College.

The concert is free and open to the public.

Little received his B. S. from East Tennessee State University and his master of music from the University of Cincinnait. He has also studied in Munich and Milan.

He has appeared as guest soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and the Brevard Music Center Orchestra and is a regional winner in the Metropolitan Opera Auditions. He was S. C. Young Artist of the Year in 1963 and runnerup for the Southeastern Young Artist that year.

Little is currently in rehearsal with the Greensboro Lyric Theatre preparing the role of Curly for their production of Oklahoma.

In 1937, the dirigible Hindenburg exploded and crashed in flames at Lakehurst, N. J., and 36 were killed.

VC Stop Running And Get Clobbered

SAIGON (AP) — After retreating under relentless pursuit, a battalion of North Vietnamese and Viet Cong turned and made a stand yesterday in a central Vietnamese village. It was immediately caught in a storm of bombs, rockets, napalm and machine - gun fire after losing 141 killed, by U. S. count.

Encircling troops of the U.S. 1st air cavalry division and the Vietnamese army hoped to complete a battle of annihilation against the 300 to 400 enemy troops within 24 hours, a field dispatch said.

The battle, the sharpest ground fighting in three weeks, raged throughout the day at the village 280 miles northeast of Saigon, then began to sputter out at nightfall.

In the air war, U. S. planes Thursday attacked a highway 15 miles northeast of Hanoi, as close as they have ever come to the North Vietnamese capital, a U. S. spokesman reported. Two Navy planes and a U. S. Air Force plane were shot down. One pilot parachuted into the Gulf of Tonkin and was rescued. The other two pilots ejected but rescue helicopters were driven off by antiaircraft fire.

For the sixth day in a row, B 52 heavy bombers from Guam blasted the Viet Cong War Zone C stronghold near the Cambodian border 75 miles northeast of Saigon. A suspected enemy concentration was bombed well out in front of on coming U. S 1st infantry division.

The fighting in the central highlands centered in the village of Than Son, where the Communists chose to make a stand for the first time since the cavalrymen flushed them Thursday. The village is 10 miles north of Bong Son.

With Vietnamese troops, the Americans had the enemy nearly surrounded. The trap was complete enough that officers said the only way out for the enemy soldiers was to disguise themselves as farmers.

Associated Press correspondent Bob Poos reported from near Than Son that a U. S. battalion had just forded a stream when it ran into heavy opposition. The Americans tried to dash across a rice paddy to get at the enemy, dug in at Than Son, but were held off by the fire of machine guns, rifles and mortars.

Up until this point, U. S. casualties had been light. Poos reported some Americans killed in this fighting and one company took moderate losses.

The battalion called for air strikes. U. S. planes barreled in, hitting the village with rockets, fiery napalm and bombs. The pall of dust and smoke was so heavy that the combatants were unable to see each other.

Old men, women and children crawled from holes and fled to the American lines as the two sides began exchanging heavy machine - gun fire. The firing slackened at nightfall.

In addition to the 141 enemy troops reported killed up until early Friday afternoon, the Americans said 30 were captured and 307 suspects seized.

A U. S. military spokesman in Saigon said the nearly encircled enemy battalion was trying to break out.

"They're sure making an effort to get out of there," he said, "and some of them weren't successful."

The fighting erupted just as the monsoon rains moved down from the north and began to drench South Viet Nam. The rains cut heavily into American air support for ground troops and the Communists often try to take advantage of this by launching new attacks.

The area is familiar fighting terrain for the air cavalrymen. With U. S. Marines and Korean and Vietnamese troops, they cleared the region of Viet Cong in a campaign that began last January. More than 1,300 Viet Cong were killed then.

But when the Allied troops departed, the Viet Cong and the North Vietnamese moved back in.

In the far north, U. S. Marines uncovered a store of 5,000 tons of Viet Cong rice in a village church near Phu Nhuan, 20 miles south of Da Nang. Marines have suffered only light casualties in the operation now in its 16th day. They reported 93 Communists killed, 21 captured and 227 suspects detained.

Closer to Saigon, the U. S. 1st Division, operating about 70 miles to the northeast of the capital, reported little contact with the enemy. Since the operation began April 24, American troops claimed a toll of 94 Viet Cong killed, 8 captured and 18 suspects held. In North Viet Nam, the moonsoon weather cleared Thursday to enable U. S. Air Force fighter - bombers to renew attacks after being grounded for two days.

Air Force pilots flew 22 missions, picking storage areas, river traffic, bridges and trucks as their targets. Carrier - based U. S. Navy planes flew 26 missions agains North Viet Nam targets, striking at railroad yards, barges, junks, bridges and storage areas near the coast.

The target attacked within 15 miles of Hanoi was the closest to the capital since air raids on April 17. On that date U. S. Air Force planes pounded missile sites 15 to 17 miles south of the capital.

Radio Peking said one U. S. plane was shot down Friday in raids on North Viet Nam. There was no confirmation in Saigon.

In South Viet Nam, U. S. fighter - bombers flew 313 sorties Thursday, and pilots reported many buildings destroyed or damaged and eight sampans sunk.

In Saigon, labor unions petitioned the government to crack down on Communists infiltrating their ranks. Authorities said Viet Cong agents have been openly agitating among students and workers. Gen. Linh Quang Vien, new chief of the nation's security forces, was reported planning a campaign to seize Communist agitators in Saigon and other cities.

As the special committee charged with preparing for general elections of a civilian government by October went ahead with its work, a Saigon politician suggested at least a six - month delay in the voting.

HaThuc Ky, former interior minister who is secretary-general of a faction of the Dai Viet party, said early elections "would be a fake" because the peasnats and farmers under Viet Cong domination could not vote.

As now planned, the elections "will be only a show to satisfy the foreigners — they will not be representative of the people," said Ky. He is no relation to Premier Nguyen Cao Ky.

In Geneva, President Samuel Gonard of the International Red Cross committee told U. S. roving ambassador Averell Harriman his organization can do little to protect American prisoners in the Vietnamese way.

Harriman told reporters there are 227 U. S. servicemen missing or detained in Viet Nam and of these 33 are known to be prisoners. But the Red Cross cannot even get a list of them. Red Cross personnel are barred from Viet Cong and North Viet namese territory.

Stock Market Rises After Heavy Trading

By ED MORSE
AP Business News Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market volume Friday swelled to the heaviest in nearly three years as prices plummeted for most of the session, then staged a tremendous recovery in the final hour.

A news story that General Motors would resume normal operations at all its assembly plants on Monday, halted one of the steepest declines in history and led to a wild buying spree.

The Dow Jones industrial average, which had been down 10.41 at 2:30 p.m. (EDT), rallied to close with a net gain of 3.06 at 902.83.

The ticker tape ran 23 minutes late at the close, the longest lag in this 900-character-per-minute device since it was introduced about a year and a half ago.

Volume was 13.1 million shares compared with 10.09 million Thursday and was the largest since 14.75 million shares changed hands on May 29, 1962, which was a day of recovery after the "Black Monday" crash of May 28, 1962.

Stocks were lower from the opening bell but began to show signs of support here and there. But at the end of the third hour, discouraged traders began to dump stocks again, afraid the list was not mustering enough strength to rally. Selling snowballed about the time the GM news came over the wires. Then the market reversed itself completely.

While the running debate in high places about the need for a tax increase, the tight money situation, Viet Nam and a host of other factors laid the groundwork for the current performance, the gyrations Friday were laid mostly to psychological reasons, brokers said.

Many of the high-flying issues which showed losses of several points rebounded so fast they showed gains of several points at the close; but the rally came too late to upset the ponderous balance of the whole exchange.

Of 1,446 issues traded, 872 fell and 377 rose. Highs for the year totaled 2 and lows 321.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks fell .3 to 331.8, the latest in its series of new lows, with industrials up .5, rails off .8 and utilities off .3, both to lows for the year.

The comeback reflected itself among the most-active stocks. Ten of these ended with gains, 4 with losses and 2 were unchanged.

Sperry Rand was the most-active stock, closing at 21 7-8 on 278,700 shares.

Red China Warns India To Cease 'Provocations'

TOKYO (AP) — Communist China has told India it will "strike back in self - defense" if Indian troops "continue to make intrusions and provocations" along the disputed border.

Peking's New China News Agency said today the warning was contained in a Foreign Ministry note delivered to the Indian embassy in Peking May 4.

The note, replying to three Indian notes of Feb. 2, 3 and 8, accused India of committing 374 ground and air intrusions into Chinese - claimed territory between late 1962 and the end of 1965.

India had charged that China sent troops into demilitarized border zones in the high Himalayas in "naked and unprovoked acts of aggression aimed at changing the status quo by forcible penetration."

Peking rejected the claim, saying the 12 - mile wide demilitarized zone and other disputed areas are "all Chinese territory."

Defense Secretary Hits New Low With Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara's relations with Congress — never very chummy — have plunged to new depths of bitterness.

The criticism against McNamara is being led by Democrats, something of an oddity in an election year.

It is true that Republican House Leader Gerald R. Ford of Michigan and other GOP legislators also have fired off accusations of "shocking mismanagement" and the like.

But there are new Democratic voices in the chorus of criticism. Sen. Ernest Gruening of Alaska is one of these.

Certain Pentagon officials contend Gruening's attack on military equipment disposal practices is an offshoot of his general opposition to U. S. involvement in the Viet Nam war. Gruening disputes this.

Ever since 1961, Congress has been trying to get the Pentagon to buy more big bombers or to build a brand new bomber for the future.

Year after year, Congress has urged a start on an anti-missile system.

And repeatedly, congressional atomic and armed services committees have tried to prod McNamara into acquiring more nuclear powered ships for the Navy.

On each of these issues, McNamara has stood firm — backed first by President John F. Kennedy and now by President Johnson.

This has created a sense of frustration on Capitol Hill.

The frustration, and accompanying resentment, have been fueled by McNamara's manner in dealing with Congress. Rep. Leslie Arends, R-Ill., articulated this a few years ago when he called the defense secretary "I - know - all-the-answers McNamara."

The defnese secretary never has developed the political art of applying a little soft soap, nor has he seemed to recognize the importance of not bruising congressional egos.

On occasion, it has appeared that he brushed aside congressional views.

Last fall, to cite an instance, the Senate Armed Services Committee unanimously adopted a resolution urging McNamara to defer the deactivation of 751 Army Reserve Unit until Congress could review the situation.

A little more than two weeks later, the Pentagon declared it had reconsidered the plan and was going ahead with it as being "in the national interest."

Stennis, who wields great influence in the Senate, is in the forefront of those who have been suggesting that McNamara's policies have resulted in a lack of readiness to fight the Viet Nam war or to cope with a variety of threats around the world. Stennis' preparedness subcommittee is undertaking an investigation.

McNamara is catching blasts from a variety of quarters on Capitol Hill these days. They come so thick and fast that it is often difficult to avoid the impression that McNamara is under a constant and increasing barrage.

Postal Boss Cracks Whip

WASHINGTON (AP)—Postmaster General Lawrence F. O'Brien cracked the whip over his 650,000 postal employes, telling them "shoddy postal service will not be tolerated."

"I have never been more serious," O'Brien said. "I want everyone in the postal service to know this and act accordingly."

His stern message appeared in the weekly "Postal Bulletin" which goes to every postal installation in the country. Under the headline, "Shoddy Postal Service Will Not Be Tolerated," it was billed as "a personal statement . . . to every employe of the postal service."

O'Brien, who has headed the postal service six months, said he promised Congress in testimony last month "to reduce to the absolute minimum the number of Americans who feel that their government has let them down through shoddy postal service."

PAPER-BACKS IN REVIEW

A publisher's survey of what's new in the way of unrequired reading

In a world where the predominant philosophy is "if you can't lick 'em, join 'em," it's refreshing to find a maverick legislator who believes "if you can't join 'em, lick 'em!" Last summer, when Congress refused to hold Vietnam hearings, Wisconsin's Representative Robert W. Kastenmeier held them on his home ground.

VIETNAM HEARINGS: Voices from the Grass Roots ($1.95 Doubleday paperback) is a transcript of testimony given at Mr. Kastenmeier's hearings. "It is," writes the reviewer in Harper's magazine, "an extraordinary cross section of witnesses, committees, and individuals who took great trouble and thought to organize and express their opinions."

Here is what professors, army officers, scientists, physicians, ADA members, Young Republicans, American Legionnaires, and people from every segment of American life say about the war. Every shade of opinion is represented, giving full justice to both sides of the question. There's a good deal of food for thought in this unique hearing which The New York Times calls a "new political phenomenon."

Student freedom and student rebellion at the University of California at Berkeley were issues that brought one of the world's most famous centers of learning to the edge of collapse. Of lasting interest and value, THE BERKELEY STUDENT REVOLT: Facts and Interpretations ($1.95, an Anchor Original) was edited by two professors, then at Berkeley, Seymour Martin Lipset and Sheldon S. Wolin. It is particularly interesting because the editors themselves reflect so vividly the split in opinion of the faculty as well as the students.

"Mr. Lipset takes a dim view of the uprising," writes A. H. Raskin in the N. Y. Times Book Review. "He sees it as a portent that all universities may be forced to capitulate to the coercive tactics of radical minorities . . . Mr. Wolin seems to feel that such a development would be far from disaster . . . Fascinating."

The N. Y. Herald Tribune, in discussing what they call "The Varsity Snag," says, "The editors . . . seem to have chosen to collaborate precisely because they took opposite roles in the controversy and see its meaning differently. Their selections are indeed scrupulously balanced . . . it amounts to a genuine documentary that merits close attention . . . The merit of The Berkeley Student Revolt, however, is that it is not bound by the perspective of either of its editors. Its selections provide the terms for subsequent debate about the broadest questions that grew out of the free speech crisis."

The two books reviewed above are published by the sponsors of this column, Doubleday Anchor Books, 277 Park Avenue, New York City and Doubleday & Company, Inc., Garden City, New York. You'll find them at one of the best equipped booksellers in the country — your own college store.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Kauai King's The Winner

KAUAI KING, ABE'S HOPE, EXHIBITIONIST, FLEET SHOE. If my crystal ball is working, that's the way the first four horses should cross the finish line in today's running of the Kentucky Derby. If Exhibitionist doesn't start, move Fleet Shoe up a notch and tab Advocator for fourth place.

With Graustark on the sidelines, the race should be wide open. Abe's Hope will probably be a slight favorite off his victory in the Blue Grass Stakes. It should be noted, however, that a favorite has not won the big race since Carry Back came from out of the clouds to run down Crozier in 1961. Last year's choice, Bold Lad, beat only one horse out of 11.

I like Kauai King for three reasons: consistency, speed and breeding. The King has won six of eight starts this year, finishing second once. His only time out of the money was the Florida Derby, when he ran fifth, beaten only two lengths, as the 8-5 favorite. In his last start Kauai King won the $100,000 Governor's Gold Cup at Bowie. He finished three lengths ahead of Stupendous in the muddy 1-1/16-mile event.

So much for consistency. Now for speed. In a large field —and this one should number somewhere from 13 to 16—a horse which has enough speed to get a good position early has a big advantage. He can avoid a lot of trouble in the form of bumping or horses stopping that's likely to occur with a big field.In addition, a horse that's near the leaders doesn't have to thread his way through or go around a lot of horses.

Kauai King, while he won't be on the lead, has enough speed to secure a strategic position from which to launch his move. He should be several lengths ahead of Abe's Hope at some point in the race.

One of the big questions in every Kentucky Derby is the staying power of the horses. Nobody really knows whether a colt can go a mile and a quarter until he's tried it, and this will be the first time at ten furlongs for everything in the race. Kauai King should be able to go the distance, though. His sire is the great Native Dancer, which won the Belmont Stakes at a mile and a half.

Kauai King will, of course, be trying to win the only race that his illustrious sire lost. Native Dancer was beaten a fast-diminishing head by Dark Star in the 1953 Derby.

Kauai King thus has the credentials to win the Derby. What about the others in the race?

Abe's Hope figures to be the toughest competition. The Illinois-bred son of Better Be handed Graustark his only defeat in the Blue Grass Stakes, although, as it turned out, the Darby Dan colt was running on three legs. In addition to his success in Kentucky, Abe's Hope ran well, though in hard luck, in Florida. He ran right by Buckpasser in the stretch of the Flamingo, only to have that colt come again with a miraculous charge to nip him at the wire. In the Florida Derby Abe's Hope crossed the finish line first, then was disqualified for fouling the horse that finished fourth.

Abe's Hope has been closing in all his races this year, an indication that he may like the added distance of the Derby. He will be far back in the early going, though, and will have to be either fortunate enough to find running room through the horses in front of him or good enough to spot his competition several lengths and go around them.

Exhibitionist ran well in California, but was something of a disappointment in New York. At Santa Anita he won a stakes, ran second, beaten a head, to Sabre Mountain, and then ran third behind Boldenesian and Sabre Mountain, beaten only about two lengths, in the Santa Anita Derby. His New York races were nothing special, but he ran a big race in winning the Derby Trial Tuesday. If he recovers from a swollen lip, he should be running at the end of the race today.

Fleet Shoe is another stretch runner — there isn't much early speed in the field. He has been something of an exasperation to his followers, always looking like he could break through to win a big race, but never doing it. However, he has been closing in all his races and may be even closer with the extra distance of the Derby. Fleet Shoe's sire is The Shoe, a full brother of the mighty Swaps, so Fleet Shoe has the right blood. He couldn't beat Exhibitionist in California, though; and I don't think he'll beat that one today.

Advocator comes from the stable of Mrs. Ada L. Rice, and so did last year's Derby winner, Lucky Debonair. In his last two starts he finished second to the undefeated Creme de la Creme at seven furlongs and second to Amberoid in the Wood Memorial. He looks to be an improving horse.

Of the others, Amberoid, Stupendous and Tragniew deserve some mention. Amberoid was a surprise winner of the Wood at 1-1/8 miles, but his best effort before that was a fast-finishing second to Kauai King in Florida. Kauai King has beaten him twice, and Amberoid will really be far back in the early running—too far, I think.

Stupendous has shown flashes of brilliance and finally won his first stakes when he captured Aqueduct's Gotham. He was second to Kauai King in the Gold Cup, while sliding around in the mud. His sire is Bold Ruler, though; and while Bold Ruler is the leading sire in the country, his sons show a decided dislike for running ten furlongs. Tragniew won the California Derby in dazzling time, but Golden Gate is a speed track. He has a chance, but only an outside one.

I look for Stupendous and Quinta to make the early pace. By the time the field reaches the top of the stretch, Kauai King should be in front. Down the stretch, Abe's Hope, Exhibitionist, Fleet Shoe and the rest will be making their runs at Kauai King. I don't think they can catch him.

Tar Heels Down Terrapins, 5-2 To Clinch Tie For ACC Crown

Trackmen Invade Duke; Second Place At Stake

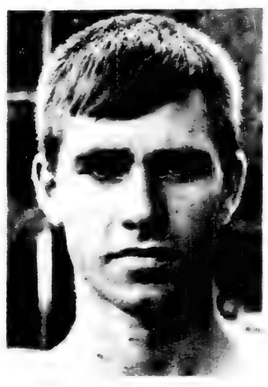
By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

After a decisive victory over Wake Forest last week, the Carolina track team invades Duke Stadium today in a meet which will determine second place in the ACC.

Duke has many outstanding performers, but depth may decide the meet. Duke has the conference's best shot - putter in Rod Stewart. They also have the services of Dave Dunaway, who placed in five events against Clemson.

In the distance events Paul Rogers, an outstanding soph two - miler, heads the list for the Blue Devils. He defeated Jim Meade in the Indoor Games to take second place.

Carolina is not without its share of standouts. In the sprints Jon Levin and Ed Daw are exceptional competitors. Levin specializes in the 100 and 220 while Daw concentrates on the 220 and 440.



ED DAW

In the field events discus thrower Pete Worthen tops the list. At present, he could be the best in the conference. In the shot Carolina's Felix Alley, Barney Varner and Ron Short gave the thinclads a fine nucleus.

Broad jumber Gary Iverson is Coach Hilton's best entry in this event. Iverson beat Duke's Dunaway to take second place honors at the Indoor games.

In the distance events Carolina will have good depth, particularly in the half mile with Bill Bassett, Tom Carpenter and Bill Janowitz carrying the load. Coach Hilton may run Mike Williams in the half as well as in the mile.

In the two mile Jim Meade is the number one man. He has yet to beat Rogers, but in every race the finish has been close and the order could be reversed.

This meet is the last dual meet for the Tar Heels and should be an exciting one. The teams are evenly matched on paper, but past performances don't count in this meet.

They're Off In Derby Today

LOUISVILLE, Ky., (AP) — Exhibitionist became a doubtful starter Friday in the $125,000 added Kentucky Derby as the finely - tuned 3 - year - old thoroughbreds went through their final preps for Saturday's glamour - studded 1 1-4 - mile race.

The son of Promised Land, first horse to carry Mrs. Ethel Jacobs' silks in the classic, turned up with a swolen lip. The fat lip, as trainer Hirsch Jacobs called the injury, is not serious but it is painful. If it doesn't respond to treatment, Jacobs said Exhibitionist would not be in the line-up when the horses parade to the post for the 5:30 p.m., EDT, start.

Jacobs, who has saddled four derby starters and never finished better than a third with Palestinian in 1949, was at a loss as to how his colt received the injury. It may have been splinter from the side of the stall.

Exhibitionist, who has only one victory in nine 1966 races, is rated among the outsiders at 15-1 in the early odds.

Meantime, it became even more doubtful if Sean E Indian, owned and trained by Mrs. Mary Keim of Chicago, would start. He injured a leg early Thursday but was entered after Dr. Alex Harthill said there was a chance the injury would clear up.

"We don't know how it happened," said Mrs. Keim. "But he appears to have broken a small blood vessel just above the coronet. We have been treating him with alcohol compresses and ice packs."

With the prospects of temperatures in the 70s, the usual crowd of 100,000 will pack the Downs' ancient stands and spew over into the infield. CBS will televise the race from 5-6 p.m. EDT with radio broadcast sheduled for 5:15-5:45 p.m. EDT.

Abe's Hope, a relaxed little animal, remained the lukewarm choice but there seemed to be support mounting for Kauai King, whose six victories and one second in eight starts this year is the best performance of the year of any of the starters.

Lacrosse Men Hit The Road

Carolina's lacrosse team journeys to Maryland again this weekend to play Washington College in Chestertown. Last week the stickmen met the University of Maryland in College Park and lost 18-0 to one of the nations' strongest teams.

Coach Steele will start with the same line-up as last week. At the attacks will be Tim Balch, Sandy Reider and Jake Hubbard. Starting as midfield will be Pete Williams, Bob Morrison and Dan Howe.

Carr, Thomas Get 4 Hits; Walker Wins Fifth In Row

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

By now, no doubt, you've heard of the new "Charlie toy."

No?

Well, you wind it up and it socks base hits like crazy.

Coach Walt Rabb has two of them, and yesterday he wound 'em up super-tight and they socked four base hits apiece (like CRAZY!) to spur Carolina to a title tie-clinching 5-2 beating of Maryland at College Park.

It was UNC's eighth straight win, all against league opponents. And if the Heels (10-1, 16-8) can win behind Beattie Leonard at Virginia this afternoon, the 1966 ACC championship is in the bag. WCHL airtime is 12:45.

Carr and Thomas

The two "Charlies" who divided eight of Carolina's 13 hits evenly between them are, of course, center fielder Carr and second baseman Thomas, a pair of sophomores who have been playing it big in the Tar Heel hit parade all year.

Carr cracked a double and a trio of singles and scored UNC's first three runs, and Thomas put together four singles and knocked in the first run in the second to stake righthander Danny Walker to a lead he never lost.

Carr, with six hits in his last seven at-bats, has rocketed his average to a year's high of .363.

Thomas, the "Fox," now has seven hits in his last three games, and his percentage has zoomed to .333.

Walker's Fifth Straight

This was Walker's fifth consecutive winning decision, and he made it a four-hitter. Although Danny (6-1, 2.39 ERA) retired the first 12 batters in order and fanned five of them, this was not one of his better performanes. He walked three (one intentionally) and hit two with pitches. He did, however, pitch himself out of two very tough spots, once with no outs and runners at second and third.

Charlies Combine

The Charlies — who gave Terp pitching the "willies" all day — put their first two hits together to score UNC's first run in the second. Carr beat out an infield hit to deep second, moved up a base on Rodney Thompson's infield out, and raced home as Thomas stroked one into center.

Carr opened the fourth by bouncing a double to the wall in right-center, and continued home moments later as Thompson grounded a single through the middle.

Carr . . . Again

Leading off an inning for the third straight time, Carr opened the sixth stanza on a sweet note by singling over second base. A Thompson sacrifice got him to second.

Carolina added unearned runs in the seventh and ninth. John Shaw's single scored Mike McLaughlin, who had reached on an error in the seventh, and after Bob Bonczek and Shaw rapped their second singles two frames later, a throwing error let Bonczek across the plate.

Terps Reach Walker

After the first 12 men had gone down with only a walk (double play got him in fourth) to show for their efforts, Terp cleanup hitter Larry Davis opened the fifth with a single, and continued on to third on Bonczek's two-base error. He scored immediately on Billy Siedling's double to make it 2-1, UNC's lead. There were none out then, but Walker worked out of it with no more damage.

Walker got out of a runners-at - second - and - third - and - none - out jam in the sixth without a run scoring. Maryland added its final tally in the ninth when Dan Kerns walked, stole second, and scored on Sauve's two-out single.

Peace Corps To Recruit UNC Volunteers To Be Trained In Hawaii This Summer

SCENE ON ONE of more than 2,000 islands that make up the Trust Territory of the Pacific (Micronesia). The Peace Corps announced today that they will send volunteers to these islands this summer, and will recruit from the UNC campus. —Photo by the National Geography Society.

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Carolina is one of 69 institutions of higher learning selected by the Peace Corps as the focus of an intensive effort to recruit volunteers for the new Micronesian program.

Peace Corps staff members will be on campus Monday and Tuesday in Y-Court. Peace Corps officials term the program "the greatest challenge in the history of the Peace Corps."

There are two aspects of the program that distinguish it from the regular Peace Corps program and the regular recruitment:

In the past the Peace Corps has been working only in foreign countries, now the program will be used in the U.S.'s own territory — the U.S. administered United Nations Trust Territory in the Western Pacific.

Secondly, the program is accelerated. Its inception was announced only this month by President Johnson and Peace Corps Director Jack Vaughn. The program calls for a first contingent of several hundred Volunteers to begin Peace Corps training in July this summer in Hawaii and arrive in Micronesia by October. A second group to begin training in October, also in Hawaii, arriving in Micronesia January, 1967.

Micronesia consists of 2,142 islands and atolls with a total land area of 687 square miles scattered over 3,000,000 square miles of Pacific ocean. There are 88,000 people in the area.

Edward Behr, a Newsweek correspondent writing for "The Washington Post" in Oct. of 1965 described Micronesia.

"At one time or another, all of us have dreamed of a Pacific island paradise where clothes are superfluous and time stands still. Jean - Jacques Rousseau probably started it all with his "noble savage," and since then such dreams have been fed in turn by Defoe, Jack London and Conrad.

"Such islands exist. They are called Yap, Truk, Ulithi, Ponape, Bikini, to name but a handful of the 80-odd inhabited islands of Micronesia in the Pacific. A growing consensus now has it that time has stood still there far too long.

"But hardly anyone in the U. S., or in the rest of the world, for that matter, knows about the islands, and even fewer people have recently been there. Our ignorance is surprising, for these islands are, in effect, America's only colony."

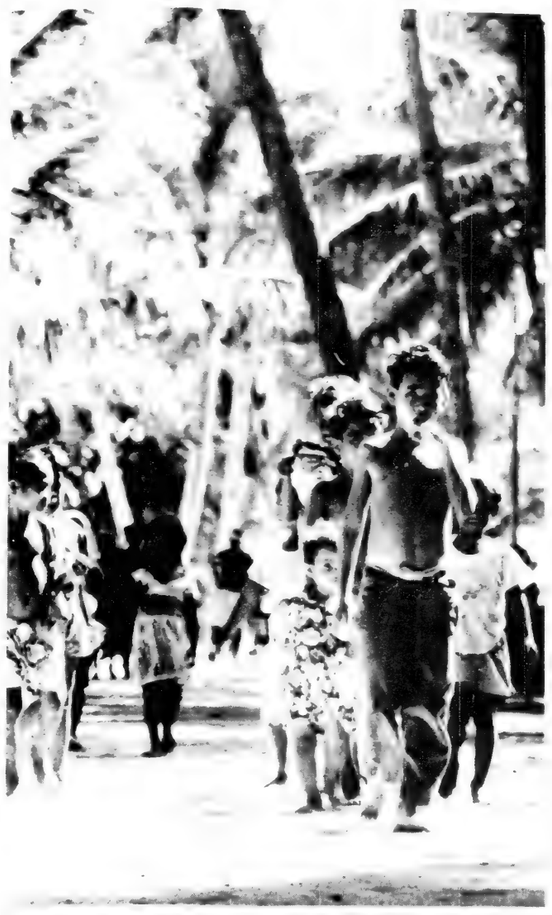
The islands were seized by American military forces after some of the bitterest fighting of World War II, the area became a UN Trusteeship under U. S. administration in 1947. In 1951 administrative responsibility for the Trust Territory was transferred from the Navy Department to the Department of the Interior.

Recently Micronesians requested that the Peace Corps send "middle - level manpower" to help build the social, economic and political basis for self - government.

At present 202 public and private elementary schools accommodate 19,000 students. Roads are bad, medical facilities are inadequate. Except for Saipan, where the Trust Territory Headquarters is housed in some new buildings erected for the CIA, the quonset huts and and tin - roofed shacks date back to the immediate postwar days.

Because of the urgency of the Mirconesian program's needs the Peace Corps has created a, simplified application procedure. It includes a special shortened application form which concentrates on skills needed specifically for Micronesia.

In addition, no Peace Corps Placement Tests will be required and all applicants will be notified by telephone of acceptance or refusal within 15 days.



DESPITE THE IDYLLIC TROPICAL SETTING, Micronesia suffers from lack of teachers, bad roads, and inadequate medical facilities. Recruitment from UNC for the Peace Corps mission there will be held on Monday and Tuesday.

His And Her Tubs Priced At $3,600

PARIS (UPI) — Now, for the couple who have everything: His and Hers bathtubs.

Paris designer Michel de Lacour, who is to bathroom fixtures what Dior is to dresses, has come up with the idea as a new way of promoting togetherness.

The tubs don't exactly come cheap — they're priced around $3,600 the pair, in pink and yellow marble. But Lacour argues, people who are going to buy twin bathtubs probably have that kind of cash to spare anyway.

Lacour thinks his elegant fixtures are doing something to give the bathroom more standing around the house.

"The bathroom should be a part of the house as a whole," he says. "Not somewhere tucked away in the back. Away with prudishness! Let's have our friends into the bathroom for a cup of tea while we take our tub.

Lacour practises what he preaches by having some of the swingingest bathroom fixtures ever seen. He sells 25 types of faucet, for example, including some made of amethyst and pink quartz.

Not surprisingly he does a lot of business with movie stars, both in Europe and the United States.

"Once I built a bathroom for Curt Jurgens, the German star," he says. "It had a mirror all down one wall, all the way into the bath itself, and a big open fireplace on the other side so he could climb out of the tub and then lie down in front of the fire and dry off."

Bathrooms, says Lacour, are like cars. You should change them regularly to keep up with the new models.

One of his greatest triumphs has been the sale of a complete bathroom to the Shah of Iran.

The two sinks were of solid marble supported by two life size white marble hunting dogs. The faucets, of course, were in gold, which Lacour says is the best bathroom metal — because it doesn't alter with humidity.

COLLEGE

a junior/senior liberal arts program leading to the Bachelor of Arts degree

- THE NEW SCHOOL COLLEGE views general and specialized education as interdependent, with specialization meaningful only when it is rooted in a foundation of liberal arts studies.
- It restores to students full recognition of their individuality and of their role as the central participant in the educational process.
- It treats the undergraduate experience not as a separate entity, but as one which should be connected to what is meaningful in the total human experience.
- It regards as the goal of a liberal arts education, not only the acquisition of knowledge but, more important, the development of those orderly and critical habits of mind which are fundamental to all intellectual inquiry.
- THE NEW SCHOOL COLLEGE is open to students who have satisfactorily completed the freshman and sophomore years at recognized institutions of higher learning. Courses of study are offered only in the areas of The Humanities and The Social Sciences. The degree is awarded on the basis of student performance in a comprehensive examination given after two years of study. Classes are held in the day hours at The New School's modern Greenwich Village campus.

DTH Staff Sweeps Area Press Awards

Special to the DTH

CHARLOTTE — The Daily Tar Heel made a clean sweep of the Charlotte Observer College Newspaper Competition yesterday, winning the silver trophy for best newspaper and scoring first place in every category except feature writing, in which it captured second place.

Five Tar Heel staffers won individual awards, and collected a total $130.

John Greenbacker, now DTH Associate Editor, won an honorable mention in the same category for an editorial on the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Former Staff Writer Ed Freakley won $25 for the best news story, written about Communist Herbert Aptheker's appearance in Chapel Hill. Freakley also won $15 for second place in the feature category with a story on the Frank Rinaldi murder trial.

Former Managing Editor and Sports Editor Pat Stith won $25 for the best sports story, a feature on wrestling Coach Sam Barnes.

The DTH received also $50 for its best newspaper rating.

The Daily Tar Heel's prizes came from a field of 470 entries from 22 colleges in North and South Carolina.

Former Editor McCrary commented immediately following the banquet, "It's a good thing we won the $50 because I promised my staff a party a long time ago with the money we won in this contest. If we hadn't won it, I guess I couldn't have come home.

Saturday's awards were the latest in a number of awards won by the paper and its staff during the past year:

The DTH also swept the 1966 Southeastern College Newspaper Competition. The Nasville Tennessean selected it in that contest as the best college daily in the Southeast.

The DTH editorial page was named the best in the competition with more than 30 other papers, and Rothman won a first place for his columns.

Other awards in the contest were first honorable mention for news writing and fourth honorable mention for all-around excellence.

The Associated Collegiate Press critical service gave last semester's DTH an All-American Award, ACP's highest rating. The award was based on excellent in news and feature writing, news coverage, layout, editorials, photography, and sports.

The second semester DTH issues are now being judged by the same group.

Fred Thomas, current editor, tied for fifth place in the February interpretative writing competition.

Former Editor McCrary tied for sixth place in editorial writing.

Freakley won seventh place for his coverage of Aptheker's Chapel Hill speech, and also won honorable mention for a news story on the Frank Rinaldi murder trial.

These were the same two stories with which Freakley scored in the Charlotte contest.

Staff writer Andy Myers took ninth place in the October general news writing category.

Asst. News Editor Ernest Robl received honorable mention for a series of stories on the speaker ban.

The winnings of these students helped UNC's School of Journalism to a national third-place finish in the Hearst competition against almost 50 other journalism schools.

Trustees Meet To Name New Carolina Head

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH Asst. News Editor

The trustees of the University of North Carolina will convene in Raleigh tomorrow to name a new chancellor for the Chapel Hill branch of the University.

J. Carlyle Sitterson, 56, now acting chancellor here, is considered the most likely man to receive the nod.

Gov. Dan K. Moore will preside over the trustee session in the House Chamber of the State Capitol. The meeting will begin at 11 a.m. and will be open to the public.

The special meeting of the board of trustees was called last week by Consolidated University President William C. Friday after consultations with Moore.

Notices of the meeting were mailed to the 100 members of the board on Wednesday.

At the meeting, Friday will announce his choice for the position of chancellor fram a group of three men recommended to him by a faculty advisory committee. A majority vote by the board is required for approval.

Sitterson, a native of Kinston, has been acting chancellor since Feb. 16, 1966; he was named to the position by Friday after Chancellor Paul F. Sharp resigned to become president of Drake University.

Sitterson was named to the interim position while serving as vice chancellor, a position he assumed in July of 1965.

Prior to becoming vice chancellor, Sitterson was dean of both the College of Arts and Sciences and the General College here.

Sitterson holds three degrees, including a Ph. D. in history, from the University.

Orchestra Gives Show On Tuesday

The University Symphony Orchestra will present its first concert of the year at 8 Tuesday night in Hill Music Hall.

Compositions by Mozart, Jean Sibelius, Claude Debussy and Johann Strauss will be featured.

The 80 member orchestra is comprised of 70% students and 30% faculty and townspeople.

"We call it the University Symphony Orchestra, but actually it is a community orchestra," said Dr. Earl Slocum, conductor.

The orchestra was formed over 40 yerrs ago.

Dr. Slocum has conducted it since 1945. During this time the orchestra has played over 150 compositions. Several of these have been written by UNC students.

The orchestra and the Opera Workshop presented Puccini's "La Boheme" recently.

Little trouble is caused by losing students through graduation, Slocum said. But there have been a few "lean years" for some instruments.

He said this year's practice is coming along fine. "We get better each practice."

The orchestra plays only in Chapel Hill. Slocum said the variety of people involved prevents any tours. "It would be impossible for all members to spare the time involved."

But each member "keeps Monday night religiously open for practice." Some students, professors and townspeople become musicians for a few hours every Monday night.

Tuesday night's concert will be open to the public. Admission is free.

Fire damage to Chez Kemp Ltd. and Courts' Drug Co. was estimated Saturday at about $100,000.

The blaze began about 9:30 p.m. Friday in the rear of the two-story frame building that houses both the East Franklin Street businesses.

It took firemen an hour before they had the blaze — which burned its way up a flight of stairs and into the attic — under control, said Chapel Hill Fire Captain Everett Lloyd.

The blaze did heavy structural damage, Lloyd said. Firemen feared at one time that the first floor ceiling might cave in.

"Fire damage was heavy in the rear," said Lloyd. "Heat and smoke damage was all over both buildings. There wasn't much water damage."

No cause has been determined yet for the blaze. "We're not considering any arson at this time," said Lloyd.

Although Lloyd declined to place a cash estimate on the fire, other sources placed the damage at about $100,000. Dr. Ben Courts, owner of the pharmacy, said the figure seemed correct.

Both the pharmacy and the record shop are covered by fire insurance.

The building is owned by M. A. Abernathy of New York City, said Capt. Lloyd. He said Kemp Nye, who runs Kemp's, is the manager.

Evidence of the heat damage was visible to passers-by Saturday as many paused in front of the stores, cupped their hands around their eyes and pressed their faces to the soot-blackened glass.

About 2:30 p.m. Saturday, Dr. Courts pulled away from the blackened building. A charred cash register sat in the back of his station wagon.

He was in the process of moving to a new location next to the North Carolina National Bank. A new inventory of drugs is being shipped and will arrive today. The new store will be open Monday morning.

Students Cautioned To Pay Telephone Bills By May 15

By JAMES DALE
Special to the DTH

All telephone bills are due May 15 (through the May 1 bill) and all outstanding bills will be turned over to the University Cashier at that time.

"A running account is kept of all student accounts and all those students that have not paid their May bills by the 15th will have their grades held until a paid receipt is obtained from the telephone company," said John R. Cox, commercial manager of the University Service Plants.

"There will be no credit arrangements except in the case of an emergency," he said, "but in such a case we will be glad to help the student."

Students will receive their final bill (for calls made after the May 1st.) after June 1st., and it will be sent to their home address unless the student notifies the telephone company otherwise. Students should also notify the phone company as to what date they want their phone disconnected, because the student remains responsible for all calls made from his phone until he gives the phone company notice of date of disconnection.

Only the students in Morrison Dormitory need not notify the telephone comapny, as their phone will be considered disconnected on the same day the student leaves the university for the summer. If students in Morrison do not want their final bill sent to their home, they should notify the telephone company of the different address.

Cox said the policy of turning bills over to the University Cashier will also be followed for electric and water bills. Students in apartments should be sure all their May bills are paid by the 15th., and that they have given an address for their final bill in June.

"Considering the number of students that have phones this year, I think they have done very well about paying their bills. Our biggest bills and problems have come from the students in apartments, but we raelly haven't many bad cases."

Cox said he hopes the students will try to pay their May bills for electricity, water, and telephone as soon as possible, so make sure your roommate doesn't think you paid and you think he paid and Bob down the hall forgot he made 15 calls home on your phone and left before he paid you and he was a senior! There will be excuses!

Parents' Day Activities

Parents' Day today will be observed by open houses in all residence halls and residence colleges. Various refreshments will be served.

Granville Towers also will be holding an open house, serving punch and cookies to visiting parents.

Smith residence hall plans an art show on the lawn from 2-6. It will include paintings, sculpture, and other art work by students. The work is not confined to Smith entries.

Peace Corps Recruiters On Campus This Week

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson has received a special letter from Jack Vaughn, Peace Corps Director, concerning the current recruitment on campus for Peace Corps volunteers for Micronesia.

Vaughn emphasized the importance of making a contribution to the program. Enclosed was a letter from President Johnson to Vaughn calling on the Peace Corps to help in the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands (Micronesia) helping to prepare them for the day when they can become independent.

Recruiters for the program are currently visiting 69 colleges and universities. They will be at Carolina in Y-Court on Monday and Tuesday.

The program calls for volunteers to begin training in July in Hawaii and arrive in Micronesia by October.

The islands composing Micronesia are scattered over three million square miles of the Western Pacific, from the International Date Line to within 300 miles of the Philippines and 700 miles of the Japanese mainland.

Some of the islands, like Eniwetok and Kawajalein, acquired fame when they became the scenes of major American landings against the Japanese in World War II. Bikini was the sight of the world's first hydrogen bomb explosion.

Micronesia

Of the 2,141 separate islands, only 97 are inhabited, by 88,000 people.

In Micronesia, volunteers will find the "South Sea Paradise" of Rousseau, London, and Conrad. The islands are warm and humid, averaging 75 to 85 degrees in the Marianas and from 80 to 92 degrees in the Marshalls and Carolines.

Volunteers will also find, according to Peace Corps investigators, understaffed schools, bad roads, insufficient medical facilities, inadequate water and santiary systems.

Vaughn has said that "liberal arts majors will be the backbone of this program. Most of the skills needed will be provided in the three months of training."

The group scheduled to begin training in July will be made up of persons qualifying as elementary school teachers and public health and public works Volunteers. Secondary school teachers, agricultural and cooperative specialists and public administrators will begin training in October.

To qualify for training that begins in July, applicants should complete the special abbreviated Trust Territory application available from the Peace Corps team on campus.

SP Meeting Slated For This Evening

The Student Party will meet at 8 in Gerrard Hall tonight. The question of annulment of the action taken at the last meeting will be considered.

According to Student Party by-laws, the action could not have occurred at that meeting.

Two positions on the Advisor Board will be filled at the meeting, as will a legislative vacancy in Men's District 1 (men outside corporate limits of Chapel Hill). This vacancy was opened with the resignation of Dick Capps at last Thursday night's meeting of Student Legislature.

Branch Leaves For Calcutta On Ford Grant

James Arthur Branch, UNC business manager, has been borrowed by the Ford Foundation and the University of Calcutta in India to aid in a program of reorganization in Calcutta from 1966 to 1968.

Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson announced today that trustees of UNC have approved Mr. Branch's request for leave to take part in a unique international effort.

Mr. Branch, who was purchasing agent of the University at Chapel Hill before becoming business manager in 1957, has been in the business offices of the University since he was a student at UNC in 1924. He is a native of Salisbury.

He will be given a leave of absence for his special work at the University of Calcutta, where he will serve as one of a team of experts in college administration fiscal matters and teaching and research.

President William C. Friday said, "We are pleased that Mr. Branch has been invited to serve on such a highly important mission. We shall greatly miss his outstanding service to the University at Chapel Hill, and we shall look forward to his return."

The University of Calcutta is the largest institution in the Indian state of West Bengal, and has over 100 schools and colleges in its university organization, and some 120,000 students.

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

Parents, Join Us

Today The Daily Tar Heel joins the entire University community in welcoming the parents of many of our students to the annual Parents' Day. And we offer an extra kind word to all the mothers on this, their special day.

We feel sure that in looking at our beautiful campus and in hearing what students and administration members have to say about life at Carolina you will easily understand why our student body is so proud of UNC.

But beneath the bright spring flowers, behind the ivy-covered walls, within the bounds of this campus we have an ugly, festering problem—a problem that concerns us and we hope will concern you.

Within the next week a Raleigh law firm is expected to file an answer to a law suit in behalf of the University and the state. Twelve of the fourteen plaintiffs in this law suit are students here. The suit seeks to relieve the University from restrictions of the North Carolina Speaker Ban Law as it presently stands in amended form.

Since this suit was filed on March 31, the image of the UNC student has taken a lashing from many people throughout the state. What do they have down there, a bunch of Reds? Why do they want to hear communists anyway? Do these students think they can take over the University?

These are the questions we have been faced with. Perhaps they have entered your mind. We hope we can help you understand our position.

First, we are not a bunch of Reds. Nor are the plaintiffs in this law suit "wayout beatniks." They are typical students: Paul Dickson (former student body president), George Nicholson (chairman of the Carolina Forum, an organization within Student Government that brings outstanding speakers to our campus), Bob Powell (student body president), Jim Medford (YMCA president), Eunice Milton (YWCA president), John Greenbacker (president of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Societies), Eric Van Loon (president of the Carolina Political Union), Ernie McCrary (past editor of The Daily Tar Heel), Gary Waller (chairman of Students for a Democratic Society), Stu Matthews (SDS steering committee), John McSween and Henry Patterson (two students — not presidents or chairmen — who wanted to be a part in solving this problem).

Why do we want to hear communist speakers?

The truth is, many students do not. And many would never hear one if we had them every day. But we do not want the state government of North Carolina curtailing the academic freedom of one of the nation's greatest universities.

Only last year we saw the University come close to losing its accreditation from the Southern Association of Colleges and Universities because of the Speaker Ban. For such a law is not in keeping with the very principle that has made American universities great — freedom of inquiry, freedom to learn about anything or anybody.

The cover of last week's Time magazine bore a photograph of Dr. O. B. Hardison, an English professor here. According to Time, he is one of the top ten professors in the nation.

If our University is to remain great we must keep men like Dr. Hardison. We must keep them, yes, and we must get others of equally high calibre. Yet while we speak of keeping excellent academicians, we have seen professors resign because of the Speaker Ban. We have heard various department heads here lament that choice professorial prospects have turned down UNC for the same reason.

These are the reasons we are against the Speaker Ban.

But what business does a student have sueing the president, the chancellor and the board of trustees of the University?

Because this is the best way to get rid of the problem once and for all. When the Speaker Ban Law was amended, what happened, in essence, was a passing of the buck. Legislature no longer had the law in its strictest form on the books. The trustees relieved themselves by placing the burden on the chancellor.

And a burden it is. On March 2 Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson denied a request that Frank Wilkinson be allowed to speak here. The final authority in this matter supposedly lay with the chancellor. But this was his statement:

". . . even though prior to the Executive Committee (of the Board of Trustees) action I recommended that the earlier invitation should be approved, I regard the Executive Committee's action as in effect binding in these two instances, and I do not at this time think I should grant permission for the use of University facilities for Mr. Wilkinson on March 2."

Running a university of 12,000 students is a full-time job. Laws which place a millstone around the neck of the chancellor can do nothing but harm.

That's why the matter has been placed in the hands of the courts.

Chapel Hill has been the site of more than one beared protest. We have had our share of pickets and demonstrations. But now the students have employed a new weapon, a more sophisticated weapon, a more respectful weapon, a more powerful weapon—the law.

It's on our side. We hope you are too.

"Uh, Hello Mother!?!"

David Rothman

Limiting Of Federal Jobs Unfair To Out-Of-Staters

Appreciate the absurdity of such circumstances, and you'll understand why Washingtonians are so outraged at a recent Civil Service regulation favoring out-of-town students when they apply for jobs with the federal government, the city's largest employer.

Yielding to Congressional threats, the Civil Service recently ordered that students outside the Washington area be given added points on their exams which determine whose names appear on the federal payroll.

It was as if R. J. Reynolds had said they would hire students from California or Connecticut before employing Tar Heels.

Furthermore, the new regulation collided with the idea on which Civil Service was started: the idea of giving jobs to those most qualified to hold them. As columnist Mike Causey of The Washington Post put it:

"Students who passed the test were permitted to submit applications (up to April 15) with three agencies, or to the Civil Service Commission's interagency board here. Eligibles were ranked according to their test grades. First call goes to those with grades of 95 or better.

"However, some people are more equal than others. If a Washington applicant scored 100, he could still be 'bumped' from a job by a Detroit applicant with a 95 score."

In the past, the only widespread violations of the "hire the most qualified" concept were preferences given veterans and their dependents (when, for instance, the dependents' parents were no longer alive). Such favors, even to veterans, can be considered unfair, like the preferences given out-of-town students; but at least the government got well over its money's worth from the soldiers when they served.

But almost all the out-of-town students to be hired over the Washington natives have served in no army, have fought in no war and have never gotten wounded, except, perhaps, on the football field.

If they come to Washington, they will be there only because of political pressures whose effect will be an impairment of federal efficiency (and Lord help us, the bureaucracy is in poor enough shape already).

Moreover, even if they don't come, the out-of-towners will still ruin the summer plans of many Washington youth, for as Causey says:

"Local students, their parents and faculty advisers have complained that agencies are giving bona fide applicants the run-around on their summer hiring plans. Agencies point out that they can't hire a local applicant until they find out if Joe Smith in Nebraska wants the job.

"If Joe Smith can't be contacted, or can't make up his mind, they agency must await his final decision. This means that an equally qualified applicant here who lives half a mile from the agency must also wait."

Hopefully, there won't be many out-of-towners who are hired only because they do not live in the Washington area. But if they hold the same qualifications as their Washington counterparts, they deserve the jobs. Having worked for the federal government last summer and having been hired to work for Uncle Sam again, I can say it's valuable experience, especially for history, journalism and political science majors. But even though this experience shouldn't be limited to Washington bureaucrats' sons, it should be available only to the most qualified applicants — particularly since there are thousands of federal and non - federal jobs near the out-of-towners' homes.

Letters To The Editor

DTH Editorial Draws Flak

Editor Misses Point

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

In regard to your recent editorial on the SPU fast, I would like to make it known that the fast is merely and ultimately a personal commitment to an idea, an idea that the US involvement in Southeast Asia is degenerating the principle that we Americans hold dear.

The US, as originally conceived, stood for the freedom of a people to choose their own destiny and to direct their resources and energy to the fulfillment of a happy and fulfilled life, free from fear, and free from unjust restraints.

For years prior to Dienbienphu, the Vietnamese people have been struggling violently and heroically to cast off the yoke of foreign intervention and dominance. These people have known war, hunger, and unrest for what seems a millenium. They are sick of it, tired of it, and are exhausted by it. They want a respite, they want to live in peace and security to harvest their rice crops.

Then came 1954 and the hope for a final peace and free elections. The people rejoiced and prepared for their long awaited sovereignty. The US and the CIA plotted with Diem. As goes history and the continuance of tyranny and rear in the form of bomb raids, burnt and gassed crops and villages, napalm.

Yes, Mr. Editor, I am fasting, and I am demonstrating. I'm demonstrating my principle for the hope of freedom. I have committeed myself to American democracy and freedom. Where do you stand?

Elliot Krames

Fasting For Principle

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Your editorial attacking the SPU misses the point. You assert, correctly, that there has been a shift in public attitude toward the war in Viet Nam. It is now possible for reasonable men to discuss the possibility of disinvolvement without being automatically branded as "communists" or "appeasers." You imply, however, that this new attidude amounts to some sort of a moderate consensus, which the SPU seminars and fast will threaten.

You overlook the question of how this shift in attitudes came about in the first place. I suggest for your consideration that the shift among the moderates is not unrelated to the fact that the SPU and similar groups took the first unpopular steps to open discussion on the issue. Not in a direct way, no, for no Carolina Gentleman would openly admit to having changed his mind because of something a bearded radical had to say. What the SPU did accomplish was to bring new concepts into the realm of public debate, concepts which each of us could then consider in light of our own knowledge and beliefs. Sometimes the new concept and the old beliefs did not jibe, and sometimes it was the old belief which gave way.

I am not too worried about whether a moderate consensus now exists, or whether the SPU is, as you claim, threatening that consensus with their fasts and flagpole meetings. What the SPU has done before, and what they are doing now, is to act as a stimulant in creating debate. This is squarely in our tradition of politics and law; our belief that the truth will emerge from debate among rational men. In debate no doubt the blood will "boil in the veins" of a few students, but this is better than that it should coagulate in apathy.

I suggest that debate is one of the best traditions of journalism as well, and that it is debate, active debate, on Viet Nam which the Daily Tar Heel should be seeking to advance, rather than some superficial consensus.

New Publication Out

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I am glad to see that in the recent issues of the Tar Heel some interest has been shown in creative writing. I am a graduate student and a part-time instructor in English, and I feel strongly that such writing should be encouraged.

To that end I have, since December, been editing and publishing a little magazine called BBC. It is a monthly magazine dedicated to publishing both beginning and experienced writers, poets, artists, musicians, inventors, etc. BBC tries to present each month a wide and varied content for a wide and varied audience.

I pay for the magazine myself, except for the dime charge per copy, so this is not a get-rich-quick scheme on my part. It is a sincere attempt to give a number of persons with talent an audience. Since the magazine comes out each month, many, many writers, etc., have a chance to appear and to have their work read.

Let me make it perfectly clear that BBC is not planned to compete with the Carolina Quarterly or with any other campus publication; rather, it is designed to complement these publications by offering a more frequent outlet for writers striving to develop their skills.

The sixthe issue of BBC will come out on May 16th. I sincerely hope that many persons who are interested in writing and imaginative work will look it over. I think they will like it. And if not? Well, BBC doesn't pretend to be the greatest. It doesn't pretend anything; it simply is.

Inaccurate Reporting

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

It seems that you've done it again. How can facts be so clear yet come out so wrong. With reference to the first paragraph in an article concerning the MRC Awards in it was stated: "The long standing battle between Big Mo and Maverick House was settled . . . as Morrison was named the outstanding Residence College for 1965-66."

Granted there was, and is, a battle between us but the fact is that we weren't battling on the same field. Morrison competed in the Residence College Catagory while Craige competed in the Residence Hall Catagory. I find it hard to make a comparison on that basis, as you have done. The purpose of this letter is to clarify that point for those it may concern.

We will be doing battle on the same field next year, but I predict a different outcome. Congratulations, despite the DTH's blunder.

"Footprints" by Paul Dickson

Post reconstruction — "When the University reopened in 1875 under the leadership of Kemp P. Battle, the attitude toward students and student government immediatly became more tolerant. Having been president of one of the societies (Di-Phi) himself, Battle knew their capacity for self - government. He promptly instituted the honor system in examinations permitting short absences from the classroom and requiring only that each student sign a pledge of honesty. The honor system has since become a pervasive tradition of student life and the symbol of mutual trust as basic to teaching.

"In 1875 a member of the Pi was suspended for drunkenness. Members of the society petitioned the faculty to reinstate him with promises that they would hold themselves resonsible for his conduct and endeavor to suppress drinking. The faculty acceded to the request and expressed confidence in the societies; 'We shall be glad when the conduct of the students will be regulated entirely by the discipline of the two societies supported and strngthened by our authority.'

"It soon became customary for the societies to recommend action to the faculty concerning student delinquents, and faculty action more and more followed the line of student recommendations.

"In 1884 the faculty adopted a motion making membership in one or the other of the societies compulsory for all undergraduates and law students who roomed in the College. This recognition of their importance and effectiveness was the peak of the societies influence in student government; for no sooner had the action been taken than it became necessary to make exceptions. By the turn of the century there were as many students outside the societies as within. A new basis of government had to be formed. To revert to unqualified faculty rule was both impracticable and unwanted."

Government by consent — "To carry on the tradition which had outgrown the societies students and faculty cooperated in 1904 to form a student council with representatives from each of the undergraduate classes (except freshmen) and the graduate and professional schools. The president of the senior class presided over the council, and he and the student council together excercised all governmental functions for the student body — executive, legislative, and judicial. In time the student council won the right to suspend students from college for violation of the honor system or for "conduct unbecoming a gentleman" (the Campus Code). It was provided only that suspended students should have the right of appeal to the faculty.

"While necessarily retaining the statutory authority, the faculty and trustees were predisposed to yield to the students as much de facto authority as they would exercise in a responsible way. As the students learned with experience their sphere of autonomy was gradually enlarged. It was technically a delegated authority, but as the record shows, it was an authority which had asserted itself, then proved itself and then won recognition for itself and with their close organization and fine espirit de corps the students were quick to defend it in time of attack. The record of the students for promptness, fairness and sound judgement in the administration of justice is not perfect; the point is that their achievement is not inferior on these counts to that of the faculty or trustees. Because of this appeals to the faculty have been rare, and when they have been heard the faculty has usually upheld the verdict of the students."

Student - faculty cooperation — "With this background and understanding the students and the faculty began to collaborate in wider areas of activity. The plan of student government was established.

The honor system was the heart and center of the student tradition, but it also implied:

(1) A lively sense of freedom for students as well as the faculty.

(2) A democratic atmosphere with all students having equal access to the privileges of the University.

(3) Acceptance of responsibility by students as well as teachers as participants in the total life of the University including its mission of service to the state.

(4) Recognition of student life and activities as essential to the educational aims of the University."

Five Sky Divers Perish As Small Plane Crashes

POTTSTOWN, Pa. (AP) — Five of six sky divers and their pilot were killed today as their single engine plane carrying them on a parachute accuracy drop contest crashed, exploded and burned two miles from their objective.

The monoplane, powered by a 450 - horsepower engine, crashed on a farm field shortly after takeoff from the New Hanover airport. Apparently it was circling to come back for the competitive jump. It was the first flight of the sky diving meet, which was canceled after the disaster.

Four of the jumpers and the pilot were trapped in the cabin of the plane and plummeted with it to their deaths. Another managed to get clear and jump, but apparently his chute tangled in the tail assembly and failed to open. He hit the ground within 35 feet of the burning wreckage.

The sixth diver survived, leaping from the disabled craft as it spun earthward. He jumped from an altitude of 500 feet and landed safely, uninjured but badly shaken by the tragedy.

John Pfander, on whose farm the plane crashed, said he was mowing his lawn when "suddenly I heard a boom. I looked up and saw the plane spinning down. When it hit the ground it burst into flames.

"I went to the telephone right away. I told them I had just come from the wreckage and there was nothing much left but framework. Everything was scattered all over . . ."

The plane was piloted by Jim Kiesling, 33, Willow Grove, Pa., a veteran pilot and father of five children. The surviving jumper was Walker D. McCraw, 28, a Navy man attached to the Naval Air Station at Lakehurst, N.J., and designated as the jumpmaster on this flight, first of a score scheduled for the meet which included such events as delayed jumps.

In the plane were three fellow Navy jumpers and two civilian jumpers. The Navy men were identified as Alva McBride, 23, Thomas L. Botdorf, 21, and Ronald L. West, 20, all of Lakehurst. The two civilians were Scott Benner, 17, Boyertown, Pa., and Howard Miller, 20, Havertown, Pa.

Botdorf was identified as the jumper who apparently attempted to get out after McCraw, who as the jumpmaster was sitting at the door. McCraw, a veteran of 470 jumps, rode to the hospital in the ambulance which carried Botdorf's body, then returned to the airport.

He told Harry Crane, state police investigator:

"The plane was at about 1,000 feet when the left wing dipped at a 90 degree angle. The pilot straightened out the plane, looked back and nodded 'everything under control.'

"A split second later the wing dipped again and I told everyone to follow me out.

"When I left the plane it was at about 500 feet altitude, and I estimate the plane dropped to within 100 feet of the ground when Botdorf left."

This would normally have been insufficient altitude for a chute to function properly.

It was a split second later that the plane crashed into the ground. Exploded and caught fire. The others never had a chance, trapped in the flaming cabin.

McCraw told Crane and State Trooper Al Kweeder that he did not hear any change in the engine's power.

Attaches at the airport, where about 300 spectators waited for the regional meet that never came, surmised the crash was the result of "a full power stall in which the plane goes nose high and falls over into a stall."

Another eyewitness, Robert Wood, 21, who was mowing a lawn at a home less than a quarter mile from the scene of the crash, said:

"I looked up and saw the plane spiraling down as though it was in difficulty with the one man already in the air behind it.

"It looked as though a second man upon leaving the plane became entangled in the tail assembly."

Pfander said that he heard the plane overhead just before the crash and paid it no mind. He added, "My dog almost jumped a foot a moment before the boom. These dogs have a sixth sense about these things."

One of the victims, Howard Miller, had taken up the sport only a few months ago,his father said.

"I didn't see my son this morning," said Leonard Miller of Haverford Township. "He had to be at the airport at 7:30 and he got up early and left."

The father, a meat wholesaler, said a friend had interested his son in skydiving. He said his son had served six months in the Army but was given an honorable discharge because of ear trouble.

Abraham Benner, father of Scott Benner, another victim, said it would have been his boy's 17th jump. The victim was a junior at Boyertown High School.

Peace Corps Worker On Trial

MASWA, Tanzania (AP) — North Carolina Peace Corps volunteer William Heywood Kinsey Jr. has been ordered to stand trial on a charge of murdering his wife, who taught with him in an African school in this remote backcountry township.

Asian Magistrate Vinno Mhaisker ruled Friday night after a two - day preliminary hearing in a small, whitewashed courthouse that sufficient evidence existed to warrant a high - court trial. He ordered Kinsey held in jail to await the trial.

Kinsey, 25, from Washington, N. C., is charged with beating his wife, Peverley, 25, to death March 27 while on a picnic about two miles from the town. Her home was in Riverside, Conn.

A white - gowned Sukuma farmer testified he saw Kinsey beat his wife to the ground, straddle her body and then get up with bloodstains on his clothes.

A medical witness told the court Mrs. Kinsey's injuries were not consistent with the story Kinsey gave to the court Thursday. He said his wife, also a Peace Corps volunteer, had fallen from a rock and that he had tried to hold her to prevent further injury.

Kinsey called no witnesses and was not required to enter a plea to the charge. The maximum penalty for murder under Tanzanian law is death by hanging.

The trial is expected to be held in two or three months at Mwanza, on the southern shore of Lake Victoria. Kinsey will remain behind bars until then.

The defendant sat in a corner of the courtroom and listened intently to the testimony at the hearing, light from the oil lamps glinting on his spectacles

Red Chinese Propaganda Denounces Party Offical

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

Judging by a vast flood of propaganda from Peking, the blackest enemy of the Chinese Communist Party is a Chinese Communist official named Wu Han.

The indictment against Wu Han is a fascinating exercise in Communist logic. To hear Peking tell it, Wu is the center of a threat to the existence of the Red regime.

Wu has become the main target of a countrywide campaign of denunciation of "anti-party, anti - Communist elements." The campaign has such a hysterical sound that it suggests a degree of panic in high places.

Mao Tze - Tung's Politburo has made Wu and "his supporters" object lessons. What is happening to them serves as a warning of what can happen to anyone who toys with the idea of opposing Politburo policies.

As the Politburo tells it, Wu Han as long as seven years ago "revealed his true face." But in those seven years he remained vice president of the Peking city council (deputy mayor) and a respected historian and theoretician.

The propaganda fails to say why, if he revealed himself in 1959, he was not ousted then. It fails to say why, if Wu's works clearly labeled him then as an "enemy of the people," the Communist state continued to publish his works.

Wu just happens to be in the center of a swirling, violent drive against intellectuals and others — some inside the party, some inside the armed forces — now accused of threatening the Politburo's rule. So the regime has constructed a signal for a drive against "enemies" throughout the nation of 700 million.

The case is based on Wu's writings since the 1940s. In those days the Communists, including Mao, instructed their followers to use any and all subterfuges for infiltrating enemy ranks. But today, the things Wu wrote and said in those days are part of the indictment against him.

Wu has been a prolific producer of historical and political essays and other works. His allegories about bandits and badmen in the 1940s would have been interpreted as condemning Chiang Kai-Shek, the Nationalist leader, and Chiang's Kuomintang Party. Not so now, in retrospect.

In the 1940s Wu wrote that "The people are suffering." He claimed to champion "genuine Democratic politics" — as Communists out of power invariably do. He wrote against one-party dictatorship. He deplored the sort of rule which gave all wealth, glory and power to one man.

These essays were published as a book in 1959. In the context of the 1940s, an attack on one-man rule and one-party dictatorship pointed to Chiang Kai-Shek.

But says today's propaganda, Wu published his essays "without explanation." Thus, attacks on one-man and one-party rule could have another meaning. By then Mao had all the power and glory.

Now the party finds that Wu had managed "to sneak into the revolutionary camp" in the 1940s. It finds that in reality, all the intervening time he was serving Chiang and "the reactionaries" as a tool of the "U. S. imperialists."

He sought a "middle road," thus indicating a belief that the Communist Party did not represent the Chinese people. At one time, the accusers say, he "brazenly praised U. S. troops as Democratic fighters." That was in World War II days when the Americans as well as the Chinese were fighting the Japanese and the other Axis powers.

Wu commited yet other sins He forgot the importance of "class hatred" in two historical plays.

The party now "discovers" that before 1943, Wu had said the Chinese ought "to learn from the American people." The denunciation carefully points out that the American people Wu talked about were "not the genuine people."

LBJ Proposes Space Treaty

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — President Johnson proposed yesterday that the United States, Russia, and other space powers join in a treaty outlawing military activity on the moon and denying anyone or any nation lunar sovereigty.

Johnson said the objective is to make sure that American astronauts and those of other nations can freely conduct scientific investigations of the moon.

Non-military goals in outer space are attainable, Johnson said, and in his view a treaty is needed to lay down rules for exploration of the moon and other heavenly bodies for peaceful purposes only.

Johnson said the treaty proposal will be discussed first in the United Nations by U. S. Ambassador Arthur J. Goldberg in the 28 - member U.N. Committee on Outer Space.

After that, it would become a matter of formal negotiations among nations involved in outer space exploration looking toward a treaty.

Ginzburg Decision Gives Post Office Obscenity Weapon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court's Ginzburg decision has given the Post Office a new tool to chip away at obscenity. But the department doesn't intend to use it like a club.

There is no board of censors at the Post Office. Officials say first class mail remains sacredly private and the department couldn't care less how colorfully an individual might want to express his thoughts to a friend.

But there is growing concern with the "organized peddling of pornography through the mails," as department general counsel Timothy May put it, and the Post Office can operate with more assuredness.

The Supreme Court said March 21 in upholding the conviction of publisher Ralph Ginzburg that advertising or "pandering" could help establish a publication as obscene.

To the Post Office, this means easier administration of the 1865 mailing law under which Ginzburg was convicted and the mails are patrolled for obscenity. "It makes it easier for us to know what is prosecutable and what isn't," May said.

Or, as Chief Postal Inspector Henry B. Montague explained, earlier high court decisions "caused some uncertainty and confused federal and state prosecuting authorities."

"Now," he said, "we can consider the pandering element."

This brings the department to grips with an increasingly irksome problem — the use of legitimately purchased mailing lists to advertise pornographic material.

Here, in light of the Ginzburg decision, the Post Office can move with more assurance against those who peddle smut for commercial gain.

Siilarly, Montague believes the department will be on surer grounds in striking at magazines which serve as middleman for "sex clubs." Some of these clubs, he said, exchange literature and pornographic pictures and build up to wife-swapping and trading sadistic paraphernalia.

Still, there is an atmosphere of restraint at the Post Office, conditioned partly by the liberal view the Supreme Court has taken of publications themselves and partly by the reality that the 10,058 inspectors in the 50 states and territories responsible for guarding against mail fraud, theft and the like, as well as obscenity, can cover just so much ground.

Last year, the Post Office received no fewer than 128,000 citizen complaints that the mails were being used for obscene purposes and 61 per cent of the department's criminal investigations were in the obscenity area.

Thus, Montague said, the department has to concentrate on "particularly flagrant" instances of obscenity. And, he said, he is "firmly convinced the court has not opened a Pandora's box with its Ginzburg decision."

"The decision does not mean," he said, "you can take something that is not obscene and make it obscene because of the way it was advertised."

Kauai King Captures Derby

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Kauai King, the fleet son of Native Dancer, set all the pace and won the 92nd running of the $163,000 Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs yesterday.

Under a well judged ride of Don Brumfield, Kauai King, owned by Michael Ford of Omaha. Neb., reeled off the 1—1-4 miles in 2:02 flat before a crowd announced by the Churchill Downs management in excess of 100,000.

Advocator, owned by Mrs. Ada L. Rice of Chicago, who won in 1965 with Lucky Debonair, was a surprise second, edging Blue Skyer, a last-minute entry carrying the hopes of M.J. Padgett and Hugh Grant.

Fourth in the field of 15 three-year-olds was the Wheatley Stable's Stupendous.

Kauai King, going into the race with a record of six victories and one second in eight starts this year, earned $120,500 to boost his bankroll for the year to $240,027.

Coming off a victory in the recent Governor's Gold Cup at Bowie, the dark bay colt purchased by Ford for $42,000 as a yearling, never left the issue in doubt from the time the field broke out of the starting gate.

Kauai King, was driving all the way through the stretch and tossed back the challenges of Advocator, ridden by Johnny Sellers, and the fast-closing Blue Skyer, handled by Earlie Fires. Kauai King reached the finish line three-quarters of a length in front of Advocator, but it took a photo to determine runner-up honors.

Back of the first four horses, in order, came Abe's Hope, Rehabilitate, Amberoid, Fleet Shoe, Exhibitionist, Sky Guy, Williamson Kid, Quinta, Tragniew, Beau Sub and Dominar.

Kauai King ran the first quarter in :22—4-5 as he opened up a two length lead and covered the first half-mile in :46—1-5 as he swung past the half-mile post with a two-length margin. His time for six furlongs was 1:10—5.

Kauai King, the favorite, paid $6.80, $4.20 and $3.60. Advocator returned $13 and $8.60.

Skyer Blue, for whom his owners paid $50,000 only a few months ago, paid $5.40 to show.

"I'm the happiest man living," a hard-breathing Brumfield said as he was led to the presentation stand.

"He ran good all the way," the winning jockey added. "I slowed him up a bit on the back side, but at the middle of the turn, when another horse challenged, I let him go."

Ford, the owner, said,"My mouth is so dry I'm spitting cotton. I can't tell you how happy I am today."

Kauai King was brought up to the Derby in superb condition by Henry Forrest.

Sloan Named State Coach

RALEIGH (AP) — Norman Sloan, who coached the University of Florida to its best season in 1964-65, was signed yesterday to a three-year contract as head basketball coach at North Carolina State.

Sloan, 39, who played basketball for Coach Everett Case at N. C. State two decades ago, left the Southeastern Conference after compiling an 85-63 record at Florida.

Sloan succeeds Press Maravich, who resigned a week ago to take the head basketball job at Louisiana State University.

Sloan's 1964-65 Florida team had an 18-7 record, best in the school's history. It included the school's first regular season victory over Kentucky.

Sloan has been chosen coach of the year in both the Southern and Southeastern Conferences. He coached at The Citadel before going to Florida six years ago.

The appointment of Sloan, who played football for the Wolfpack, was made by N. C. State Chancellor Dr. John T. Caldwell at a meeting of the school alumni.

"It's something I've always dreamed about," Sloan said over the telephone from Gainesville. "It gives me the opportunity to continue the job of coaching that Coach Case started and maintained so successfully. Every member of my family is as excited about it as I am."

Sloan's first Citadel team won the George Mihan Award the most improved team in the nation. His overall college coaching record is 221 wins and 137 losses.

Leonard, McRae Stop Cavs On 1 Hit, Last-Gasp Break

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

A two-out error in the ninth inning gave Carolina a "new life" yesterday, and two minutes later the Tar Heels began living that life to the fullest as 1966 baseball champions of the Atlantic Coast Conference.

It took everything the Tar Heels had to wrap up their second pennant in three years against Virginia, the last-place club in the league. And when winning or losing came down to its last breath, it took a great big gift on the play that should have ended the game to give the Tar Heels another chance.

UNC had wasted four excellent opportunities to score, and trailed, 1-0, when their last chance came. They took advantage this time, and came home a 2-1 winner.

Shaw Starts It

The winning rally was ignited when co - captain John Shaw started the ninth by rapping his third hit of the day, this one a bouncing single to left field. Charlie Carr then worked UVA pitcher Ned Turnbull for a walk off a 3-1 pitch.

But at this point, the big Cavalier lefty made Rod Thompson pop a bunt to first baseman Bill Gowin, and then fanned Charlie Thomas. Virginia was seemingly out of trouble for the fifth time of the day.

Boot Opens Door

Up to the plate came pitcher George McRae, who had struck out with the bases loaded as a pinch - batter for Leonard in the seventh. This time he sent an easy bouncer toward shortstop Bill Curtis, who made a clean pickup . . . and then pulled Gowin off first base with a wide throw.

The bases were loaded with two out, and the Heels were still alive. And life was never so beautiful as when Bob Hume ripped Turnbull's 1-0 pitch through the middle to score Shaw and Carr and bring UNC all the way back to a 2-1 win.

Pitching Superb

Starting pitcher Beattie Leonard and reliever George McRae pitched tremendous baseball in this championship game, allowing only one hit and three base - runners between them. Leonard put all three on base in his six innings with one hit, a walk, and a hit batsman, and McRae was perfect in his three innings of work. McRae got the win, his fourth without defeat.

Virginia scored its run in the second, when Art Halstead was hit by a Leonard pitch and was forced at second by Stu Evans, who came all the way around on Gowin's triple to right - center.

BOB HUME

Great Relay

A precision relay from Carr-to-Thomas-to-Shaw nailed Gowin at the plate as he tried to leg out a homer. That turned out to be perhaps the most important play of the day — except Curtis' ninth inning boot

The Phi Gam Fijis won a wild 16-15 softball game over the Pi Kappa Phi Baena in intramural action on Friday. Pi Kappa Phi took a 5-3 first inning lead, then Phi Gam went ahead with nine runs, 12-5. The Baena tied it with seven runs and Phi Gam took the lead again at 15-12. After Pi Kappa Phi again tied it, the Fijis won it in the seventh with a double by Moore and a single by Maye. Sherrill Holland cracked a home run for the Fijis to go with two doubles. Wellington, Hudson and Teele homered for the Baena.

The English Bards scored eight runs in the first inning and rolled to an 8-1 win over the Church Street Crusaders. Sanderlin and Matthews had home runs. Doxey allowed only two hits for the Crusaders, both by Tulloch.

The Public Health Hellcats trimmed the NROTC Seabats, 9-3. Gaskstatter's tripe was the big blow in a five-run first inning.

Law II Red defeated Law I Blue, 10-8. Down by 4-0, Law II rallied for six runs to take the lead. Jackson's triple was a big hit in the inning. Falling behind 8-6, Law II rallied again to win, with Saginar's home run helping out.

The Geology Coprolites had only six hits, but they smeared Med I, 19-3. Pels had a home run in the second inning, when Geology scored eight times. They added seven more in the next frame.

Law II Blue had no trouble with the Town Tuffs, 8-1. Babbs and Outlaw homered to pace the Law attack.

The Sig Ep Mets got a sterling pitching performance from Hart and blanked the TEP Tops, 2-0 on Thursday. Hart gave up only two singles in the sixth inning and a hit in the third. Zuckerman of TEP was almost as effective, giving Sig Ep no runs after surrendering two in the first inning.

St. A Blue crushed Phi Sigma Kappa, 15-8. Redman led the hitting attack with three St. A hits. Gernow hit a home run for Phi Sigma Kappa. The Phi Sigs committed nine rrors.

The Avery Alcoholics smashed the Teague Totalers, 17-0. To add insult to injury, Teague was the leading Avery hitter, going 4-for-4. Pitcher Dick Grubar allowed no Teague hits and only two walks in the four inning game.

The Gamma Nu Games managed only six hits, but took advantage of 11 errors and nine walks to beat Law II Orange, 15-2. Gamma Nu tallied nine times in the first inning.

The Lambda Chi Lo Balls outslugged SAE Blue I, 15-13. Young homered for Lambda Chi and Pope for SAE.

The Church St. Crusaders mauled Law I Blue, 12-2, with all 12 runs coming in the second inning. McClamroch had the big blow in the inning with a triple.

Kappa Psi got home runs from Lynn Williams, James Hall and Larry Bullock in a 10-1 romp over Zete I.

Laxton and Roycroft hit home runs to pace the Pharmacy Peyotes to a 7-2 victory over the English Bards.

Law II Blue pounded out 12 hits and beat the Hilltoppers, 6-2. Outlaw had a home run and Bost hit one for the losers.

Pete Burgess held the ZBI Zooboys to a single as DU Blue II coasted, 10-2. Dennis Morgan had three DU hits.

The PiKA Plummers scored early to beat DKE White, 11-7. Poitras had a home run for the DKE's.

Dental School IV scored all their runs in the first inning to beat the Geology Coprolites, 8-3. Morris had a home run and a double in the inning. Klaus homered for the dentists.

Other scores: Pi Kappa Phi White 3, DKE Blue 2; NROTC Seabats 13, Med I Yellow 3 Zete II 10, Pi Lamb 9; Med Red 9, Town Tuffs 7; Delta Sig Blue 9, KA Red I 3 KA Black I 6, Kappa Sig No. 23; ATO Blue I 10, Kappa Psi Bombers 9; ATO 11, Phi Gam Purple 7; AK Psi Blue 15, SAE No. 2 5.

Weeks News In Review

Basketball News Talk Of Week

Sports returned to the campus spotlight this week and the big story came from the basketball office.

Smith wrestled Scott away from Davidson and Duke. The highly - touted Negro star — the first Negro ever recruited here — had signed an academic letter of intent with Davidson. The grant-in-aid he signed with UNC was the first time he had signed anything that had to do with athletics.

Scott is a good student as well as a good basketball player. Smith reports that Charlie is first in his class at Laurinburg and plans to pursue a pre-med program here.

New Scooter Rules

Proposals were made riday by the Traffic Advisory Committee to Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson that no freshmen be allowed to operate motorcycles next year.

Sitterson is awaiting advice from the N. C. Motor Vehicles Dept. and from local town officials before he decides on the new parking rules.

Other proposed changes include strict rules on auxiliary safety equipment for motortions on commuting students and for faculty members, fees for faculty members and higher quality point requirements for upperclassmen drivers.

Kenan Professorships

A $5 million gift was presented the University Monday by the William R. Kenan, Jr. Charitable Trust of New York to establish 25 professorships.

New Yack Queen

Toni Greenwood, a junior from Sherman Oaks, Cal., was named the 1966 Yackety Yack queen. She was also a member of the Homecoming Court.

The 1966 edition of the Yack is scheduled for distribution May 16.

Alabama Governor

Alabama Governor George C. Wallace appears to have taken out an eight-year lease on the Alabama governor's mansion even though he is allowed by law to be governor only four years.

His wife, Lurleen, passed the first big obstacle to the office this week when she swept the Democratic primary by an even more resounding margin than her husband did in 1962.

Graduation Speakers

Frank Porter Graham, former president of the Consolidated University and now a United Nations mediator, will keynote graduation ceremonies this hear, it was announced Thursday.

Ceremonies will be conducted June 6 at 7 p.m. in Kanan Stadium. Governor Dan K. Moore and University officials will participate and confer degrees upon about 2,000 seniors.

The long - standing battle between Big Mo and Maverick House was decided — for this year anyway — when Morrison was named the Outstanding Residence College for 1965-66.

In addition, "Mighty Mo," the Morrison College newspaper, received the Outstanding Newspaper Award.

The most outstanding residence hall was Mangum, cited in particular for its high percentage of intramural participation.

Sonny Pepper received the newly - created Roger A. Davis Memorial Award for Outstanding Service and the Presidents Plaque, which is traditionally given the outgoing president.

Mademoiselle Here

Five Carolina Coeds were chosen from 130 applicants Wednesday to appear in Mademosille Magazine's annual "Back to College" issue next August.

Zackie Murphy, a member of the Mademoiselle College Board, made arrangements for the interviews. Nonnie Moore, sportswear editor, and George Barkentine, photographer, selected the Mademoisele models and made pictures Thursday on the campus.

Pulitzer Prizes

Pulitzer Prizes for 1966 were presented Monday by tne trustees of Columbia University in the 50th anniversary of the coveted awards.

The Boston Globe won the Pulitzer Meritorious Public Service Award for a campaign to prevent Confirmation of Boston Municipal Judge Francis X. Morrissey to the Federal bench.

Haynes Johnson of the Washington Evening Star received the prize for National Reporting. The 1966 prize for International Reporting went to Peter Arnett of the Associated Press for his dispatches from Viet Nam.

'Bat Jokes' Book Threatens Trivia And Elephant Jokes

By RICK NICHOLS
Special to the DTH

A new battery of jokes is threatening the standard of elephants and trivia. Robbin' these campus traditions of their "in" value is a recently issued paperback of very bad jokes.

Dell Publishing Co. owns up, at least, and calls the 50 cent pamphlet a "non-book." Very Bat Jokes was compiled by Donald Brockett, Joseie Carey and Rosemary Parlak who attest to the "extreme bat quality of the jokes" but refuse to offer a "money-bat guarantee."

Some examples to hiss at:

What does a bat wear over his pajamas? (a batrobe)

How can you tell a crazy bat? (He's got bells in his batfry)

How can you tell a cowardly bat? (No batbone)

What are the two best-selling bat novels? (The Great Batsby and Batcher in the Rye)

What is a bat wedding called? (Batrimony)

When does a bat raise his hand? (When he has to leave the room)

And you can make up your own with less than little practice . . . Who got mad when Herbert Batheker couldn't speak on campus? (the Batniks)

Very bat. Very bat, indeed!

H-Bomb Exploded By Red Chinese

WASHINGTON (AP) — Red China's announcement that it has exploded a thermonuclear device created scarcely a ripple yesterday in official Washington.

It had been expected.

Secretary of State Dean Rusk commented that he doubts this third atomic explosion by the Chinese Communists will have any more effect on international affairs than did the first or second.

State Department press officer Marshall Wright said the latest test blast, which had been forecast last month by U. S. intelligence sources, took place at 8 a.m. EDT in Sinkiang Province, Western China.

Wright described it as "in the same general range" as the two previous Chinese nuclear explosions.

The first of these, on Oct. 6, 1964, was about equal to the first U. S. atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima in World War II. This had an explosive force equivalent to 20,000 tons of TNT. The second Chinese test shot May 14 was reported slightly larger.

Yesterday's Peking radio announcement referred to a device containing "thermonuclear material," indicating the Chinese had set off their first hydrogen bomb.

But the Japanese meteorological agency reported no abnormal atmospheric pressure following the blast and a spokesman said: "Therefore, we don't believe that the latest Chinese device was a hydrogen bomb of a megaton class."

Wright did not say whether the test was of a themonuclear device, and there was no immediate comment from the Atomic Energy Commission or the Defense Department.

Wright said "further evaluation must await the collection and analysis of the debris in the atmosphere."

Wright noted, however, that a State Department spokesman had predicted on April 28 that this third test might be a hydrogen-bomb device. The spokesman said then that Red China was preparing a nuclear explosion which "may be large and may produce greater radioactive fallout" than the first two tests.

Rusk was at a Senate Foreigh Relations Committee hearing on Viet Nam when informed of the latest explosion. He said he didn't think it would have any more serious effect on the Southeast Asian situation than the first or second explosion did.

In discussing the new test, the State Department reaffirmed this country's commitment to the defense of Asian nations by recalling President Johnson's statement of Oct. 18, 1964, following the first Chinese nuclear test.

Johnson said then that the United States would give "out strong support to nations that do not seek nuclear weapons if they need our support against any threat of nuclear blackmail."

But Peking made prpaganda of the newest blast, asserting China was conducting "limited nuclear tests and . . . developing nuclear weapons . . . to oppose the nuclear blackmail and threats by U. S. im-

NSA Region Picks Dietz And O'Toole

Teddy O'Toole, campus coordinator for the National Student Association, was re-elected chairman of the NSA Carolinas - Virginia Region at the regional conference Saturday at Virginia State College.

Student legisaltor Jed Dietz, a freshman from Syracuse, N. Y., and alternate delegate to the NSA Congress, was elected treasurer of the region. Both elections were by acclamation.

Eleven other UNC students, including former Student Body president Paul Dickson and Student Body Vice - President Bill Purdy also attended the conference in Petersburg, Va. Dickson presented an address Friday night on the history and problems of the Speaker Ban Law.

Other attending were Presidential Assistant and NSA Delegate Eric Van Loon, NSA Delegate Karen Gibbon, NSA Delegate Ann Brownlee, NSA Delegate Bill Miller, former NSA alternate delegate Barbara McLendon, Phil Clay and Alan Banov.

SG Interviews

Interviews for Student Government committees will be held daily this week from 2 to 5 p.m. in Roland Parker II.

Student Party Annuls Last Meeting, Plans New Vote

The Student Party Sunday night annulled all action of its previous meeting of April 24, including the election of new officers.

The annullment re-instated Jim Little as party chairman and annulled the elction of Sandy Hobgood as new chairman.

Meeting Tonight

There will be a special Student Party meeting at 7:30 tonight in Roland Parker II, GM, to elect legislative vacancies in MDI (town outside corporate limits of Chapel Hill-Carrboro), MDX (Ehringhaus) and MDXII (Morrison).

The annullment was a section of the party bylaws which states that new party officers are to be elected at the second meeting after spring elections.

This section of the bylaws was suspended by a vote at the April 24 meeting, but those speaking for annullment said this was not in Student Party tradition."

Hobgood said yesterday he would again seek the party chairmanship. Dick Levy, student legislator from Morrison, is expected to oppose him.

Levy was sick in the infirmary during the original election and was unable to attend the meeting.

New elections of party officers will be held at 8 next Sunday night in Gerrard Hall. A special meeting will be held tonight to fill three legislative vacancies.

The annullment action erased the first vote on a constitutional amendment proposed by party vice - chairman Bill Withrow, which would expand the Advisory Board to include two new members, give the secretary and treasurer votes on the Advisory Board and give the Publicity Chairman speaking privileges at Advisory Board meetings.

Withrow proposed the amendment again Sunday night, and it passed without objection. A two-thirds majority of those present at next Sunday's meeting is necessary to finalize the amendment.

Debate Tonight

"Should grades be a criterion for the draft" will be the topic of a Di-Phi Senate debate tonight at 7:30 on the fourth floor of New West.

Students interested in participating are invited to attend.

The debate will be followed by an important executive session during which elections for next semester will be held.

Vote Unanimous; Sitterson 'Deeply Grateful' For Choice

By ERNEST H. ROBL
DTH News Editor

RALEIGH — Joseph Carlyle Sitterson became chancellor of the Chapel Hill branch of the Consolidated University on a unanimous vote of the board of trustees yesterday.

The trustee action, coming shortly before noon, removed the word "acting" from Sitterson's title, and was the latest in a long line of University promotions for Sitterson.

Immediately following his selection, Sitterson told the trustees that he was "deeply grateful" for their vote, "and welcomed this opportunity to be part of the University in still another way."

The 56-year-old Sitterson is a native of Kinston, and holds three degrees, including a Ph.D. in history, from the University.

Sitterson was recommended for the position by Consolidated University President William C. Friday.

Sitterson, who was named to the interim position of "acting chancellor" by Friday in February to replace Paul F. Sharp, who had resigned to become president of Drake University, has long been considered as the most likely man to get the job.

Governor Dan K. Moore, chairman of the board of trustees, presided at the one-hour session of the hundred members in the House Chamber of the State Capitol.

Friday, in his opening talk, cited Sitterson as "a long-time friend and colleague" and said it was an "honor and privilege" to recommend him for the chancellorship.

Friday said that his own recommendation reflected the views of a faculty advisory commitee.

Following Friday's opening remarks, W. C. Harris of Raleigh, a long - time trustee, formally moved for Sitterson's nomination. Referring to Sitterson's long association with the University, he said, "The University educated him, recognized him; today we propose to crown him."

Harris also alluded to Sitterson's role in the speaker ban controversy, saying, "Today the grass looks greener on our side of the fence. Of late, there have been many prophets of gloom for the University.

"That gloom has been unfair and unwarranted, but it has left marks on the University in the minds of the people".

(It was Sitterson, following earlier decisions by the board of trustees, who banned two controversial speakers coming under the amended speaker ban from speaking on campus.)

Harris continued, "As in the past times of troubles, disciples of ability and of hope have arisen and Gov. Moore led the fight to help the University at this time. I am grateful, too, to President Friday for his part.

"Now from under our own Davie Poplar, we can crown another disciple of hope and glory for the University."

Following two seconding speeches, the nomination

Kemp To Return To Franklin St.

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

"I will be back on Franklin Street," Kemp Nye said yesterday while conducting an inventory of his fire - damaged merchandise with an insurance investigator.

The damage to Chez Kemp Ltd., was part of the estimated $100,000 damage done to the old wooden structure on Franklin Street in a fire Saturday night about 9:30. The building, which also housed Courts' Drug Co., was built in the late 1880's.

Chapel Hill Fire Chief G.S. Baldwin said that the fire was confined to the back of the two stores and that the only damage done to the front of the stores was caused by smoke and intense heat.

Dr. Ben Courts, owner of Court Drug Co., said that he thought it was a miracle that the firemen were able to put out the fire so quickly after they arrived.

The fire call was received at the Fire House at 9:30 p.m. Friday. When the firemen arrived at the stores, the fire was blazing out of a large exhaust fan located in the back of Kemp's. Within 15 minutes the fire was completely out according to Chief Baldwin.

Kemp said, "I appreciate all the help the students offered and I found that I have a lot more friends than I thought."

Court Drug Co. reopened today on a limited basis in the store located next to North Carolina National Bank. The familiar weight scales have been taken from the old store and placed in the new store.

Court said, "None of our prescriptions were bothered. If they had been burned we would be out of business."

All of the drugs had to be removed from the store immediately and Court has been in contact with the State Board of Pharmacy.

The owner of the entire building, M. A. Abernathy of New York, has not yet said whether the building will be rebuilt or not but Court said he feels that it will be.

The cause of the fire has not yet been determined according to Fire Chief Baldwin. Insurance investigators are still combing the rubble to determine the amount of dage and the possible source of the fire.

Court said most of his merchandise was covered by insurance but that he would have to take a full inventory before he would know how much damge was not covered by insurance. The only things saved from the drug store were the prescriptions, the scale and the cash register.

Orchestra Will Play In Series Finale Tonight

The University Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Dr. Earl Slocum, will appear in concert tonight at 8 in Hill Hall. The orchestra's spring performance is the last event to be sponsored by the U.N.C. Music Department's Tuesday Evening Series this season. The public is cordially invited.

Programmed for the concert are works of Mozart, Sibelius, Debussy and Johann Strauss. Two compositions by Mozart, his Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for String Orchestra, and the Symphone No. 38 ("Prague"), will begin the evening. The full resources of the 80-piece orchestra will be called upon for the remainder of the program, which includes Jean Sibelius' tone poem, Finlandia, two movements of Debussy's engaging Nocturnes, and the large waltz composition, Blue Danube, by Strauss.

As has been the case with all of Slocum's programs during his twenty years as conductor of the University Orchestra, at least half of this program represents new repertory for the group of students, faculty and townspeople—the learning of a wide repertory being considered an essential part of the music student's training and stimulating challenge to other players in the organization.

A graduate of the University of Michigan, Dr. Slocum joined the music faculty at UNC in 1933, having previously taught in the public schools of Detroit and Greensboro, N. C., and at the North Carolina College for Women (now UNC-G).

Playmakers' 'Liliom' Production Requires Many, Varied Talents

By JIM SLAUGHTER
Special to the DTH

The process of putting a play together is basically the same everywhere. It requires the efforts of a huge array of many-faceted individuals and countless man hours.

For the past month or so, the Carolina Playmakers have been involved in just such a process—a complicated collision course from auditions to accolades. When the lights dim in the picturesque Forest Theatre at 8:00 on Friday, and the Playmakers production of "Liliom" begins its three-night run, the fevered brows of more than 60 actors and technicians will be concealed behind the facade of a smooth running production.

Linda Sieber

The problem of coordinating the talents of everyone involved was laid squarely on the shoulders of Director Kai Jurgensen over a year ago when Ferenc Molnar's legend about a n'er-do-well carnival barker was chosen by the Playmakers' staff to form a part of the 1965-66 season. Since that time, it has been his duty to formulate the overall point of view for the production and supervise all the delegated responsibilities that are an inherent part of any theatrical endeavor.

When the 30-odd actors in "Liliom" were cast, it virtually meant "signing our lives away," as one very pretty cast member put it. Most of the actors are UNC students, and study time becomes more precious as exam time approaches. The experience is gratifying, though, and all thoughts of strain seem to melt with the heat of the spotlights. Those performing in major roles include Bill Smith as Liliom, Anne Peacock as Julie, Linda Sieber as Marie, Peggy Gibbs as Mrs. Muskat, Edward Kenestrick as Ficsur, Kristine Hoover as Louise, and Christopher Parson as Wolf Beifeld.

In addition to the on-stage members of the "Liliom" company, it takes a montage of backstage magicians, overlapping and coordinating, to transform the Forest Theatre into a suitable melieu for the play. Designer Tommy Rezzuto and his crew, bermuda-clad and barebacked, have spent two dozen hot and, recently, wet afternoons raising the gargantuan setting which depicts the panarama of carnival life in Budapest, Hungary.

Irene Smart Rains, who has designed costumes for literally hundreds of Playmakers' productions, seems uperturbed by the vast amount of stiches and hems, buttons and bonbons, that go into construction of the 50 costumes for "Liliom." "If I worried about it, I'd never get it all done," she quips.

The stage lighting for "Liliom" is no less complicated than the scenery and costumes. For Lighting Designer Alice Yeaman, a graduate student in Dramatic Art at UNC, this is the first lighting assignment outdoors. "I enjoy it," she says, "but with the wet weather lately, I feel more like a lightning rod than a lighting designer.

The problems are many, the hours are long, but on opening night with the audience applauding, somehow it's all worth it.

Tickets for the three performances of "Liliom" can be purchased at the Forest Theatre box-office only on performance evenings. Season-ticket holders can exchange their coupons at the door.

Yugoslavian Baby Doctor Speaks Here

The UNC Department of Psychology hosted a Czechoslovakian pediatrician yesterday. Dr. Hanua Papousek of Prague addressed Dr. Harriet L. Reingold's class in Developmental Psychology on the subject of Learning in the Human Infant.

Dr. Papousek is the Chief of the Institute for the Care of Mother and Child in Prague and is currently a Visting Professor at the University of Denver.

During his talk to Dr. Reingold's students, Dr. Papousek projected infant pictures on a screen in the laboratory of Infant Behavior in Miller Hall.

Dr. Reingold noted that Dr. Pousek's talk was closed to the public because she wanted to retain the classroom atmosphere.

An out-of-class talk and a tea were eopen to the students and public yesterday afternoon.

Dr. Papousek's appearance did not come under the jurisdiction of the new visiting speaker regulations as he was invited by a faculty group. The new speaker regulations apply only to student-invited by a faculty group. The new speaker regulations apply only to student-invited speakers.

WATCH IT, DOC — you could lose a finger like that. But this doctor is used to kids. He is Dr. Hanus Papousek of the Prague Institute for the Care of Mother and Child. Dr. Papousek was on campus yesterday and spoke to a class on Child Learning.

Gloomy Job

J. Carlyle Sitterson was officially named chancellor of this branch of the University yesterday. A few hours later there were gray skies and a cloud burst in Chapel Hill.

We think maybe the weatherman was speaking in pretty symbolic terms when he dumped rain on South Building during the new chancellor's first day in office. In fact, we're willing to speculate that Sitterson would be happy to accept rain and a leaky roof in place of many of the things that will be dumped his way before this time next year.

But it isn't as if he is coming in cold to a job he knows nothing about. His duties as vice chancellor from September to January and as acting chancellor since January have certainly afforded him an opportunity to become acquainted with many of the problems that will continue to be his daily companions.

The New Title

Few people outside South Building can understand the difference made by the official change in position. And we can do little more than speculate as to the effects the "acting" tag have had on Sitterson's work. But, on the surface, it is obvious that many functions are reserved explicitly for the fully-official chancellor.

Finalization and approval of parking and building plans appear to be one of the first packages to be sealed. Many of the long-range plans initiated by former chancellor Paul F. Sharp will have to make a trip across Sitterson's desk before they can be put into action.

But he has let little grass grow beneath his feet in the past four months, and we do not mean to indicate that a period of sluggishness is forthcoming. On the contrary, even with a bit of back work added to the normal load, his proven knowledge should enable him to cut a clean path in short order.

Some Free Advice

Perhaps it seems quite presumptious for us, with no administrative experience, to offer long-range advice to a man who has devoted 30 years to preparing himself for this job. However, we feel it in order to put in a good word on behalf of Student Government and the entire student body.

During the past several months the idea of student autonomy has been the topic of much consideration. The question has arisen — not for the first time — as to just what are student rights and what are student privileges.

Of course, a major focal point of attention in the coming months will be the law suit against the University, in which twelve of the plaintiffs are students.

How far can the students go in determining the course of major University policy making? What is the job of Student Government?

Hold Them Back

Certainly there are members of the state legislature, the Board of Trustees, the faculty and administration who would be happy to see the duties of the student governmental organization limited to sponsoring yearly dances and selling peanut brittle.

But Student Government has more than proved itself here over the years.

Next year Student Legislature will act on an extensive judicial reform bill. This is probably the one area of Student Government that has had the stormiest sailing weather in recent months.

The Daily Tar Heel views student autonomy in the judiciary as a privilege which tradition and success have promoted to the status of a right.

Fight For Students

In his Parents' Day speech Sunday, Sitterson said there are many persons in the state who "neither understand nor appreciate what the University is, what it means to its students, or what it means to the entire community of North Carolina."

Yet these same people are the first to criticize every move made by the students here.

We hope the chancellor will be willing to weather the storm of criticism from these people and fight for the rights of students in the above mentioned area and in other facets of student activity.

Barry's Attack On Fulbright Nasty

In an address before a convention of Republican women in Washington last Thursday, former Arizona Senator Barry Goldwater leveled a biting attack on Sen. J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.).

Goldwater told the group he thought Fulbright should resign as chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee for giving "aid and comfort to our enemies" and for making America appear "arrogant and self-righteous and expanionist and immoral."

Goldwater further classified Fulbright among a small group of "liberals" who feel it is "fashionable" to scoff at patriotism and the American flag.

Allowing Fulbright to speak from his position of authority, according to Goldwater, "lends a phoney official stature to his expressions of guilt because his country is militarily powerful enough to defend freedom."

The speech was a real crowd-pleaser, loaded with high-sounding phrases, pompous generalities and that horrible type of anti-intellectualism which is so typical of back woods politicians.

Ah, but Goldwater was so much better than any back woods politician. He was so tanned, so handsome, and the good Republican ladies squealed before him like hogs before slop.

The visious attack against his former colleague in the Senate transcended anything political observers expected, but the people at the convention loved it.

The short memory of the American public is at times notorious, and it seemed strange that these American citizens could cheer so loudly for one who had just advocated the suppression of a valuable and legitimate point of view.

It had been just a few short years ago that President Kennedy had told the people that those who wield great power in the world are important men, but those who question the use of great power are just as important.

Maybe former Senator Goldwater doesn't understand the situation. If Fulbright had been a fascist in America during World War Two, he would have been properly jailed for attempting to undermine the national security. But this isn't 1943, and the circumstances are very different.

The American public hasn't really made up its mind about this involvement in Viet Nam. The people may disagree with communism, but many are not convinced that the North Vietnamese are the enmies of the American people. Many Americans feel the United States has no business getting involved in the affairs of a nation located on the other side of the earth, especially when that nation is in no way strategically vital to American security.

Many Americans also realize that this fighting between conflicting ideologies in Viet Nam has been going on as a purely internal issue for 15 years. Many Americans regard the conflict in Viet Nam as a civil war, and agree with George Kenan when he says that the United States should not attempt to determine the internal political realities of any nation.

The people haven't made up their minds about Asian policy, and it is still in a state of flux.

No, Mr. Goldwater, the nation hasn't made up its mind on this business, and Senator Fulbright represents a lot more people than you are willing to admit.

Contrary to your interpretation of Fulbright's purpose, he does not want to scoff at America. Senator Fulbright is one of the glorious few in this country who is seeking to guide America out of the muddled darkness of an inadequate and outmoded foreign policy.

You claim that Fulbright scoffs at patriotism and the American flag. You are wrong.

Fulbright loves this country just as much as you do, Mr. Goldwater, and he loves it enough not to sit quiet when he feels America is doing wrong.

Fulbright had no comment to make about your remarks Thursday. He has been called a comforter of our enemies before, especially when he was the first senator to openly oppose Sen. Joseph McCarthy in those fearful days of inquisition 14 years ago.

This kind of treatment is old-hat to him.

Look around, Mr. Goldwater, and if you calm down and use your intelligence you may come to the conclusion that Sen. Fulbright is one of the greatest patriots America has in an age of peril.

Swedish Student Opposes US Viet Nam Involvement

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

This is to commend Michael Hollis for his knowledgeable, honest, and factual analysis in DTH of May 4 of the Viet Nam war. These facts are generally known in my county (Sweden) and substantiate the strong opposition against the American involvement in Viet Nam, which is known to be immoral and illegal. It has struck me during my seven months at UNC that so few Americans seem to know about these very basic facts upon which to form a judgment about the war. How this misinformation should be accounted for I don't know, but certainly the facts are not conducive to the government's policies and the war effort. I feel confident, however, that as more Americans get to know about the facts, more and more people will withdraw their support of a government waging an immoral and illegal war based mainly, as professor Kenneth Galbraith put it, on 30-year-old myths of communism as a monolith aiming at world conspiracy and giving the US a license of automatic intervention whenever and wherever there is a risk of a communist or a communist-like government. If anything, this is an unrealistic concept upon which to base foreign policy, which has been proved both in China, Cuba, the Dominican Republic and in Viet Nam.

Hopefully, this myth about communism once it has been recognized by a substantial number of intellectuals might be killed and buried. This should make for a more realistic assessment and understanding of communism in its many varieties, which in turn should be prerequisite to peaceful coexistence, inevitably the only alternative to war. To be able to understand communism (as well as unionism) instead of outright condemning it I feel it is crucial to have a dialogue going. I am convinced that if the government and parliament of my country had outlawed the communist party instead of having it participate in parliament in proportion to its share of the popular vote, then, and only then, would there have been a fear of a communist plot or overthrow of the government. The dissenting voices of the communists have always been listened to and they have played their part in the government's striking of the middle way between the right and the left wings of politics. I feel this is the only sound way for a democracy. If the U. S. likewise had had communist voices included in the political debates, this might have dissipated some of the myths and absorbed some of the fears of and hostilities towards communism, notably the fear of overthrow of the government. After all, communists are just like the rest of us, only that they have different attitudes and viewpoints that can enrich the debates if we are open minded enough to listen to them instead of being indoctrinated only to rebuff them however true they may be. Also, they will modify and change some of their attitudes if listened to and taken seriously, whereas rejection works the other way. Intellectual honesty, moreover, demands of us the evaluation of facts, opinions, and ideas by their true merits, not by preconceived notions and wishful thinking.

Applying this to the facts about the Viet Nam war as they were brought out by Michael Hollis, whom I don't know, would seem to call for a re-evaluation of the American involvement. In the light of the facts it is deplorable that only 7 persons feel strongly enough about the injustice to join in the fast as a protest against the war. Certainly 700 would have been a more adequate and becoming number. Whatever we think of the effectiveness of their demonstration, respect and sympathy should be afforded to these few morally uncompromising people who so sincerely and self-sacrificingly stand up in protest against what they deeply and rightly feel is immoral and illegal.

Aside from these aspects of the war, there is the overwhelming danger of escalation into a great nuclear war, so horrifying a perspective that we cannot even imagine it. In self-defense we evade the issue by being apathetic. How easily cannot China be involved by a single trespassing of the Chinese border by American planes pursing Chinese Migs? Let us hope that the university community all over the U. S. will realize what actually is at stake before it is too late. Ours is not the time for political apathy.

"Now, for my next act . . ."

"Footprints" by Paul Dickson

In deeds not words—"In 1915 President Edward Kidder Graham called on the students to organize county clubs for the 100 counties of the state. Their work was crucial in the program of the University Extension Service "to extend the borders of the campus to the boundaries of the state." This was not the last time that students rallied to have a part in shaping the tradition of a university as the vital center of the life of the state. They have characteristically played a prominent role in securing appropriations, recruiting students when it was needed, and in going out into the state to answer attacks on the University.

"From the Student Christian Association came the Human Relations Institute and from it the Carolina Political Union, the Carolina Forum and other comparable organizations all devoted to the ideal of free and open discussion of vital questions. The freedom to hear and to express unpopular points of view is essential to the intellectual life of a university. The tradition of student life in this University has no more vital attribute.

"In 1936 the Student Council kept the honor system intact by painstaking investigation of a cheating ring and the suspension of fifty-two students. The Interfraternity Council, Interdormitory Council (now the MRC), Student Legislature, Audit Board, Publications Board, were all formed to meet some specific problem or to improve the quality of student life in a student body growing in size and complexity. During World War II with enrollment down and military programs predominating activity, the students feared that student government might collapse, so they departed from the tradition of no written instrument and wrote everything down in a constitution."

Character is written—"Dramatic incidents and sometimes undramatic actions of individuals have played an important part in forming the University tradition. In 1903 a student editor personally challenging the President (of the University) on the issue of censorship in 1937 the self-influence expulsion of a stellar athlete and president of his class who was outraged by his own unwitting violation of the honor system because of an athletic subsidy; in 1912 the tragic death of a student in a hazing stunt and the state law against hazing which followed; in 1952 the defense by student government of the right and duty of students to handle any problems that might result from seating the newly admitted Negro students in the student section of the football statium.

"It may be said that the story here recounted is nothing but a sentimental tale of student actions and antics through the years. But the great point of the story is that it is not just student tradition; it is a college tradition. It is an educational tradition. It derives its particular significance from the role and mission of this particular university in this particular state."

And not hearers only—"Since 1795 when Hinton James journeyed from Wilmington to Chapel Hill to become the first student to enter the University a steady procession of graduates has gone into the civic life of the state. Something that happened to them at Chapel Hill has helped to make them worthy servants and leaders of a free society. This was the vision of the founding fathers. This is the tradition and the true heritage of the University.

"Its future is in our hands."

'New Wine' Contains Competent Contributions On 'The University'

By WILLIAM FESPERMAN

Editor's Note: New Wine, published by the Presbyterian Student Center, will go on sale Monday, May 9, at Lenoir Hall, Graham Memorial, the Wesley Foundation and the Bullshead Bookshop. The price is 50c for the Summer issue.

In the past New Wine has dealt with such subjects as war, politics, poverty and myth. And it has always done well in what was set out to be done. In this new issue, which deals with the University, New Wine has achieved an even greater success both in quality of content and competance of contributors.

"The Education of Specialists" is the subject of an article by Arthur McGill, assistant professor of religion at Princeton. Dr. McGill sees the modern university performing two basic functions: (1) giving the student the tools necessary for a tight, specialized field of knowledge and (2) broadening and deepening the lives of its students. Yet, a kind of disparity has marked this two-fold function. The disparity is one which reaches far back in Western tradition, for American education has borrowed educational concepts from Germany and England.

The problem is how does one apply the broad to the particular. Dr. McGill's answer reaches into the Biblical tradition for one answer: service. Service in the Christian context involves three things: (1) one expending himself for another, (2) the suffering need of the one who is served and how that need claims service from others, and (3) it is required when one shares in the life of God. Service under these conditions is still flexible enough to be valuable to society. It transforms the disparity of schismatic education into concern for the human condition, especially in our increasing urban complexes.

This disparity is also the subject of an article by Maurice Natanson, former faculty member here and now teaching philosophy at the University of California at Santa Cruz. He deals with the "Discipline of Passion."

Natanson's paper is beautiful and powerful in the Kierkegaardian sense. That is, the prose itself encourages that which it speaks about. Dr. Natanson begins with an old philosophic problem, the universal and the particular. But he enlivens the concept by placing the human being in the context of the temporal particular up against the eternal universal. When one asks the questions of life and death, he is asking questions about the character of the relationship of the particular in the universal order. The answer as to how to leap the gap here is a pedagogical answer. That is, the development of the person toward a passionate committment to his own becoming.

Natanson puts it this way: "The individual who realizes that there is a distance between what he feels and thinks and what is publicly expected of him does in some manner, whether authentically or not, commit himself to a style of existence." But all to offten the commitment does not come about. This is especially true in education where this 'becoming' is primary.

Natanson says, ". . . the individual college student today enters a scene in which he soon learns what is expected of him at a surface level, and he soon learns to disguise his passion, his unique concern, and to translate his overt action into proper form." As a result, the "social game, generally is played with the sophistication of self-awareness."

The Reverend Harry Smith, who is the local chaplain for Presbyterian students, follows up on this note of game playing, especially in regard to academic affairs. Using a vocabulary of Germanic looking, Anglicized compound nouns, Reverend Smith talks about Footnotesmanship, Sourcemanship, One - upsmanship and Studentship. He thinks this is especially true of graduate students, of whom he says: "What could be more supportive to the victim of the present system than to gain victory in playing graduate school games and security in knowing that he can emerge one-up without any apparent effort?"

Dr. John Dixon, Jr., a UNC professor of art and religion, does an article on "in loco parentis." Dr. Dixon, who is always an imaginative and profound teacher and scholar, is basically concerned with freedom. "By freedom I mean the power and right of a person to make his own decisions about the dispositions of his time and energies and resources," he says. Further, Dr. Dixon breaks freedom into three requirements: (1) a requisite degree of maturity, (2) sufficient information upon which to base a decision and (3) habits of mind by which a reasonable appraisal of means and ends can be made.

In the home the child has no responsibility for his freedom. That is taken care of by the parents. But at the university there is no one to take care of one's freedom. Indeed, the university is the place where one develops the capacity to understand his own freedom. That is why the university cannot be "in loco parentis." Dr. Dixon thinks that American students are neither "free nor equipped to act freely."

The university doesn't develop freedom. Here the blame falls primarily on the faculty. Knowledge is considered something we have and is brought under control by educational technique. The lecture system encouraged passivity. The grading system is inadequate and falsely used even to determine a man's future.

These categories of knowledge and how the student is measured in terms of them nullifies the truly creative and authentic person. Dr. Dixon sees that the "fate of American enterprise depends on the recovery of the truly free man."

Daniel Pollitt, professor of Constitutional Law in the UNC School of Law, is also concerned with "in loco parentis." He holds that "in loco parentis" began in the strict colonial puritanical suppression of any student's initutive towards freedom. This went on through the nineteenth century, and, apparently, vestiges of the attitude still prevail at some colleges. But with the thrust of contemporary social concern as a liberating impetus, the student has been given an out from the previously enforced passivity.

Dr. Pollitt illustrates his point with court decisions which trace the historical move towards freedom for the student. This is where he seems to agree with Dixon. They have both come across freedom, though expressed in distinct manifestations, as that kind of commitment to oneself in discipline that Natanson so eloquently describes.

The discussion then shifts to those who have looked for their freedom: the rebel. Sidney Waldman, a Ph.D. candidate in political science, gives an insightful and sympathetic reading of what it means to be a rebel. His reamarks fall into two categories: (1) the rebel rejects the world in which he finds himself and (2) because of this rejection, he is driven into self-imposed isolation or outside ostracism. If the first element is allowed to become a full 'contemptus mundi' attitude, the second element is deepened to a psychological abyss of an impotent, neurotic life in the community. For if the rebel rejects without concern, the power of his criticism and the healing of his suffering are futile.

Waldman is right in laying the burden of the meaning of rebellion on commitment to the world. Commitment does not mean rejection totally of the world but rejection of what is going on in the world and a working toward reconstruction. Finally, it is the pain of commitment, of rebuilding, that fills the void of values lost in rebellion. Again, back to Natanson; it is the pouring of one's individual, particular self into the universal order of things. The paradox of rejection and commitment saves the rebel from the kind of criticism Marx so justifiably made against Christianity: its impotence in the world.

Waldman's portrait of the rebel is much more helpful than the easy sneers of the accepted. The accepted do not realize that the rebel bears on his body the symbol of that which he has rejected. Perhaps that is why the proper are put off; they are committed only to sending their dirty laundry to the cleaner once a week.

Charles Schunior, president of the Student Peace Union, and certainly a rebel, makes some essential points about the discontinuity between what we learn as students and what we do as people. Although he is saying much the same as some others have in this issue, the tone of Schunior's article may put off some. After all, he is a rebel in Waldman's terms and very committed. But he is a constructive rebel concerned for what is going on in his education and his country.

This issue also contains five book reviews done by very competent men.

Overall, there is a tightness and consistency in this edition of New Wine that deepens the seriousness of the question it is dealing with. All the writers seem to recognize that something is amiss in education. It is good and fruitful to hear it from both students and faculty. Hopefully, the articles contained here will set off serious discussion among students about the character of education for their children to come and about their lives together now in the community we call the university.

Loan Payments Will Be Due

All students who have obtained loans from the Student Loan Office and who will be terminating student status for any reason are required to come by the Student Loan Office in Bynum Hall prior to leaving the University.

The purpose of the visit is to arrange for loan repayment. Exit interviews will be conducted during the following hours:

Monday through Friday — 8:30 to 4.

Saturday — 8:30 to 12.

No appointment is necessary. Failure to meet this requirement will delay awarding of the borrower's degree.

Peace Corps Volunteers
IN PARADISE?

Would you believe Yap?
Saipan? Truk? Palau?

Would you believe two years in the South Seas working in education, health or public works? There are problems in paradise, and the Peace Corps has been asked to help solve them.

This is a brand new program.

On May 1, 1966, the Peace Corps was invited into the Pacific Trust Territory which the U.S. manages for the United Nations. Needed immediately are liberal arts and science students who aren't afraid to work — hard.

It's one enchanted opportunity.

Rusk Expresses Faith In Vietnamese Elections

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of State Dean Rusk said Monday he is confident there will be elections in South Viet Nam next September in a first step toward constitutional government.

Rusk added he does not believe the government's ruling generals will stand in the way of eventual civilian rule. And he expressed belief the country's rulers are not trying to postpone elections.

He said reports that Premier Nguyen Cao Ky has declared he will remain in power for at least another year have been misinterpreted to mean that the top man in the governing council of generals is going back on promises to hold elections this year.

But Rusk offered no forcast of the timetable for a shift to civilian government in the Southeast Asian war theater. Rusk testified in the glare of television lights at an explosive renewal of the Senate Foreigh Relations Committee's internal debate about U. S. policy in Asia.

He came armed with a legal brief arguing that there is ample ground within international law for the American stand in the Asian war.

Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., fired back a demand that the committee hold a public inquiry into the legality of the American position.

Morse, a persistent foe of American involvement in the Vietnamese struggle, insisted the United States is "acting outside the law."

For 3 1-2 hours, the debate swurled around the roots of American involvement, the treaties, resolutions and diplomatic decisions that led to the commitment of more than 250,000 American fighting men.

Ky's weekend remarks about the government of South Viet Nam added a new ingredient.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., the committee chairman, called the premier an irresponsible man who could hamper free elections. Morse called him a tyrant.

Rusk, glancing at a transcript of Ky's press conference — which he acknowledged could be incomplete — said Ky had not declared elections for a national assembly would be postponed.

"The most immediate election is an election for a constituent assembly," Rusk said. He said that would choose a constitution - drafting body.

A national assembly, with legislating power, wuld be a future step. Rusk argued that Ky's statement referred to elections for a national assembly. He contended Ky was saying merely that balloting would not come until next year after a constituion and election laws are adopted.

". . . Some interpretations may have been overdrawn," he said of reports on the Ky statement.

"I think there will be an election for a constituent assembly in September," he said.

Rusk said the Ky regime is moving toward those elections now. "I don't know of anyone out there who has indicated that the government is not proceeding . . . " he said.

Rusk said Viet Nam is in a situation like that which faced the infant American Republic before the U. S. Constitution was written.

And he told Fulbright that the United States does not seek to dictate the shape of a future civilian government. Fulbright said Rusk has declared such a government could not be Communist.

"I didn't say they couldn't be," Rusk said. He said he is confident South Viet Nam would not choose a Communist regime.

"Why aren't we more anxious to have an election, rather than putting it off?" said Fulbright.

"We support elections," Rusk said. "We support free elections in South Viet Nam. ."

"We hope they'll reach a basic constitutional settlement out there," he said. "But it isn't easy.

"Chances are they'll be able to reach that," he added.

"And I do not believe the generals will stand in the way of their reaching that kind of settlement."

Rusk came to talk about foreign aid — the official subject of the hearing — but he came armed with two documents: one tracing the roots of American involvement in South Viet Nam, the other arguing its legality under international law.

Before reading the one on the legal aspects, Rusk said it was a brief summary of a detailed treatment of this subject prepared earlier.

Both reports stemmed from Senate questions posed when he testified April 18. And Rusk seemed puzzled when Fulbright said he regretted the war question had been raised.

But Fulbright a sharp critic of the American stance, bored in on the Vietnamese issue himself, saying it wuld be hard to act on the $3.4-billion AID bill without pondering the war question at the same time.

In general, Republican Senators did their talking on the AID bill. They steered clear of the Democratic debate about the war.

Rusk said the American commitment to Viet Nam had its beginnings in the days after World War II, when Harry S. Truan was President.

"We considered throughout the post war period that we had an important stake in the security and stability of the nations of Southeast Asia," he said.

Legally, he said, the United States is on firm ground.

"Military actions of the United States in support of South Viet Nam, including air attacks on North Viet Nam, are authorized under international law by the well - established principle of collective defense against armed aggression," he said. And he said there is nothing in American or international law that requires a declaration of war to authorize the American military action in Southeast Asia.

Morse said that is unconscionable, and demanded an inquiry on the legal issues. Fulbright said later the committee will decide Thursday whether to hold such hearings.

"I want the American people to know what the facts are about this before November, 1966," Morse said. And he made clear his message was aimed at the television audience — "the people watching this program."

Morse said only the congressional elections next fall can stem escalation of the war in Viet Nam. "I close by saying to the American people: you can only do it with your ballots," Morse said, "You can meet the bullets with your ballots."

Rusk spent most of his time defending the arguments he sounded in his opening account — or flicking his horn rimmed glasses off and on while his Senate critics and champions argued the case.

Sen. Gale McGee, D-Wyo., said some foes of the U. S. stand in Viet Nam have been talking in extreme terms.

"Those in the Congress who are supporting the escalation of this war are the extremists in America," Morse retorted.

Senatorial tempers flared at times. Sen. Frank J. Lausche, D-Ohio, sought to come to Rusk's defense and Fulbright cut him short. "Will the senator be quiet for a moment," the chairman snapped.

When McGee, newest member of the committee, accused critics of putting Rusk on trial, Fulbright replied:

"We're delighted to have you come here to give us instructions."

Money Given For Colleges

ST. LOUIS (AP) —A $5 million grant to support a plan to strengthen predominantly Negro colleges and universities in the South was announced Monday by the Danforth Foundation.

The money, spokesmen said, will be given to he Council of Southern Universities. Council members are Duke, North Ca- State, Rice, Texas, Tulane, Virginia and Vanderbilt.

The council has developed a sveen-year program designed to improve the administration staff and faculties of the predominantly Negro institutions. The total program is expected to cost $17 million.

Chancellor Alexander Heard of Vanderbilt University, the council president, said the program was worked out in cooperation with 10 mostly Negro colleges.

Cow Causes Wreck

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil (AP) — A bus trying to avoid a cow on the road plunged from a bridge 33 miles south of here yesterday, and police said six persons were killed and 20 injured.

The cow was also killed, police said, and residents of the nearby town of Itaguai cut it up and carried away the meat.

Truman Gets Greetings From President Johnson

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Harry S. Truman got a lot of nice compliments at his 82nd birthday celebration yesterday, but nothing seemed to delight him so much as when President Johnson told him by telephone:

"I understand that you think I have more important things to do than wish you a happy birthday. Well, for the first time in your life you are wrong. Mrs. Truamn may know of some other times, but I certainly don't."

Beaming broadly, Truman replied: "Well, there has to be a first time for everything."

"I want you to know that I'll never be too busy to pay my respects to a great American," the President said. "I am well aware that you get a little impatient with these annual birthday celebrations. I've often thought you'd rather have your friends cussing you than praising you. That may be why you became a Democrat."

Truman allowed that probably was so.

Later, comedian Jack Benny got up and said his close friendship with the former President may cause him to give up show business and go into politics.

"George Murphy got elected Senator and Ronald Reagan is willing to start as Governor," Benny said. "I'm thinking of running for President. Or I may take a lesson from the governor of Alabama and have my wife run."

Another comedian, George Jessel, followed Benny and said he can't match Benny's familiarity with presidents.

"I've only known Truman since the days if Woodrow Wilson," Jessel said. "Benny knew Jefferson."

There was a genuine feeling of affection for Truman by the more than 400 dignitaries and old cronies who gathered at the birthday luncheon. Truman, perceptibly aged, confined his remarks to a few words of thanks.

President Johnson, in the phone call amplified to the guests, told of a proclamation he signed today extending "the admiration and gratitude of all the people."

The proclamation lauds Truman for devoting "himself unceasingly to the cause of freedom, peace and the betterment of his fellow man."

"Harry S. Truman's deep concern for the well - being of each individual American will never be surpassed by any President. His wise and passionate pursuit of justice, opportunity and security for every citizen set an example which every President of the United States will strive to emulate so long as the nation and the presidency shall endure.

"And it has won him a permanent place in the hearts of his countrymen."

Truman was flanked by the flags of 30 nations at the head table. Others at the table included the governors of Arkansas, Kansas and Missouri, as well as congressmen and cabinet memebers of the Truman administration.

Henry J. Talge, the Kansas City industrialist who has given the birthday lunehcons since Truman returned from the White House in 1953, presented the former Prsident with two exquisite brooches for Mrs. Truman and their daughter, Margaret. The gold pins, each with three doves, were made by Tiffany's in New York.

Saigon Blast

SAIGON (AP) — A roaring terrorist blast believed to have been from a claymore mine ripped through a downtown intersection early yesterday in front of a U. S. military billet. A street gun battle followed.

First reports said five Vietnamese and one American were wounded either in the explosion or in the gun fight.

U. S. and Vietnamese troops and police, some armed with machine guns and automatic weapons, converged on the scene and moved along one of the main boulevards, apparently in the direction in which the terrorists fled and perhaps were holed up.

Chou Says US-China War 'Will Have No Boundaries'

Tokyo (AP) — Red China's Premier Chou En-Lai declared the United States will not be able to pull out of China if a war, conventional or nuclear, broke out on the Mainland between the two countries, Peking's New China News Agency (NCNA) said today.

In a four - point policy statement on the United States, Chou also said if the U. S-China war broke out, "It will have no boundaries."

In a broadcast monitored here, NCNA said the Chinese Premier made the statement in an interview April 10 with Ejaz Husain, correspondent of the Pakistan newspaper Dawn.

NCNA said to other points made by Chou were "China will not take the initiative to provoke a war with the United States" and "The Chinese mean what they say."

Chou said "Should the United States impose a war on China, it can be said with certainty that, once in China, the United States will not be able to pull out, however many men it may send over and whatever weapons it may use, nuclear weapons included."

"Since the 13 million people of southern Viet Nam can cope with over 200,000 U. S. troops, the 650 million people of China can undoubtedly cope with 10 million of them. No matter how many U. S. aggressor troops may come, they will certainly be annhilated in China," he said.

Chou said "some U. S. strategists want to bombard China by relying on their air and naval superiority and avoid a ground war. This is wishful thinking."

"Once the war gets started with air or sea action, it will not be for the United States alone to deecide how the war will continue," he said.

"If you can come from the sky, why can't we fight back on the ground?" he asked, and said:

"That is why we say the war will have no boundaries once it breaks out."

Chou continued:

"China has not sent any troops to Hawaii; it is the United States that has occupied China's territory of Taiwan Province (Formosa, Nationalist China's island base).

"Nevertheless, China has been making efforts in demanding, through negotiations, that the United States withdraw all its armed forces from Taiwan Province and the Taiwan Straits, and she has held talks with the United States for more than 10 years, first in Geneva and then in Warsaw, on this question of principle, which admits of no concession whatsoever. All this serves as a cery good proof.

The Chinese mean what they say. In other words, if any country in Asia, Africa or elsewhere meets with aggression by the imperialists headed by the United States, the Chinese government and people definitely will give it support and help. Should such just action bring on U. S. aggression against China, we will unhesitatingly rise in resistance and fight to the end."

Music Major Awarded

William Robinson, a senior music major, has been awarded a Woodrow Wilson fellowship for graduate study at Yale.

The University plans to continue the grant after the first year. Robinson was also offered a Danforth fellowship and a Princeton National Fellowship.

The Whitmire, S. C., student plans to work toward the M. A. and Ph.D. in musicology.

Robinson, holder of a General Motors scholarship at UNC, was a member of the freshman honors program and the freshman honorary, Phi Eta Sigma.

Yesterday, you may have had a reason for missing a good, nourishing breakfast.

Today, you don't.

Now you can have new Carnation instant breakfast –makes milk a meal that's too good to miss.

Each glass delivers as much protein as two eggs, as much mineral nourishment as two strips of crisp bacon, more energy than two slices of buttered toast, and even Vitamin C–the orange juice vitamin. It comes in a lot of great flavors, too. Look for them in your cereal section.

Wins And Losses

Big Weekend For Sports Action

This past weekend was a really big one in the sports world.

Topping the list of important events, as far as Carolina fans are concerned, was the clinching of the ACC baseball title by Walter Rabb's Tar Heels. The Heels took a routine victory from Maryland Friday, but had to really scramble for the victory over Virginia that wrapped up the pennant race.

The cellar-dwelling Cavaliers didn't want to do their part to help Carolina put the title away. Ned Turnbull, a fine pitcher, was in trouble a few times, especially in the first and second innings, but he worked out of it and had a 1-0 shutout with two out in the ninth.Then the Tar Heel magic went to work again. George McRae, Carolina's answer to Hoyt Wilheim or Ron Perranoski, hit a grounder to Virginia shortstop Bob Curtis for what should have been the final out, but Curtis threw wide to first. Bob Hume then got the hit that won the game.

In a way, the victory over Virginia was a fitting way to clinch the crown. It wouldn't be fair to call the Tar Heels a lucky team, but they are certainly opportunistic—a valuable attribute for a ball club. All season long they have refused to quit, continuing to battle and looking for the break. When they got it—as in the Virtinia game—they generally cashed in on it.

The Heels have four more regular-season games, including the home finale today against Duke, but the next game that really means something is June 2. That's the day Carolina meets the Southern Conference champion, probably East Carolina, in the first round of the NCAA District Three playoffs. The way the Tar Heels are playing now, they will be tough in Gastonia.

Keane Out, Houk In For Yanks

Outside the realm of Carolina sports, important developments came in baseball and racing — both human and horse.

The New York Yankees, looking at the American League from an unfamiliar position — the bottom — took the step that most observers had been expecting. They fired manager Johnny Keane, Ralph Houk exchanged his gray-flannel suit for pinstripes and returned to the dugout from whence he had gone after the 1963 season.

Houk thus puts his perfect record as a manager on the line. The Major took over the Yankees when Casey Stengel was fired for only winning the 1960 pennant instead of also taking the World Series. At that time, if you remember, the Yanks were the scourge of baseball; and Houk proceeded to win three straight world championships. Apparently deciding there were no more worlds to conquer, Houk became general manager and made Yogi Berra field manager. When Berra repeated Stengel's sin, he was canned and replaced by Keane, the man who beat him in the 1964 World Series as boss of the St. Louis Cardinals.

Under Keane the Yanks tumbled to sixth place last year and when they started off this season playing like the Mets, it was obvious that Johnny's days were numbered. Can Houk do any better with this team? Well, he got them out of the cellar when they won their first two games under him. It is, however, normal for a team to revive temporarily after a change in managers.

Soon after taking over from Keane, Houk announced that the Yankees can win the pennant. Maybe, Ralph, but I don't think so. The collapse of the Yankees is not due to any one thing that is being done wrong, but to a fundamental decay. Mickey Mantle and Whitey Ford, the two bulwarks of the Yankee dynasty for the past 15 years, are getting old. This could well be Mantle's last year. For the first time since the days of Ruth, there doesn't seem to be an heir-apparent to the role of super-star of the Yankees. Ruth, Gehrig, DiMaggio and Mantle have formed an unbroken line of Yankee greats for over 45 years. Who's next?

As for the rest of the Yankees, the picture is not much brighter. Roger Maris was never a great ballplayer. After his injured hand last year, he may not even be a good one. Elston Howard is getting old. The pitching is weak. Mel Stottlemyre is a good one, but Al Downing and Jim Bouton have failed to live up to their early promise. If the Yankees do win the pennant, Houk will certainly deserve manager of the year honors.

Horse, Human Burn Up Track

There was some fast running over the weekend, outstanding performances by runners with two legs and runners with four.

The fastest of the four-legged racers turned out to be Kauai King, who won the 92nd Kentucky Derby by the beautifully simple method of going to the front at once and staying there. The son of the great Native Dancer ran the ten furlongs in a good 2:02 flat, two seconds off the track and Derby record set in 1964 by Northern Dancer (a grandson of Native Dancer).

Kauai King is, naturally, the only horse which now has a chance to become the ninth winner of the Triple Crown. Ahead of him are the Preakness on May 21 and the Belmont Stakes on June 4. The spacing of the races this year — only two weeks between the Preakness and the Belmont — makes the task of winning all three even tougher than usual. Only eight horses have ever swept the Triple Crown, and the last was Citation back in 1948. Since then a lot of good horses have tried and failed, among them Native Dancer, Nashua, Tim Tam, Carry Back and Northern Dancer. The first two lost the Derby, then captured the last two legs, while the last three won the Derby and Preakness, but failed in the Belmont.

The odds are against Kauai King, but he's a good colt and apparently an improving one. Ahead of him, though, is a possible meeting with Buckpasser, last year's champion juvenile, in the Belmont Stakes. If the son of Tom Fool is ready for the race, he should give Kauai King an interesting afternoon.

The Yankees and Kauai King got the headlines this weekend, but the outstanding performance of the weekend was turned in by a trackman. Tommy Smith ran the 220-yard dash on the straightaway in an incredible 19.5 seconds. Smith thus smashed the world record set in 1956 by Duke's Dave Sime and tied by Frank Budd in 1962 by a full five-tenths of a second. That is truly a phenomenal achievement in such a short race.

Golf Tourney Goes Today

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C. (AP) — The Southern Conference determines individual and team golf titles in its annual tournatment today and tomorrow at the Country Club at North Carolina.

Honors will be decided over the 36 - hole route on the 7,000 - yard, par 72 course.

Virginia Tech, no longer a conference member, won the title last year and Tech's Neff McClary was the individual champion.

Davidson, West Virginia, George Washington and The Citadel figure to battle it out for team laurels.

Doug McKeever of Davidson tied for second last year and is back, along with teammate Joe Jelks who finished seventh.

Other high finishers last year who are back include Larry Lea of Richmond, Chuck Collett of George Washington, David Stewart of William & Mary and Ed Grimball of The Citadel.

Heels Face Devils In 1966 Home Final

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

Carolina's ACC champions close out their home season today when they host the Duke Blue Devils on the Tar Heel diamond.

The Tar Heels clinched the ACC crown by beating Maryland, 5-2, and Virginia, 2-1, over the weekend. The Heels come home riding a nine-game winning streak that has boosted their record to 17-8 for the season and 11-1 in the conference. The only conference loss was a 1-0 squeaker to South Carolina.

If Coach Walter Rabb sticks to his normal pitching rotation, Danny Walker (6-1, 2.25 ERA) should get the call to face the Blue Devils. However, Rabb has been considering Mike Flannagan, a sophomore righthander, for a starting assignment, and he might get the call. Flannagan has a 1-1 record and a 3.60 ERA.

Both Walker and left Beattie Leonard have lowered their ERA's to 2.25. Leonard gave up only one hit in six innings to Virginia Saturday, but didn't figure in the decision. The victory went to ace reliever George McRae, now 4-0 with a brilliant 1.06 ERA.

Carolina clobbered Duke in Durham earlier this season, 8-1. Walker won that one, and the game that moved the Tar Heels into a tie for first place in the ACC.

Danny Talbott went 0 for 6 in the weekend games, and his batting average fell to .375. Four other Tar Heels are also hitting over .300. Charlie Carr blasted four hits against Maryland and is currently batting .351. Bob Bonczek is hitting .322. Charlie Thomas, .317, and Bob Hume, .305, are the other .300-plus swingers.

Duke currently rests in seventh place in the ACC race. The Blue Devils have a 4-8 conference slate and an overall 8-15 mark. They had a game with Clemson rained out.

Carolina has three more games after today's contest. The Tar Heels close out their conference schedule against Wake Forest Saturday in Winston-Salem.

On May 16, the Heels face the Deacons again in the Shrine Game in Asheboro. The last game of the season is against Virginia Tech in Blacksburg, Va.

If the Tar Heels can win their remaining four games, they will finish 21-8. Last season the tally was 14-15.

Kauai King Remains In Kentucky Awhile

LOUSIVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Mike Ford, who thinks his colt may have replaced him at home, will ship Kentucky Derby winner Kauai King to Baltimore within a day or two for the May 21 Preakness.

Ford said yesterday that the King will remain at Churchill Downs until at least Tuesday, and maybe Wednesday.

As for the Ford household, he said jokingly:

"I haven't been home for two months and until Saturday, my wife kept begging me to take a little time off and come home.

"Then, after we won the Derby, I told her Kauai King would just be walking for a few days and I might take some time off. She said, 'Oh, it's just another month. You'd better stay with him.' "

"I think I've been replaced!"

Ford, who travels with Kauai King whenever he moves, said the delay in leaving Churchill Downs was "just to give him a couple of days of rest.

"You know, a 1 1-4 - mile race takes a lot out of a horse," he said.

Mrs. Ada L. Rice's Advocator, a fast closing second in the Derby, left late Sunday and probably will challenge Kauai King again in the 1 3-16 mile Preakness.

Also vacant are the stalls of Wehately Stable's Stupendous, fourth in the Derby; Abe's Hoe, fifth finisher; and Amberoid, Fleet Shoe and Exhibitionist, seventh, eighth and ninth.

Blue Skyer, a surprise third finisher, probably will leave for Baltimore on Thursday, trainer Jim Padgett said.

"I've got to do a little checking on some other things, but those are my plans right now," Padgett said. He had planned to race next at Chicago until his colt pleased him with his Derby performance.

Still at Churchill Downs was Williamston Kid, 10th in the Derby but still a probable starter in the Preakness. Trainer Jimmy Barlett still has hopes for the colt.

"He just didn't like the track here," Barltett said.

Williamston Kid probably will leave for Baltimore on Tuesday.

Rare Breed For College

Nine Two-Sport Men At Carolina

By JOEY LEIGH
SPECIAL TO THE DTH

Two-sport athletes are a rarity in college athletics, but Carolina has nine. UNC's extraordinary sports figures are: Bo Wood, Steve Lister, Charlie Carr, Billy Dodson, Jim Frye, Pete Worthen, Bob Hume, Bronson Van Wyck and, of course, Danny Talbott.

CHARLIE CARR

Bo Wood, a 225 pound end in the fall, hangs up his cleats in the spring, so that he can throw the discus for the track team. Wood, a junior from Barrington, N. J., holds the school record for the discus. He had a full spring, practicing football on Monday, Wednesday, Friday and Saturday and track on Tuesday, Thursday and Sunday.

Steve Lister, Wood's 220 pound roommate, wrestles and plays defensive end for the Tar Heels. A Bargaintown, N. J., native, Lister participated in track, football and baseball in high school. Says Lister, "I walk off the football field and onto the wrestling mat."

Charlie Carr, a 200 lb. Virginia Beach product, displays his ability to catch the year round, at split end in the fall and in center field during the spring. "Playing two sports takes a little out of each one," commented Carr. "You can't really get proficient in either one, as you would like to."

Football, Basketball

Bill Dodson packs 195 lbs. on a 6 foot 1 inch frame. His flanker backing talents and place kicking ability took a back seat when he became the seventh man on his years' freshman basketball team. Having played sports the year round in high school in Alexandria, Va., Dodson has found playing two sports in college to be "no big problem."

Jim Frye, a 6 foot 5 inch basketballer from Homewood, Ill., uses his jumping talents to help the track team in the high jump and the high hurdles. The lean 186-pound Frye holds the high hurdle and the high jump record at his high school at Flossmoor, Ill. Frye, like Dodson, played three sports in high school, cross country, track and basketball.

Pete Worthen, a 2-5-pounder from Andover, Mass., swims the 50- and 100-yard freestyle and throws the discus. An All-America swimmer, Worthen is now co-captain and holds the national freshman record in the 50-yard freestyle. Worthen devotes nine months to swimming and only two months to track, yet he placed third in the ACC in the discus last year. One year before coming to UNC, Worthen was forced to give up wrestling and football due to a back injury. Then, he took up swimming and track.

Bob Hume, a 200-pounder from Memphis, Tenn., plays flanker back in football and left field in baseball. He is a two-year letterman in both sports. Hume played the same sports in high school, and his senior year football team was city champion. Hume's ability to get on base and skill with the bat is shown by his position in the lineup —lead-off man.

Recovered from Accident

Bronson Van Wyck, a wiry tennis and soccer player, lives in Greenwich, Conn. Van Wyck plays right inside and right wing in soccer and alternates with Gene Hamilton as the No. 1 singles player. Serving as a junior co-captain with Kenny Oettinger, Van Wyck has lost only four matches in the last two years. A car accident almost cut short Van Wyck's athletic career. For part of his senior year, Van Wyck's body was in a cast and his wounds required over 100 stitches. This 174-pounder fought back and won a berth on the U. S. team at Wimbledon his freshman year at UNC.

BO WOOD

Danny Talbott, a 6-footer from Rocky Mount, was a three-sport letterman in high school, playing football, basketball and baseball. As the Tar Heel first baseman his sophomore year, Talbott made

STEVE LISTER

All-ACC, with a .362 batting average. As a junior, Talbott made All-A CC and was chosen as the Player of the Year in quarterbacking the Carolina eleven.

Before coming to UNC, Talbott was sought by 75 schools and about all the professional baseball teams. Since coming to Carolina, he has been drafted by the Detroit Tigers and the Pittsburgh Pirates. After graduating as a history major, Talbott will have the enviable task of choosing which professional career to pursue.

Practices Fit In

These two-sporters have little difficulty in fitting practice sessions and actual contests into their busy year. Each agreed that the budgeting of their time was most important. Only when the two sports conflict are these young men presented with a problem.

"I miss a lot of track because of spring practice," says Wood. Frye, also a track man, said that basketball laps over into this sport. He finds that the meets start so soon that it is hard to get in shape quick enough.

Transition from one sport to another was expressed as a minor difficulty which had to be overcome, especially when one sport immediately follows the other.

"You have to tone your muscles," said Dodson. "You have to be tight to play football and loose to play basketball."

According to Worthen, swimming requires loose muscles while for track you have to be more "toned." The trio of Carr, Hume and Talbott have to be tight for football, but have plenty of time to get loose during basketball season.

Van Wyck has found that soccer helps tennis and vice versa. "A lot of running in soccer gives you the stamina you need in tennis and the quickness you need in tennis helps you in soccer," he stated.

Do these nine young men have enough free time? Are they able to sandwich their social life between games and practicing, not to mention classes and studying?

Social Life

"Football," said Wood, "cramps my social life a little, limiting me to one free night a week." Hume gets as much "socializing as he needs," while Talbott finds it difficult since he's going with a girl from East Carolina. Carr too finds that his social life is curbed by his two sports.

Basketballers Dodson and Frye agree that they have enough free time. Worthen, a DKE, tries "to reach a happy medium between social life and athletics," while Van Wyck, his fraternity brother, has a slightly different view. "College athletes don't really need a social life; it'll be available later in life," said Van Wyck.

VISTA Seeking Volunteers Here

Students here will have an opportunity Thursday to volunteer for service on Indian reservations, among migrant farm workers, in urban slums and in rural pockets of poverty ranging from Appalachian hollows to Alaskan villages.

Representatives from Volunteers In Service To America (VISTA) will be on campus to outline the program and its role in the war on poverty.

"We're looking for volunteers of all backgrounds and abilities," reported Sheldon Butts and Barbara Selfridge, leaders of the VISTA contingent. They described VISTA Volunteers as "people who can listen, understand and and communicate with others enough to live and work for a year among the poor in this country."

VISTA Volunteers serve for one year, receiving livign expenses and medical care. In addition to an allowance for food, housing, travel and clothing, they receive $600 at the end of their service.

Butts and Miss Selfridge pointed out that over 2,100 VISTA Volunteers are currently in training or on assignment to poverty areas throughout the United States. About 75 percent of them are between the ages of 18 and 24.

"Students now serving as Volunteers are involved in a list of activities as long as the problems which poverty creates," they said. They are conducting literacy programs, organizing clean - up campaigns, developing recreation programs, tutoring dropouts, setting up libraries, organizing community meetings and surveying health needs.

came to a voice vote; there were no dissenting votes.

Following the vote, Sitterson was brought into the chamber for a brief statement, in which he quipped "I had been reading the papers last week, and had some idea you people might be meeting here today."

In a more serious note, he then thanked the trustees and noted that the University had always looked to the future. "It is in that spirit that I look forward to these years with you."

Sitterson was accompanied by his wife and two of his three children. A number of other relatives were in the audience.

Sitterson has been acting chancellor since Feb. 16; he was named to the position while serving as vice - chancellor, a position he assumed in July of 1965.

Prior to being named vice chancellor new dean of both the College of Arts and Science and the General College here.

Sitterson was born in Kinston Jan. 17, 1911, and graduated from the University in 1931. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Sim C. Sitterson of Kinston.

He attended schools in Kinston and Washington, D. C.

He entered the UNC Graduate school in 1931 and received a masters degree in 1932.

Sitterson then taught for one year at the Georgia Military Academy and was director of the N. C. Hall of History from 1934 to 1935.

He became a part - time instructor in social science at UNC in 1935 while working toward his doctorate. After receiving his Ph.D. in 1937 he became a full time instructor.

After receiving a one-year Rosenwald Fellowship in 1940, Sitterson made a study of the sugar industry in the South. From 1941 to 1944 he again taught at UNC.

From 1944 to 1946 he served on the War Production Board. He rejoined the University in 1946, becoming a full professor in the Department of History.

In 1961 Sitterson was given the highest recognition accorded to educators at the University by being designated Kenan Professor of History.

Peace Corps Recruiters Pleased With Response

Peace Corps Recruiters on campus are most pleased with the response thus far to the new Micronesia program. About fifty students signed up yesterday at the table in Y-Court and received an application.

Micronesia is the U. S. Trust Territory of the Pacific composed of some 2,142 islands scattered over some 3,000,000 square miles. The program calls for Volunteers to begin training in Hawaii in July and travel to Micronesia in October.

A second group will begin training in October, also in Hawaii, and arrive in Micronesia by October.

Because of the urgency of the Micronesian program the Peace Crops has created a simplified application procedure. It includes a special shortened application form which concentrates on skills needed specifically for Micronesia. Taking the regular placement test is not necessary.

The application calls for students from three fields especially - elementary education and community development (no experience necessary); public health (no experience necessary) and public works (some experience in surveying, construction or drafting helpful).

Knowledge of foreign languges and technical skills is not necessary. The Peace Corps three month training program will prepare the Volunteer to meet the needs of the program.

From UNC the recruiters will travel to Tennessee and then to Miami. In all, 60 colleges and universities will be visited.

Gil Hall, Peace Corps Volunteer recently returned from Ecuador said that the literature had disappeared at a phenomenal rate and students seemed genuinely interested. "This program is unique in many ways, and it is a wonderful opportunity for the student interested in advancing the cultural, technological, and educational level of one of the U. S.'s own 'colonies.' "

Because it is an accelerated program, applicants will be notified within fifteen days of the status of their application.

Services Tonight For Dr. Haydon

A brief memorial service will be conducted in Hill Hall at 8 tonight for Dr. Glen Haydon, Kenan Professor of Music who died in Memorial Hospital Sunday morning after suffering a heart attack at his home last Saturday.

Dr. Earl Slocum, professor of music, is in charge of the service, which will precede the University Symphony Orchestra concert. Professor of English Clifford Lyons, a close friend of Haydon, will participate in the service.

Other funeral arrangements are incomplete.

Haydon, 69, was born in Inman, Kansas and graduated from the University of California. He received a master's degree there and a Ph.D. in 1932 from the University of Vienna.

He formerly was president of the American Musicological Society and the Music Teachers National Association.

Haydon was chairman of the UNC Music Department from 1934, when he arrived here from the University of California.

He also taught music at Harvard and the University of Michigan. He was a member of the Royal Music Association in London.

Haydon was author of a book of melodies he collected and edited during research at the Vatican in Rome. He published "Hymns for the Whole Year" in 1959 — an accumulation of 30 vesper hymns widely used in Italy 400 years ago and from which many modern hymns are derived.

Dr. Glen Haydon

Surviving are his wife, the former Helen Bergfried of Leavenworth, Kansas; a son, Dr. Glen B. Haydon of Stanford University; and a daughter, Mrs. David Howell of Boston.

perialism and its collaborators.

Peking declared the Chinese tests were designed "to oppose the U. S. - Soviet collusion for maintaining nuclear monopoly and sabotaging the revolutionary struggles of all oppressed peoples and nations."

"The Chinese People's possession of nuclear weapons is a great encouragement to the peoples who are fighting heroically for their own liberation as well as a new contribution to the defense of world peace."

Wright said the United States "continues to deplore the disregard of the Chinese Communist leaders for the desires and the well-being of pople throughout the world who may suffer from the ill effects of atmospheric nuclear testing which most of the world has banned by adherence to the limited test ban treaty."

Most Washington experts figure that even with a hydrogen device, Peking still faces a long period of development before achieving a deliverable thermonuclear weapon. But they acknowledge that Red China is completely determined to become the first "have not" nation to become a fullfledged nuclear power no matter how it may strain the economy.

Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara said recently that the missiles and nuclear warheads being developed in China would have a range of up to 700 miles in the next two or three years.

But he added that it would be a decade or more before the Chinese could produce range which could directly threaten the United States.

The "grim prospect" that the Chinese Communists would have hydrogen bombs and medium - range missiles to deliver them within four years was outlined to a House Froeign Affairs Subcommittee Jan. 16 by Prof. Ralph L. Powell of American University, a specialist on China's military affairs.

Medium - range missiles are those that can travel several hundred miles. By 1975, Powell said, the Chinese may have deployed their first intercontinental ballistic missiles capable of striking the United States.

For centuries China lagged far behind the West in science and tehcnology. Now she has narrowed the West's lead in some areas, though her advances have been spotty, according to a report to the National Science Foundation by Dr. Chu - Yuan, a specialist on the subject.

Referring to Red China's venture into the nuclear weapons field, he said:

"Because of the demands made in the field of atomic energy, new techniques have been developed, such as electronic computers, multichannel communications, ranging and remote control systems. . .

"Along with the development of the nuclear bomb, Communist China has conducted a program to develop rockets, and since 1958 the rocket work has intensified."

Pierced Ears Seen As Latest Rage On US Campuses - Boys And Girls

(ACP)—Cameos, ivory roses, and pearls are the latest craze of an old style. A mode which began in Biblical days —ear-piercing—is still popular today and has become the latest campus fad.

The Pow Wow, newspaper of Northeast Louisiana State College, Monroe, La., reported on the not-so-new activity:

Centuries ago women and even children wore earrings, believing they would prevent or cure diseases of the eyes. During the reign of Elizabeth I, men wore earrings suspended from one ear.

Earrings and ear-piercing have bobbed in and out of style since days of old. Most of the time, earrings have been popular when hair styles were short or piled high on the head. Seldom have they been popular with long hair as they are today.

All over the country coeds are getting their ears pierced and wearing the popular studs or wooden dangles. Jewelry stores are hard pressed to keep up with the demand.

Doctors, jewelers, and friends are being asked to perform the surgery. Regardless of who does it, a certain amount of skill is required to get the angle of piercing right and the holes symmetrical. If the holes are too low, are too high, a stud earring may rub against the ear cartilage.

Amateur punchers generally use one of three methods—the ice cube method, the clothes pin method, or the slow-piercing method.

Perhaps the most pain is the clothes pin method. Some coeds agree it is a grueling experience to have clothes pins hung from the ear. The length of time for leaving them on varies, but the best time to remove them is before the coed faints.

The slow-piercing method, the most dangerous of the three, uses a self-piercing post, an earring that pierces the ear slowly. This method increases the possibility of infection.

The ice cube method is uncomfortable but is perhaps the safest. Ice cubes are used to numb the earlobe before piercing it with a pin. With any of the methods, the ear usually drains and itches for a time.

"If the girls really want their ears pierced, they should let a doctor do them," a registered nurse at the informary suggested. "It would certainly reduce the possibility of infection."

Cases of infection arise when coeds do not clean the ear lobes and earrings properly. They must be cleaned regularly, even years after the ears have been pierced.

Is it really worth all the trouble?

One coed said "yes," even though her ears had become infected after they were pierced. "I still think pierced ears look good," she said.

Another said she didn't think they were "worth the trouble. You have to keep earrings on most of the time after the ears have been pierced. I think I'd get tired of them. Besides, I don't like the possibility of infection."

"I'm glad I had mine pierced," another said, "But," she continued, expressing the opinions of others who have gone through the ear-piercing ordeal, "if I had to go through it again—knowing the anxiety one must go through — I wouldn't do it."

Wall Street Drop A Part Of Cycle

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

Monday's drop in the stock market—called the steepest since the Nov. 22, 1963 assassination of President Kennedy—really wasn't that much of an all-of-a-sudden thing, a visiting professor of finance said here Tuesday.

James L. Knipe called it a dramatization of what's been happening for the past few months.

Knipe — for three years adviser to the chairman of the Federal Reserve System and author of a 326-page analysis of "The Federal Reserve and The American Dollar" — said that the decline was, for one thing, overdue.

"There's no doubt that the stock market seems to be trying to say something," he said in his 109 Gardner Hall office.

"I think this is an expression that the market feels the administration has finally gotten a little afraid of inflation and will permit the Federal Reserve to tighten money up a little bit," Knipe said.

"If this is true, then this long boom may be topping off," he continued.

"It's overdue to top out."

"It's the long overdue recognition that expansionary monetary policies have to be curbed sometimes and are now being curbed with the Administration's permission."

The Federal Reserve System attempted a token tightening up of the dollar of President Johnson.

The "Fed' was forced to back down.

"The Fed has come under the direct influence of Johnson in the past few years," Knipe said, "so that its autonomy has been either impaired or largely lost."

What the Fed is doing, Knipe said, is telling businessmen that it's now time to stop expansion policy, Knipte said, panding plans and equipment because the business cycle has reached that stage again.

For the past five years, while the economy has been rising four and one half per cent, the Federal Reserve System has been following an expansionary policy of providing banks with a nine per cent base for loans.

After about three years of expansion it starts getting "foolish."

Now, the Federal Reserve System has decreased this base to about 6 per cent and the economy is tightening itself up.

The reason for Johnson's vetoing the December tightening-up, Knipe said, was that "his professional economic advisers have been telling him that there's no such thing as a business cycle, that the business cycle is a thing of the past."

In the past few months, however, there's been a re-evaluation of that theory, though, said Knipe. Even the advisors "have tempered it a little bit in the past two weeks," he said.

However, because the "brakes" weren't put on in time and with the appropriate finesse, Knipe said, and the economy is beginning to fishtail like a car on ice.

"We're skidding a little bit — not seriously — and the business community sees that," he said. "I think that's the main thing behind the market decline."

Another factor in the current economic picture is the uncertainty of the business community over what we're going to do in Viet Nam, Knipe uaid.

It really doesn't matter, financially, Knipe said, whether we stay in or get out — but it does matter whether businessmen can be sure we'll take one course or the other.

The likelihood of a general recession following the stock market drop is slim, Knipe said, because of "built-in stabilizers" in the nation's economy.

"But we also have a built-in destabilizer, now that's a new and dangerous thing," he said. "That's the $80 billions of consumer debt."

"If you have a recession that amounted to — let's say 15 per cent, which I don't think we'll have, it might set off a lot of consumer debt default."

"So far, it's only a trough in the stock market," said Knipe. "It's not a trough in the business cycle. The market is only saying that there may be one.

"If it comes, I don't think it will be either long or deep."

Mao Returns To Limelight After Hiding

TOKYO (AP) — Radio Peking said today Chinese Communist leader Mao Tse - Tung appeared in public yesterday ending speculation that he was seriously ill. He had not been officially reported at public functions for six months.

Radiophotos from Peking showed Mao smiling with Premier Mehmet Sehru of Albania, who is in the Red Capital on an official visit. The 72-year - old Mao seemed as rotund as ever, with no sign of having lost wiehgt.

There have been reports that Mao suffered from a heart condition. The last official word of his activity was Nov. 26, when Peking reported he met with a Cambodian delegation in Shanghai. Recently, however, a New York report said Mao was at Peking airport Feb. 28 to see off Kwame Nkrumah, who was ousted from the presidency of Ghana while visiting Red China. But Peking never mentioned this appearance.

Peking and New China News Agency broadcasts said Mao was host at a banquet for the Albanians, who are Red China's lone ally in Europe in Peking's feud with Moscow.

Peking made no mention of why Mao had been absent for so long and said nothing about his health. Officials in Peking twice denied recently that he was ill.

Mao frequently has absented himself from Peking for long periods of rest and study in the past 20 years.

The report of his reappearance coincided with the announcement that Red China had detonated its third nuclear bomb Monday. Peking said Shehu hailed the blast as "a very great victory not only for People's china but for the socialist camp and mankind."

The Albanians arrived in Communist China April 28, attended May Day celebrations in Peking and went on a tour of Harbin, Shanghai and Canton. They returned to the Chinese capital May 8.

Peking said Premier Chou En-Lai, defense Minister Marshal Lin Paio and other party leaders were present at the banquet.

Forum Panel Talk Set On Viet Nam

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The Carolina Forum will sponsor a panel discussion on "The Future of U. S. Foreign Policy in Viet Nam" featuring Dr. Henry Kissinger, George Cabot Lodge and Allard K. Lowenstein next Tuesday night at 7:30 in Memorial Hall.

Dr. Kissinger, a consultant for the National Security Council, is considered to be one of the foremost citizen experts on foreign policy in the country. He has written several books on the role of nuclear weapons in foreign policy.

George Cabot Lodge, son of the former Ambassador to Viet Nam Henry Cabot Lodge, is the former Assistant Secretary of Labor for International Affairs and is now Director of the Division of International Studies at Harvard College. He was also a candidate against Edward Kennedy for the U. S. Senate.

Allard K. Lowenstein, who was an advisor to Hubert Humphrey, is now a member of the executive committee of Americans for Reappraisal of Far Eastern Policy. He is a former professor at N. C. State University, former president of the National Student Association and has been a Congressional candidate.

Lowenstein has put much time and effort into the Civil Rights movement and has been extremely active in various leftist causes.

George Nicholson, III, chairman of the Carolina Forum said, "I think it is a real privilege for the Forum to have the opportunity to present such a distinguished panel of experts in the field of foreign policy."

Nicholson said that another member of the Forum panel will be announced in a few days. The faculty moderator for the panel discussion will also be announced soon.

The panel members will begin with a few introductory remarks and then will discuss questions from the floor addressed to the panel or to individual members.

Kissinger and Lodge were secured as members on the Forum panel when Nicholson and several other members of the Forum traveled to Boston to see them in February.

The panel discussion will have delayed transmission coverage by UNC Television.

Larson Criticizes LBJ's Policies

Dr. Arthur Larson, director of the Duke World Rule of Law Center who has been invited to speak on a Carolina Forum panel here Tuesday, charges that President Johnson fails to understand the role of power in international relations.

In a recent address at a Conference on Containment Policy in Asia at the University of Wisconsin the former official in the Eisenhower Administration said that Johnson likes power and relies on power.

This was the first time Larson, an authority on international law, had directed criticism of Johnson since he threw his personal support behind him in the 1964 Presidential election.

Power, Larson asserts, is the ability to produce a desired result. Any statement to the effect that President Johnson understands power, he adds, is an "inaccurate and superficial appraisal."

The former Undersecretary of Labor and director of the U. S. Information Agency under Eisenhower points to the 1961 Bay of Pigs invasion and intervention in the Dominican Republic as examples of resorting to "raw military power." Both are also stark examples of flouting the law, he concludes.

The uprising in the Congo and resotration of order through use of the United Nations is cited by Larson as an example of the procedure of lealing collectively with threats to peace.

But the U. S., because of its activity in Viet Nam, is looked upon by the world as "a confused and unpredictable giant with immense power but no clear sense of restraint or direction," he charges.

"Common sense and experience of the centuries has produced the rule of non-intervention in the internal affairs of other countries.

"When any one country violates that rule, the shock it produces around the world is partly the result of the realization that if rule of law ever disappears, no small country is safe," Larson asserts.

Noon Rally Friday Protests Against Student Deferments

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Students for a Democratic Society will hold a noon rally Friday in Y Court to protest student deferment from the draft.

The rally, an "informal" one according to Student Peace Union member Chuck Schunion, will be highlighted by speeches from Dr. Lewis Lipsitz, SDS member Gary Waller, and Schunior.

A booth will also be set up to distribute flyers titled "Call For An Examination Of Conscience" in which SDS is countering the selective service's recent "Beat-The-Draft" exam with one of their own tests.

Saying their test is not "doctrinaire," Schunior insisted its purpose is to dramatize the unfairness of the draft test. The selective service is offering its test to college students this Saturday, May 21, June 3, and later dates.

The rally will be directed against the draft, and especially against 2-S deferments, Schunior said.

Lipsitz, a political science teacher, attacked our present deferment system last week, and suggested persons be allowed to stay out of a particular war if they did not agree with their country's policies abroad.

He is expected to continue his attack against 2-S deferments Friday. According to Schunior, Waller will deliver a "harangue" against the Viet Nam war in general.

Schunior will probably read the flyer, put out by the national SDS organization, which says of the SDS test:

"Passing our Viet Nam exam won't put you in a jungle fox hole. But maybe thinking through some of our questions will make you a little shakier, a little freer — and a little prouder of your own conscience."

The handout asks: "The government intends to train us to oe killers if we fail its test, why doesn't it ask us instead what we think this war is all about?"

Schunior did not know whether there would be a sound system for the speech-makers at the rally. Copies of the SDS test will be available at the Y Court booth.

Some of the test questions include identifications of statements by "leading figures" in the Viet Nam conflict, questions of military operations in Viet Nam, questions of picking estimates of the number of South Vietnamese deserters, guessing how much money this country spends on the war, and others.

One question states: "In order to be a conscientious objector (C. O.) to military service in the United States, you must: (A) Believe in God; (B) Belong to a recognized church; (C) Be against the use of force in any situation; (D) Serve two years in a civilian hospital; (E) None of the above."

The correct answer is listed on an SDS "Answer Sheet" with reference to a 1964 Supreme Court case, and the reader is then asked to see "The Guide to Conscientious Objection" published by SDS for more information.

Other questions get similar treatment.

Cocktail Party Causes Strike

NEW YORK (AP) — Long Island railroad trainmen struck the nation's busiest commuter line at the rush hour yesterday, staging a whisky rebellion against cocktail - partying executives.

About 20 to 30 per cent of the Lirr's service went out as trainmen quit on four diesel lines that service the north

Shea To Present 'Last Lecture'

Dr. Winslow Shea of the Philsophy Department will be the first speaker in the Morrison sponsored "Last Lecture" series.

For each lecture of the series, a faculty member will be asked to give a lecture under the assumption that it would be the last lecture he could ever give. The professor is asked to choose, after careful consideration, the one subject most meaningful to him after years of teaching and being with students.

Shea will speak tonight; and William Geer, History Department, will give his "Last Lecture" next Wednesday.

Both lectures will begin at 7:30 p.m. and will be in the Morrison social room.

Gleeman Tour

The UNC Gleemen, under the direction of Dr. Joel Carter, completed its annual spring tour of North Carolina and Virginia last weekend.

Before leaving Chapel Hill, the Gleemen sang for the University Methodist Church. Then they travelled to Hollins College in Roanoke, Va., where they sang for the Sunday night Vespers service. After the service the Gleemen entertained with several folk and traditional numbers. Individual members also presented a series of popular folk songs.

The Gleemen returned to North Carolina Monday morning and presented programs of religious and folk numbers at the Roxboro High School and the Oxford Orphanage.

This two-day tour was financed by individual members and money appropriated by Student Legislature.

YDC Hears Creech

William A. Creech, Democratic candidate for the Fourth District Congressional seat, will speak to the UNC-Orange County YDC's at 8 tonight in Howell Hall.

The public is invited to attend the speech and a reception following it in Graham Memorial.

Creech has served as chief counsel to the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights for five years, as a member of the Johnston County Board of Welfare, as Counsel to the Senate Committee on Small Business and as economic assistant to the American Embassy in Baghdad, Iraq.

The 41-year-old Smithfield native graduated from UNC in 1948 and received his law degree from Georgetown University. He also studied at the University of Oslo and City of London Law School.

He opposes Harold Cooley in the May 28 Democratic primary.

SG Interviews

Student Body President Bob Powell has announced that all students interested in serving on a Student Government committee should come to Roland Parker II from 2-5 p.m. any day this week for an interview.

There are vacanies on all committees.

Powell requests what newly appointed committee chairmen assist in the interviews.

Festival Chairmen

Interviews for committee chairmen for the 1967 Fine Arts Festival will continue through Friday. Interested students should sign up for appointments at the Graham Memorial information desk.

Committees are Social Arrangements, Secretariat, Finance and Publicity (Handbook, Displays and News Bureau).

Attend Conference

Three members of the Department of Romance Languages attended the 19th University of Kentucky Foreign Language Conference recently in Lexington.

Language specialists from throughout the United States presented more than a hundred scholarly papers during the three-day conference.

Chairman of the Spanish II and also of the Medieval Studies sections was Prof. John E. Keller, UNC Professor of Spnish. Dr. Joseph R. Jones read a paper in the Medieval Studies section entitled "A Lost Hispano-Arabic Source of Alfonse the Wise's General estoria."

In the Spanish American literature section, Leon F. Lyday spoke on "The Vision of History in El Virrey Solis of Antonio Alvarez Lleras." Lyday is a June candidate for the Ph.D. in Latin American literature in the Romance Language Department, where he is an instructor of Spanish.

Open House

The Consolidated University Student Council is sponsoring an open house for Carolina Gentlemen Saturday on the UNC-G campus.

There is a mixer in Coleman Gym from 4 to 6 p.m.

"The Tams" will be featured in a combo part in the ballroom in Elliott Hall from 8 p.m. to midnight.

Fall Sorority Rush

All women interested in participating in rush next fall (all sophomores, juniors and seniors) should sign up in the Dean of Women's Office, 202 South Building, by May 15. Rush information will be sent to those who sign up during the summer.

German Film Shown

The Department of Germanic Languages and Beta Rho Chapter of Delta Phi Alpha national German honor fraternity will present a film at 7:30 tonight in the Dey Hall faculty lounge.

The public is invited to see the film — "Einen Jux will er sich machen" by Johann Nepomuk Nestroy, the nineteenth century Viennese farical comedy writer. There is no charge.

Recruiters Here

The Flintkote Co. and Fireman's Fund American Insurance Companies will be recruiting on campus today.

Tomorrow, N. C. Department of Conservation and Development — Div. of Community Planning, W. R. Grace and Co., Cryovac Div. and Fidelity Mutual Life Ins. Co. will be here.

Tusculum College will he here Friday and Associate Advertising Agency will be here Saturday.

If you are interested in talking with representatives of these companies, contact the Placement Service in 204 Gardner Hall.

UP Compliments SP

The University Party passed a resolution Monday night complimenting the Student Party for the democratic methods they used in settling their internal arguments.

The resolution was prompted by the SP dispute over whether they could hold party elections at the first or second party meeting after campus elections.

Champ Mitchell was elected to fill the seat on the executive Committee vacated when Phil Kirstein resigned.

Teague Tops Dorm Drive

Teague and Pi Kappa Phi are the early leaders in the dorm and fraternity divisions in the Project Hope fund drive being conducted by Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity.

Project Hope's ship acts as a sort of "floating Peace Corps," bringing medical aid and technology to the ports in which it docks. The Hope had docked in West Africa, Asia, Nicaragua, Ecuador, Peru and South Viet Nam training more than 3,000 people.

Fifteen dorm fund chairmen have been selected. They are Ronnie McMannus, Morrison; Ashley Thrift, Stacy; Gary Norden, Ehringhaus; Chip Seymour, Manly; John McGee, Teague; Birch Davidson, Old West; Dick Rose, Aycock.

Also, Anna Helbig, Spencer; Al Hamrick, Ruffin; Dan Hinnant, Parker; Kathy Harris, Alderman, Charlotte Mason, Nurses Dorm; Ken Barnes, Joyner; Don Cunningham, Craige; and Tommy Phillips, Everett.

Monday can be turned in to the basement of Smith Residence Hall from 7-11 p.m. through Thursday.

Fire Struck Old Building

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The old wooden structure which housed Chez Kemp Ltd. and Court Drug Co. until a fire last Friday night is the only building left of the original town of Chapel Hill.

The building was erected in the late 1880's and has become the last building to survive the endurance of time.

The building is owned by M. A. Abernathy, a former resident of Chapel Hill, who is now a stockbroker on the New York Stock Exchange.

When Abernathy lived in Chapel Hill he used the building to house a bookshop. Kemp was his assistant in the shop and has been managing the building ever since Abernathy left town.

Court Drug Co. rents its part of the building from Kemp. Until this year that part of the building had been an Oriental Art Shop that was also run by Kemp.

The upstairs rooms of the building have had many uses over the years according to Kemp. He often tells the story of when Frank Sinatra lived upstairs over the store for several months many years ago.

Abernathy has not yet said whether or not he will rebuild the structure. The building was condemned several years ago but no action was ever taken to remove the tenants.

Kemp has said that he will return to Franklin Street and Dr. Court has reopened his drug company next to the North Carolina National Bank.

CHAPEL HILL'S OLDEST BUILDING, which was built in the late 1880's, housed Kemp's and Court Drug Co. until heavily damage by fire last Friday night.

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

As You Dislike It

That strange air of quietness that seems to find its way to Chapel Hill every spring just before final examination period has arrived.

Suddenly faced with the challenge either to graduate or to bring the old Q.P. average up to a level that will permit readmission to the University next fall, the student newsmakers are producing less each day. It is at times like this that newspaper editors fall back on space-filling editorial comments about the weather, Mother's Day (ouch!), etc.

But such editorials often fall short of satisfaction.

Too many times readers have no particular interest in a subject on which an editor has commented. Therefore, today The Daily Tar Heel has decided to give you a form editorial and let you fill in the blanks according to your own personal grievance. Here it is:

The action of (Student Legislature, the IFC, the Panhellenic Council, the MRC, the WRC, the Administration, the Athletic Department, Chapel Hill Board of Aldermen, other) last (Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, Friday—nobody works on Saturday) is without a doubt the epitome of (petty partisan politics, "Brooks Brothers Bigotry," silly TCC nonsense, hasty action without careful planning, narrow-mindedness, poor recruiting tactics, disregard for the welfare of UNC students.)

The (TV Bill, closing hours, parking problem, ticket situation, high prices of town merchants) has been our single greatest concern this entire year. We had hoped that a solution would be reached in the (supply proper day) meeting. Now it appears that we are further than ever from an equitable agreement.

To say the (organization being slandered) disappointed us would be putting it mildly. To say they disgusted us would be a euphemism. In fact, no one word could describe their actions. We have found (pick a number from one to ten) adjectives that come very close to conveying our opinion: (choose from these — irresponsible, hilarious, drunken, Puritan, sinful, dangerous, blasphemous, libelous, conceited, selfish, ignorant, communistic, ultra-conservative, sadistic, other).

What do those people think we are here for? Could it be that people in a position of such responsibility do not realize that our first goal while in the University is (the free pursuit of knowledge, to make a 2.0 and stay out of the draft, learning to live with other people, finding a husband, finding a wife, raising hell, impressing everyone with our sharp new cars, seeing a brilliant array of collegiate athletics, self survival)?

It's high time someone took the University reins out of the hands of (second floor GM, Big Court, women, South Building, Woollen Gym, City Hall) and put them where they should be—in (second floor GM, Big Court, the women's hands, South Building, Woollen Gym, City Hall).

Ours is a great University now. It is (respected, loved, criticized, attacked) by people all over the (town, state, nation, world). We certainly (want, cannot allow) this situation to continue. But (how can it, it definitely will) continue if our leaders in the future behave in the fashion they did Saturday (maybe some people do work on Saturdays).

The statement by (Bill Purdy, Lindsey Freeman, Madeline Gray, Lew Brown, Susan Gretz, Chancellor Sitterson, C. P. Erickson, other) — "We felt our action to be the only possible course in light of present circumstances. We hope this set of regulations will in no way jeopardize future privileges of students involved." —was plainly self-contradictory.

How can students ever (get TV sets, bring women into their rooms after midnight, park on Polk Place, get box seats for their families in Kenan Stadium, get ten-minute laundry service) if the precedent is set in the opposite direction and in such strong fashion.

Seldom has The Daily Tar Heel felt so strongly about any issue. The students' welfare is being overlooked for the sake of (politics, Greek pride, a decent reputation, money, grass, God, country, Mother, apple pie).

We hope something will be done about this — and soon.

Virtues Of DTH Praised, Panned By Seely, Lipsitz

Seely's Congratulations

Editor, The Tar Heel

About a year ago Ernie McCrary, Pat Stith, Ed Freakly, John Greenbacker and the rest of the Daily Tar Heel crew informed me that not only would they put out a better newspaper than Hugh and I, they would prove it by winning more awards.

Today I watched them win, and win, and win, and the coffers of the Charlotte Observer - Charlotte News Collegiate Press Awards apparently have flown to Chapel Hill.

The awards the DTH won today were not only a credit to the men who received them, they reflect credit upon the newspaper, the student body and, most of all, the University.

Of course, my congratulations to everyone who had a part in wnning the awards, and also a warning to the present regime: You've got a hard act to follow.

Northern Women Again

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

"Loud Yankee Broads" seem to be Steven Kropelnicki's speciality as is evident in last Thursday's Daily Tar Heel. He takes the opportunity of expounding upon Northern women and of course he is in the position to judge being a Southerner, for he has been North. The image of the Northern woman according to Kropelnicki is a woman in curlers with deplorable speech, an obnoxiously loud voice, and oh yes, let's not forget clothes as no "Southern Gentleman" does. They were in "absolute conformity to the latest styles."

It is painfully obvious that Kropelnicki's judgment falls short in his mass generalization of women of the North. Also obvious is that his acquaintances from the North constitute members of a lower-middle class. If you are looking for refinement, breeding, and background, break your social barrier, Kropelnicki, come up, come up, come all the way up . . .

Lipsitz Was Misquoted

In a terribly broken up and incoherent article reporting my talk to a SPU-sponsored seminar, I am quoted as saying Viet Cong have killed 60,000 civilians and that the U. S. is killing 10,000 civilians a month. Where the reporter got such fantastic figures is anybody's guess, but he certainly did't get them from listening to me.

No one has accurate figures on these matters, and so there is great need to be causious in discussing the organized murder that is taking place. What I said at the seminar was the The New York Times had reported 4,000 village leaders and something on the order of 10,000 - 11,000 other civilians killed by the VC since 1964. As for civilians killed by the American and South Vietnamese government forces, there are only the estimates of people like Vietnamese government forces, there are only the estimates of people like Jean Lacouture and Bernard Fall that between two and six civilians are killed for every VC. Given 1,000 VC killed per month, this would mean a minimum of 2,000 dead civilians, assuming the two to six ratio is somewhat accurate. My point was a very old one, repeated by almost everyone who has been a critic of the war: it is strange to save a country by massive slaughter of civilians. If the only way to defeat the VC is through such massive killing, is that worth the cost? It seems to me that this is one of the questions raised by the recent Buddhist demonstrations in South Vietnam. How extensive the killing of civilians actually is, however, no one can say for sure.

There has already been so much misinformation and myth - making concerning the Vietnam war, that we should be very careful not to add further confusion. There are very real moral issues raised by American actions in this war, and it is time Americans looked at these issues squarely. It is no help when the free press quotes a bit too freely.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Lynd Sees Capitalism As Unstable; Love Is Needed

(Editor's note — The following are excerpts from a speech made last March in Chicago by Dr. Saughton Lynd of Yale University. Originally published by the Minnesota Daily, they give some indication of the view of American capitalism held by the professor who defied the State Department go to North Viet Nam.)

American capitalism is not a permanent or stable system. It cannot provide constructive and remunerative work for all its citizens. It refuses to support those without work at a level of life consistent with human dignity. The technological progress to which it is driven by corporate competition for profits puts more men out of work by automation. The only public works it is willing to undertake which alleviate unemployment significantly are war and the preparation for war. But automation of these activities decreases the effect of such spending in increasing jobs and income; further, possession of nuclear weapons by both sides sets absolute limits on the degree of escalation available to the permanent war economy. Therefore, the permanent war economy is not permanent. It will either be transformed into its opposite, socialism, or commit suicide.

A second source of contradictions is the spread of socialism throughout the underdeveloped world. The option of alleviating internal economic problems through overseas investment is increasingly foreclosed. The spread of socialist economic planning in the underdeveloped world is the fundamental fact of our century and must be taken as a given. It is not a paper tiger, as was the apprehension in the 1950s that the Soviet Red Army would march to the English Channel, but a real and increasing threat to American capitalism.

(Both) the intellectual and the poor person in Mississippi or Newark act personally. They are concerned with ends, not like the politician with means (otherwise known as votes). Both have in view — and I think anyone who worked in the South will bear me out on this — both the Negro Baptist field hand in Mississippi and the intellectutal activist have in view an ideal community, something like a family but bigger, something like a seminar except that people act as well as talk, something like a congregatin except that people work together as well as pray togther.

I don't think you can build a movement on hate. In my experience, the most militant people have also been the quiest. In my experience he who thinks the policeman can become a brother is less likely to get hit on the head. The toughest nuts among us, I have noticed, will shyly confess in an odd moment that what really keeps them going is the vision of a band of brothers standing in a circle of love.

This vision . . . simplifies many knotty strategic problems. It makes the fundamental assumption that if enough people want such a society they will sooner or later find a way to achieve it. The really important thing is that in the meantime we not lose hope, that we stay together, that we deal with each other in an honest and kindly manner, that we share our resources — socialism is a very natural idea for poor students, as it is for poor people of any kind — in faith, or to use a new expression, that we keep our eyes on the prize and hold on.

It's not a new vision. It is a very old idea that God gave the good things of this world to his children to share as in one family; that the idea of someone owning a field, or owning a portion of downtown Chicago, that the idea of private property is blasphemy. It is a very old idea that society should be made new on the model of the family, so that we would bear each other's burdens as brothers and sisters and like the early Christians, hold all things in common.

But it's Utopian, I hear someone cry! Even if people can live that way in little groups they cannot change the structure, cannot solve the problem of power!

The vision of community . . . is not utopian because it is not pie in the sky. It doesn't put off action until tomorrow. Its creed it: If not now, when? If not you? who? It is the faith that says each of us most act as best we can in response to each day's moral outrage, not waiting till the party decides its perspective for the coming period.

Kennan On Viet Nam Involvement

The subject on which I am invited to give my views this morning is, as I understand it, the complex of problems connected with our prsent involvement in Viet Nam. I would like to explain in undertaking to speak to this subject, that Southeast Asia is a part of the world for which I can claim no specialized knowledge. I am not familiar with the official rationale of our policy there except as it has been revealed in the press. I cannot recall that I have ever during my official service in government or subsequently, been drawn by the executive branch of our government into consultation on the problem of our policy in Southeast Asia, or even been made privy to the official discussions by which that policy was decided.

I am sure that there are many data that are relevant to any thoroughly founded judgment on these matters which are not available to me, and this being the case, I have tried in recent weeks and months not to jump to final conclusions even in my own thoughts, to remain sympathetically receptive, both to our government's explanations of the very real difficulties it has faced and to the doubts and questions of its serious critics.

I have not been anxious to press my views on the public but I gladly give them to you for whatever they are worth, claiming no particular merit for them except perhaps that they flow from experience with communist affairs that runs back for some 38 years, and also from the deepest and most troubled sort of concern that we should find the proper course, the right course, at this truly crucial moment.

The first point I would like to make is that if we were not already involved as we are today in Viet Nam, I would know of no reason why we should wish to become so involved, and I could think of several reasons why we should wish not to.

Viet Nam is not a region of major military, industrial importance. It is difficult to believe that any decisive developments of the world situation would be determined in normal circumstances by what happens on that territory. If it were not for the considerations of prestige that arise precisely out of our present involvement, even a situation in which South Viet Nam was controlled exclusively by the Viet Cong while regrettable, and no doubt morally unwarranted, would not, in my opinion, present dangers great enough to justify our direct military intervention.

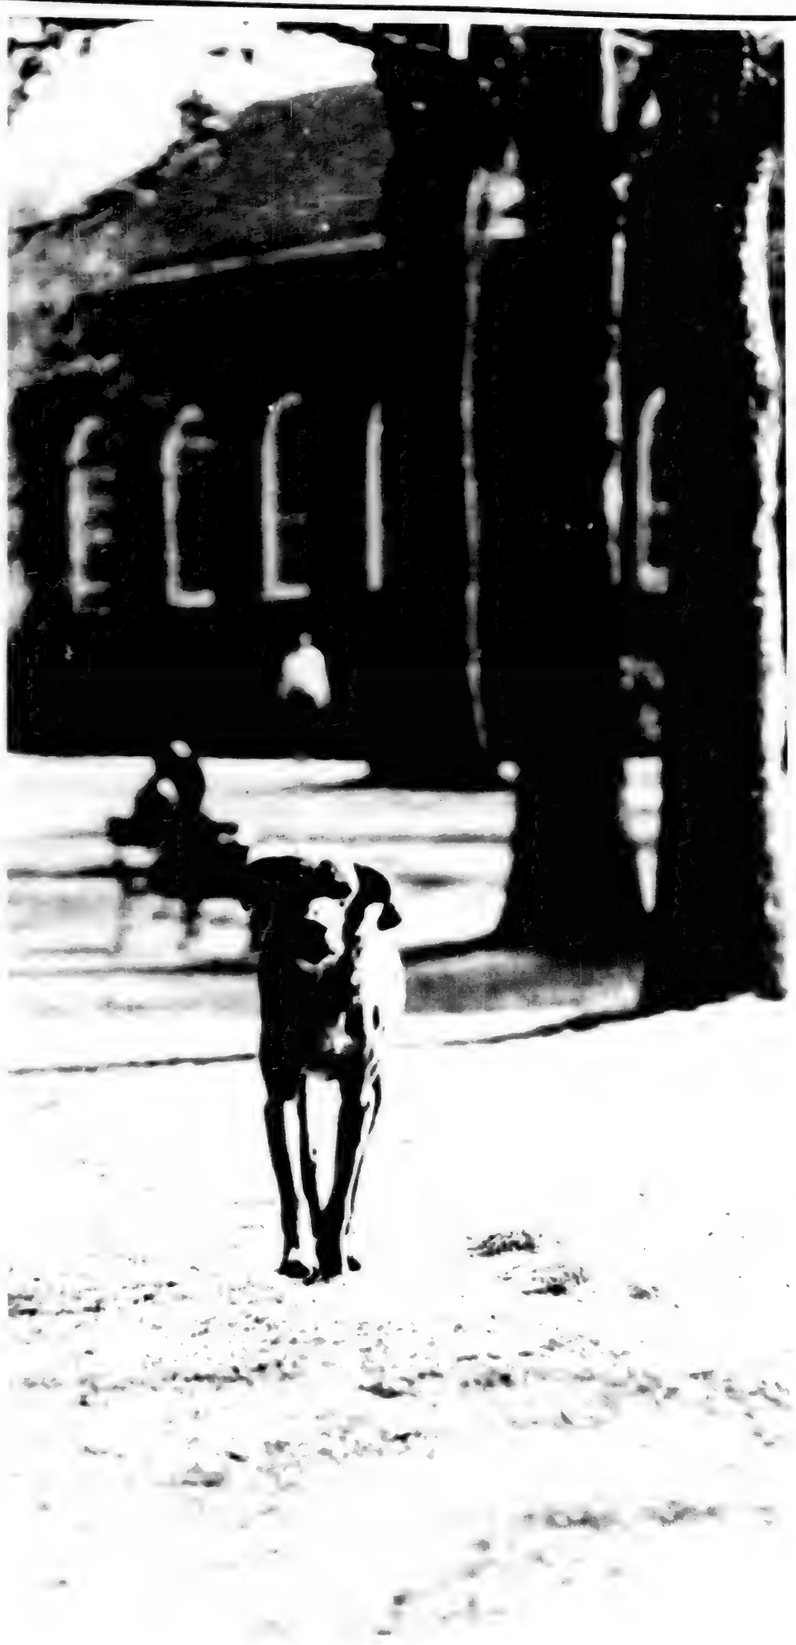
Given the situation that exists today in the relations among the leading Communist powers, and by that I have, of course in mind primarily the Soviet -Chinese conflict, there is ever likelihood that communist regime in South Viet Nam would follow a fairly independent course.

There is no reason to suspect that such a regime would find it either necessary or desirable in present circumstances to function simply as a passive puppet and instrument of Chinese power. And as for the danger that its establishment there would unleash similar tendencies in neighboring countries, this, I think, would depend largely on the manner in which it came into power.

In the light of what has recently happened in Indonesia, and on the Indian subcontinent, the danger of the so - called domino effect that would be produced by a limited communist success in South Viet Nam, seems to me to be considerably less than it was when the main decisions were taken that have led to our present involvement.

Let me stress, I do not say that that danger does not exist, I say that it is less than it was a year or two ago when we got into this involvement.

Count Leapanrun



Here comes Count! Hide that food!

King Of The Campus Canines

Any dog with a name like Count Leapanrun has got to be a winner.

And so it is. Meet Count, big shot among the campus dogs. How do you meet this dog? Brother, just listen, you'll hear him.

You see, this dog is the Cassius Clay of Dogdom. He shoots his mouth given the slightest provocation. He'll be lying on the grass, a limb plops down closeby. Count raises his head and cuts loose with that coyote-wolf howl that will startle you with its power.

One of the most charming things about Chapel Hill is its abundance of dogs, if you like dogs. Count has a way of showing up on the fifty yard line at football games only to be chased unceremoniously off the field.

The officials would leave him alone if they knew who he was. Last year, the trade magazine of Chevrolet produced an article about Count and his former owner, Susie Sterling.

Fortunately, the fame has not gone to Count's head. He's still just as verbose as a country preacher.

Count takes it easy with his subjects

Count has the technique of begging perfected into an art

Mao's Reappearance Fails To Alter Bad Health View

WASHINGTON (AP) — The reappearance of Chinese Communist boss Mao Tse-Tung in Peking news reports yesterday failed to shake the belief of U. S. officials that his health is bad and power is slipping, perhaps gradually, from his grasp.

This view of Mao's condition is interpreted here to explain some known political developments inside China, including an apparent purge of scholars and intellectual leaders. The ruling group is believed to be trying to assure the survival of Mao-ism after Mao himself passes from the scene.

Some U. S. authorities believe that the men around Mao are concerned also about their own security and power positions in the future. There is no evidence so far of an actual power struggle but officials familiar with the history of political changes in the Soviet Union say that at some stage of China's development it seems inevitable.

Whether there was any connection in timing between Mao's return to the headlines and yesterday's explosion of Red China's third atomic test, no one here could say.

But authorities did note that the atomic explosion stands as an achievement for the Chinese leadership, and that the timing might have some significance. For the past year or more Red China has suffered a variety of setbacks in its campaign for world leadership in the Communist movement and offsetting success presumably is welcome in Peking.

Mystery had built up around the fate of Mao Tse - Tung when he failed to show up at diplomatic receptions or on other special occasions such as the celebrations in Peking on May Day, ten days ago.

U. S. officials recorded his last public appearance as having occured Nov. 27 at a Cambodian reception in Peking. A report that he had been seen in Peking in February at the time of a visit there by Kwame Nkrumah, ousted president of Ghana, was regarded as unlikely by officials here.

Red Chinese authorities insisted, most recently about ten days ago, that Mao was not ill. Today the New China News Agency reported that he had met a visiting delegation from Communist Albania. U.S. officials said while they are skeptical of its significance they have no reason to think it is literally untrue.

Skepticism arose from questions which the brief account distributed by the New China News Agency did not answer: where has Mao been since Nov. 27? What do his doctors think on the state of his health? What are his future health prospects?

There had been some speculations in western Europe that Mao was dead. U. S. State Department experts generally reject that idea but are convinced that Mao is in failing health, with either a major operation or a serious illness.

A news dispatch from Tokyo, however, said photos radioed from Peking gave no sign that he has lost weight.

In view of the power Mao has exercised either an operation or illness would be an event of international importance and even greater political significance inside China.

Apart from Mao's age, 72, and that he somtimes had to be helped to negotiate steps in public, authorities here found supporting evidence of their "declining power" theory in efforts under way for months in China to reinforce "Mao - ism" with a kind of religious faith and fervor.

Mao's teachings about war, revolution, economic theory, political organization and science, now including the latest atomic explosion, are advertised as containing all fundamental truth on those subjects and others.

This effort to deify Mao and give his works the force of divine revelation have been regarded in Washington and other western capitals as public preparation by Mao's associates for his death.

It comes down to an argument that nothing fundamental would change with Mao's passing. Experts on Communist political strife say that the men around Mao can make practical use of this argument to try to secure their own positions by identifying themselves with Mao's teachings.

CHOLESTEROL

Populations with a low concentration of cholesterol and other fats in their blood have a lower heart disease rate than populations with higher concentrations, the North Carolina Heart Association says. Reduce your risk of heart attack by eating less animal fat and less food high in cholesterol.

Weather Man Predicts Frost

Forecasters warned of a freeze in the mountains and frost in other inland sections of North Carolina early Wednesday.

These warnings followed one of the chilliest May 10ths in the state's history.

Pre - dawn temperatures Tuesday included 23 degrees at Blowing Rock and Mt. Mitchell. Other lows included 26 at Laurel Springs, 32 at Asheville, 36 at Hickory, 36 $ at Greensboro, 39 at Raleigh and Durham, 40 at Rocky Mount, 44 at New Bern and 49 at Wilmington. Rim ice formed on trees along the Blue Ridge Parkway.

The Weather Bureau said record low for May is 11 degrees, registered on Mt. Mitchell on May 19, 1956.

The forecast for Tuesday night and early Wednesday was for lows of 25 to 32 degrees in the mountains, mostly in the 30s in the Piedmont and near 40 in the Coastal Plain.

Specialists at North Carolina State University said frost and freezing temperatures posed a threat to field crops, garden plants and orchards.

US Expresses Sympathy For Vietnamese Victims

SAIGON (AP) — The U. S. Emabssy expressed deep sympathy Tuesday for Vietnamese victims of American gunfire that raked a Saigon street in hair - trigger reaction to the explosion of a Viet Cong mine. Compensation was pledged to stricken families.

The bizarre action which led to the death of five Vietnamese civilians came during a lull in the war. Monsoon rains slowed fighting on the ground and in the air. A. U.S. spokesman announced the Communists sent up neither MIGs nor missiles against planes raiding North Viet Nam.

A Vietnames policeman, three women and a child were killed and 29 persons, including eight Americans, were wounded in the incident that bloodied pavement and scarred buildings of Hai Ba Trung street, near the capital's old opera square.

Most were hit in a half hour of shooting after the mine blast by U. S. sentries and machine gunners who believed — erroneously a U. S. Army spokesman said later — that they were under fire from Viet Cong terrorists. The spokesman said shots loosed by an American military policeman touched off the fusillade.

Seven Vietnamese were arrested on suspicion of planting the mine, a pellet - scattering Claymore detonated in a morning rain at a military bus stop outside the Suzi Wong Tailor Shop, which caters to American servicemen from three nearby billets. But all were cleared and freed after questioning.

Several Vietnamese were repolted knocked from their bicycles and apparently injured by the blast, shilar to one which killed 10 persons at a pickup point for Korean consturction workers April 27. But the rest of the casualties came from the shooting.

One of the targets was a truck which proved later to be laden with Vietnamtse workers — men and women. Pedestrians scurred for cover.

"Our hearts go out to the innocent victims of this affair," the U. S. Embassy said in a astatement. "The root cause of it is, of course, the Viet Cong. The mission is deeply sympathetic to the innocent victims of this event and is prepared to help in every way we can those who found themselves in the way of the fire this morning."

The families of the victims will be paid compensation in accordance with normal procedure in such cases, a spokesman said.

Rep. John E. Moss, D-Calif., head of a House subcommittee studying U. S. aid to Viet Nam, said the shooting "was a regrettable misjudgment that could happen anywhere, anytime, under similar circumstances."

"Incidents such as this come about from having terrorism right in the city," Moss told a reporter. "It's a war without fronts. I don't know a civilized man who wouldn't regret it and try to avoid it happening again. Our people are trying to avoid it."

Rep. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., a member of the subcommittee, said it is a tragic situation.

The U. S. Army spokesman said it had not been determined how many of the casualties resulted from the mine blast and how many from the American fire. As he explained it at a news conference:

The firing was started by an American MP on duty who saw "a taxi drive up, make a u-turn, pick up a Vietnamese national and speed away" after the explosion.

Another MP, on duty a block away, heard the blast and the shooting and opened fire along the rain - dampened street, which was crowded with Vietnamese heading for work.

Tracer bullets led other military police deployed in the area to believe the Viet Cong had opened up on them. They started shooting, opening up first on the truck.

The spokesman's announcement that there was no evidence of Viet Cong fire came some time after the shooting ended.

Pfc. George Hornfeck of Weehawken, N. J., was one of the Americans who had believed themselves to be under enemy attack. A. U. S. Army guard on duty near the bus stop, he told reporters while ambulance sirens were still screaming:

"There was an explosion down there and then I turned the other way and asaw a truck coming. I opened fire. Then fire came from there."

Hornfeck pointed to the bullet - riddled truck, in which several persons were killed or wounded.

U. S. squadrons pressed attacks on North Viet Nam despite the adverse weather. There was no immediate announcement of targets of the day. Radio Peking broadcast a Hanoi declaration that four planes were shot down. The Communists also claimed antiaircraft gunners felled a pilotless U. S. reconnaissance craft near Hanoi. Confirmation was lacking Saigon.

B52 bombers, which can fly at cloud - topping altitudes of more than 60,000 feet, returned for the 10th straight day from their Guam bases to continue saturation attacks on a major Viet Cong stronghold in South Viet Nam near the Cambodian border.

The eight - engine giants, each carrying up to 30 tons of explosives, hit a suspected troop concentration area 70 miles northwest of Saigon.

A U. S. military spokesman gave no assessment of the reported bombings by from three to 10 B 52s per day. It is along this Cambodian sector that the Viet Cong are expected to launch their monsoon drives against American outposts.

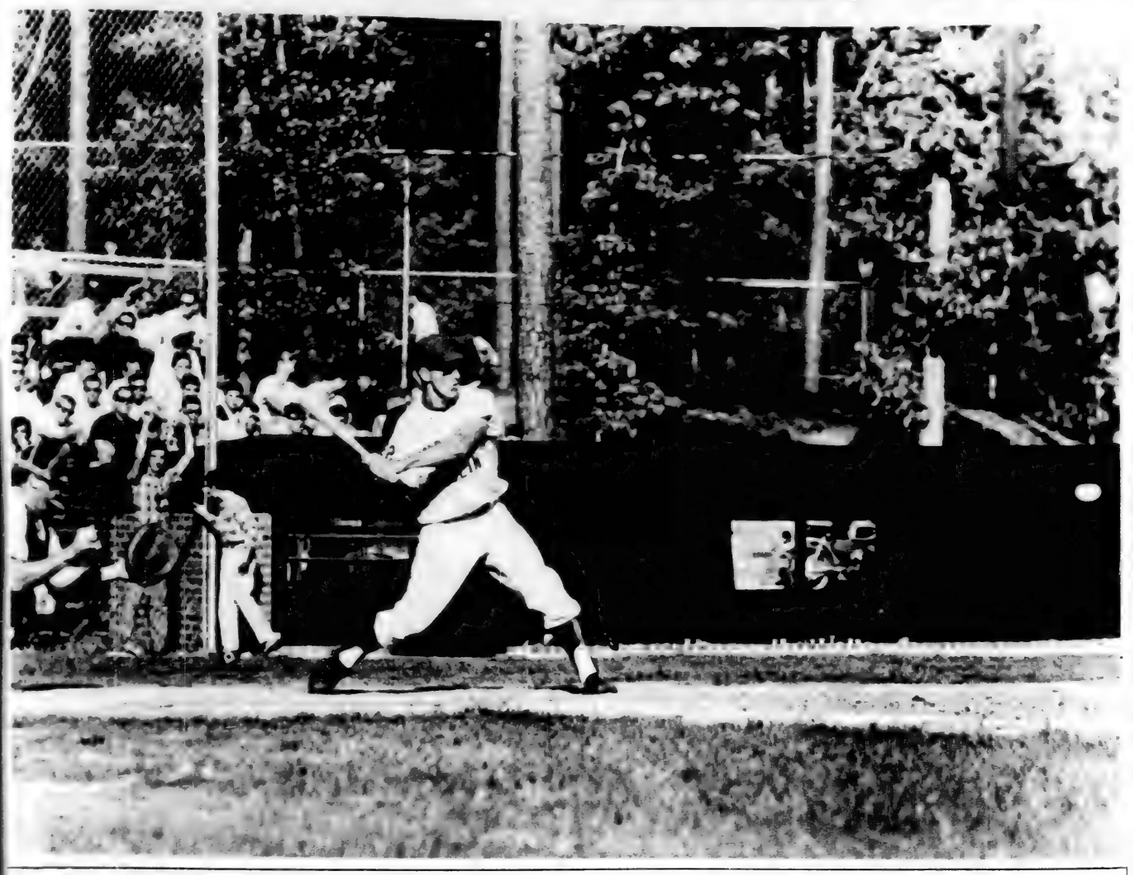
Heels End Home Season By Clubbing Duke



Mike Flanagan Gets Win, Home Run; Bonczek, Talbott Also Smash Homers

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

North Carolina's Atlantic Coast Conference champions shell - shocked Duke with a three-home run bombardment yesterday to smash the Blue Devils 10-4 for their tenth straight win.

It was the final home game of the season for the Tar Heels, who wrapped up the ACC title last Saturday at Maryland. The Duke win pushes UNC's league record to 12-1, and makes the season's mark 18-8. Duke is now 4-9 and 8-16.

Coach Walt Rabb started sophomore righthander Mike Flanagan, who worked the first five innings with no threats being mounted by Duke. The Devils got to Flanagan for four in the sixth, but not until after those hungry Heels had amassed an insurmountable 9-0 lead.

Homer Brigade

Bob Bonczek started the home run assault in the third inning with a two-run belt over the 362-foot sign in left-center. It was Bonczek's third of the year, and Danny Talbott tied that output with a long sock deep behind the left field screen with a man on the next preceded Talbott's in the fourth, and the inning's output left UNC with a fat 8-0 spread.

Carr Still Hot

Charlie Carr, who has rushed up immediately behind Talbott in hitting, raised his mark to .371 with three singles in four trips. Talbott has dropped to .374, but yesterday knocked in three runs to mount his total to 21. Clemson's Tommy Pack leads the ACC with a .384 average.

Charlie Thomas, also very hot with the stick in the pennant drive, smacked a pair of singles to move up to .328. Bonczek is at .322, and Bob Hume is at an even .300.

Thompson's Perfect Day

Rodney Thompson checked in with a "perfect" day at the plate, slapping a double and single, wacking, and reaching base on an error. He also scored twice.

The Heels picked up their ninth run in the fifth. Carr singled, Thompson reached on an error and Thomas singled to load the bases. Flanagan was then thmped on the upper left arm by a Jim Liccardo pitch to force Carr across for a 9-zip lead.

Devils Raise . . .

Flanagan had given just two hits and fanned seven when Duke rallied for four in the sixth. Two singles and an error got the first one in, and then shortstop Stan Coble rapped a three-run homer to left.

UNC got the run back in the seventh on Thompson's double, Thomas' single and Hume's infield out.

George McRae pitched the last three innings for the Heels and didn't allow a run in lowering his earned run average below 1.00. George fanned the side in the ninth.

The Tar Heels finish the ACC schedule against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem Saturday night (8:00). They play Wake again in the Shrine Benefit Game in Asheboro Monday night, and close out the regular season against Virginia Tech in Blacksburg a week from today.

Ford Tests Disputed Engine Today

CHARLOTTE (AP) — A Ford race car equipped with the company's controversial single overhead cam engine will be put through its paces at Charlotte today.

But the test, or "exercise" as the company calls it, will have little bearing on Ford's current boycott of stock car racing resulting from a dispute over the engine with sanctioning bodies.

Ford withdrew from stock car racing last month after the Automobile Competition Committee of the U. S. (ACCUS) approved use of the engine, but added a weight handicap of 427 pounds. Track attendance has sagged badly since the boycott became effective.

LORENZEN DRIVING

Fred Lorenzen, ace Ford factory driver, will run the speed tests over the 1 1-2 mile Charlotte Motor Speedway, scene of the sport's longest race, the May 22 World 600.

Lorenzen will test a standard Galaxie model with the new engine under two formulas, at the old 9.36 pounds per cubic inch of engine displacement, and at the new 10.36 pounds per cubic inch decreed by sanctioning bodies.

The car will weigh 3,997 pounds under the old formula, for use with Ford's wedge type engine, and 4,424 pounds under the new formula, approved by ACCUS, NASCAR and USAC if the company wishes to return to stock car racing.

PRIVATE TEST

A Ford spokesman said the test is a "private demonstration" or "exercise" of the new un-raced engine.

"The idea of running this car is our own, taken on our own initiative to develop machinery. This is a very normal thing for us. We do it all the time," said Leo C. Beebe, public relations and promotions manager for Ford.

"We're not going into the exercise with the idea of proving anything except our machinery for our internal reasons. I do not relate this exercise to Ford returning to stock car racing this year."

Bill France Sr., president of NASCAR, said he would attend the "exercise" but only at the invitation of Richard Howard, general manager of the Charlotte Speedway.

France also said he would "be happy to serve as supervisor of a test" of the engine if Ford would turn the engine and car over to the ACCUS committee "to conduct such a test under the conditions and ground rules set by the ACCUS."

NEED FREE HAND

But he said ACCUS would have to have a completely free hand to conduct an unbiased test of the engine.

Earlier France had said if Ford had any desire to have ACCUS officials attend the test runs, Ford could "make it official by extending its own invitation to Mr. Bindford (Tom Binford, president of ACCUS.)"

Binford, in Indianapolis, said he would not attend. He added, however, "I seriously question the advisability of such a private demonstration. If Ford decides it wishes to reenter stock car racing and make the single overhead cam engine available through normal channels, ACCUS would be interested in conducting an impartial evaluation of the engine and its rules.

"Until such time, however, it seems to me that a private run conducted as a test can only cause misunderstanding."

At the time Ford withdrew from racing the company refused to conduct a test for the sanctioning bodies. The company held that the additional 427 pounds eight penalty would make its race cars noncompetitive and even unsafe for track use.

Jeff Mullins Considers Quitting Pro Basketball

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Jeff Mullins, picked as a member of Chicago's new professional basketball team, said yesterday he is considering retiring from the game.

"It has nothing to do with my changing from St. Louis to Chicago," the former Duke University star said. "I just thought I might look around to see if I could find some opportunity in the business world."

Mullins, 24, has played for St. Louis two years, but was out of action in both seasons with injuries. It was just after an ankle injury last season, he said, that he began to consider retirement.

"I started wondering if I might be injury prone," Mullins said.

Speaking from his Lexington home, Mullins said he is considering entering business either here "or in North Carolina, where I went to school."

If he doesn't find what he considers the right job, he added, he will continue to play for Chicago's National Basketball Association team, a position he called a definite opportunity.

Mullins was picked by Chicago, which was given a choice of two players from each existing NBA team to form the nucleus of its new squad.

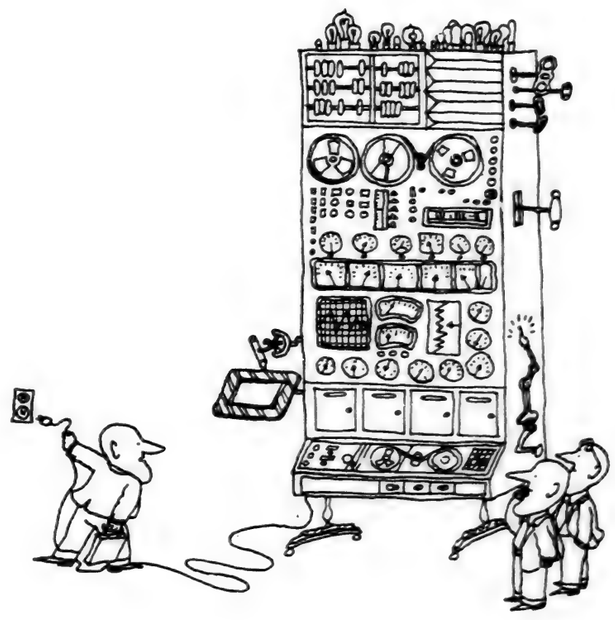
"Let's unplug the computer, boys! Start thinking!"



A lot of people believe that someday computers will do all their thinking for them.

Well, a funny thing is going to happen on the way to the future:

You're going to have to think harder and longer than ever.

Computers can't dream up things like Picturephone service, Telstar® satellite, and some of the other advances in communications we have made. Of course, we depended on computers to solve some of the problems connected with their development. But computers need absolutely clear and thorough instructions, which means a new and tougher discipline on the human intelligence.

And it will take more than a computer to create a pocket phone the size of a matchbook, let's say... or find a practical way to lock a door or turn off an oven by remote telephone control, or to make possible some of the other things we'll have someday.

It takes individuals... perhaps you could be one... launching new ideas, proposing innovations and dreaming dreams.

And someday, we're going to have to find a way to dial locations in space.

Makes you think.

You Want A Cave? Try Housing Office

By STEVE MADDOX
Special to the DTH

One student wants a place "within walking, not hiking" distance of the campus.

Another wants just "peace, quiet and ice." Another "hermit-type" wants to live in a "cave."

Not everyone wants "specials." Many are content just to live in a dormitory. This summer 14 dormitories will be open to single and married students.

Will there be enough dormitory space for all who want it? "Summer's no problem," Wadsworth said. "Whatever we'll need, we'll open."

He has "houses, apartments, trailers and tents" for the others. "We had a cave listed one year" by a man in Durham.

"The range is greatly extended if you have an automobile, bicycle or horse," he quipped. This leaves open "lots of possibilities" for housing. No transportation "narrows it down quite a bit" unless you are "a cross-country runner or a golfer."

If you have a car, "the problem is where to park. Summer is at least as bad or worse than fall."

On-campus housing has its advantages economically. A dormitory room costs $33.50 per session for doubles and $43.50 for a single room. Off-campus housing will cost "a little more than ten dollars a week for a single room," Wadsworth said.

An additional on-campus advantage is the fact that there are almost always more women than men at summer school. This year Ruffin and Joyner men's dormitories will be used for women, but only "during summer school."

Wadsworth has several card files of available housing open to students in his office in the basement of Bynum Hall. There are separate files for summer rental and regular session rentals. Each file card gives specifics of the particular housing unit, its rent and the name and address of the landlord.

But even Wadswprth and all his files can't solve everyone's problems. He's still trying to help one frsutrated student find an apartment "excluding busybodies, gossips, rats, alcoholics and folksingers."

Hassan's View Of The World: 'God Loves Soccer, Everybody'

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

"Football is very beautiful but soccer the greatest! God. He love soccer!"

Hassan Hasan El-Yacoubi loves soccer. Hassan Hasan loves life and people and Chapel Hill and hitchhiking and traveling and Morroco and just about anything you can name.

Hassan arrived in Chapel Hill in September of this year to work on his PhD. in international relations. He studied in Alelandin, Egypt and at the University of Morroco.

If you meet him you'll remember it. You'll be hailed from across campus by a resounding, rather extended "Hello . . o.!" If he doesn't know you he may come up and introduce himself especially if you are a girl. Hassan "loves the pretty American girls."

There is a story behind how Hassan ended up at Chapel Hill. In fact, Hassan is a story in himself.

Trying to piece it together isn't easy. His conversation switches from Nice to Madrid in a matter of moments, and is frequently interrupted by greetings to passing friends ("Howdy do!. . . Hello Amigo").

Hassan is originally from Jordan, but for many years he has been traveling by hitchhiking. Last summer it was Spain, France, and England. The summer before that it was Spain, Italy, France, Greece.

"Money to travel on? I have no money. All my life I hitchhike. Sometimes I work to make a little money. The summer of '64 I travel, with only $45." When I arrived in Chapel Hill I did some construction work to get money."

"I stay in the youth hostels with friends, but one time in Nice I have no money to live on. I have guitar. I don't play guitar but I got guitar. On the beach are two Swedish girls, and an American boy with what you call harmonica and we begin, "Let's Twist Again Like We did Last Summer." There are many people on the beach and we got much money!"

Hasan Hassan El-Yacoubi

Hitchhiking is the best thing in the world. . . I meet many more beautiful people than I would at home. People nice to you all over the world."

In 21 years Hassan has seen a sizeable chunk of the world, but last spring, two months before graduation from the Morrocan University, he said to himself, "Let us see the United States."

Simple enough, for Hassan. He had met an American student from California while hitchhiking in France in 1964. The freidnshp continued thro The friendship continued through correspondence after they went their separate ways, and it was Hassan who gave the American money and a place to stay in Morroco when he lost everything.

Last spring the two met in Spain on vacation, and Hassan became the proud possessor of a free ticket to the U.S.

Did he know anyone here? Of course not, but "it make no difference. All my life I been traveling In the U. S. it was a different feeling, but it was still much the same."

Hassan did decide to travel by bus rather than thumb from N. Y. and when he arrived in Chapel Hill . . . Chapel Hill? "Hassan, what made you decide to come to Chapel Hill?"

Once again the broad grin, along with the broad gesturing of the hands. "It is very simple. At the University in Morroco, one of my professors was from Duke. He recommended UNC to me. Funny, huh? I wrote. They said come, and I come!"

Hassan finds Chapel Hill "very, very, beautiful! The students are very, very beautiful! When I pray, I say 'Let all the wonderful students pass!"

There has been one major problem — trying to find a sheep head for the celebration of the Arab and Muslim New Year. "We look everywhere, but no where is there a sheep's head!" Hassan is enterprising, so he simply got a substitute. He's not sure what it it was, but it was something like a cow.

You may have been invited to the Arab New Year's Party. Hassan says he invited everyone and "much, much people come. We had professors, American and foreign students. There was Arab dancing and music. It was great!"

"Oh, but in Morroco there were the parties, from 10 a.m. to 3 a.m. we party, Everyone come!" Hassan's philosophy is "Time of fun, fun hard. Time of study, study hard.

Summer and vacations are the time to "fun hard." Christmas vacation Hassan went to Huntington, "near Ohio and Kentucky." Thanksgiving he visited Winston - Salem for a conference sponsored by the Baptist Church. "There were many discussions of peace, and I was ping - pong champion."

After being in many of the major capitals of the world, there is still one place Hassan longs to see again — North Wilksboro, N. C. He was there 8 p.m. one night on the way back from skiing at Boone "I ski too, yes.") and had no place to stay but the taxi station. "It was so cold, but the people were so nice. Very beautiful! I only had $.35 but I got room and food."

This summer Hassan returns to Europe. He will attend annual conference of alumni at Morroco to speak ("All the University know me and now they miss me.")

Computers May Replace Maids In Housekeeping In The Future

NEW YORK (UPI) — Household help — the cheerful, reliable "member of the family" type help — is a thing of the past, as any homemaker will tell you.

The woman who would help out with the cleaning, or cooking, or washing, or with the kids, depending upon the need of the moment has gone along with the old-time handyman.

BUT . . . there's a replacement coming if you can hang on another couple of decades.

It will come in the form of a small, table-top computer that will be instructed (programmed) to help with the shopping, cooking, cleaning and other household chores — and to do it on voice command; no complicated computer school for the lady of the house.

Just what could this electronic helper do around the house? Turn on the lights when it gets dark, close the windows when it rains, sound a burglar alarm if anyone tries to break in, control atmospheric conditions for the optimum in health and comfort.

Bridge Game Help

If the bridge game were running longer than expected you could telephone the computer and give it new instructions. It could turn on the oven to start the meat and the stove-top burners to cook the vegetables, timing it so that the food would be done to a turn and piping hot when you sat down.

Or, should you decide to dine out at the last moment, you could call your electronic chef and tell it it had the night off.

Sound far - fetched? Well, electronics engineers are confident this development is not only probable, but possible within the next couple of decades. They cite the rapid scientific strides of the past two decades and predict even greater changes in the years ahead.

General David Sarnoff, Chairman of Radio Corporation of America, evtn foresees the day when computers will team up with the family television set to help with the shopping.

"By pressing a button," he said recently, "a housewife will be able to look at the merchandise in department stores or other local shops and make her selections. She will push another button and the computer will place the order and make the necessary deduction from her bank account. Not even a check to write!

Gradual Change

While all these changes will be revolutionary in scope, the electronics experts stress they will come about in an evolutionary process. Most of the instruments of this revolution are at hand, and some already are in use.

It's a matter of time, but the day is coming when the family computer will act as a central control for all the electrically-run appliances and utilities in the home. Tiny electronic sensing devices located throughout the home will feed all necessary information to the computer.

For example, one sensing device will tell it when clothes in the dryer are free of moisture, and the computer will shut off the dryer. Another will tell the computer the water in the pot is boiling, and it will turn down the burner. Other sensing devices will keep track of such things as temperature, humidity and dust, cueing the computer to take action to counteract changes.

Gag Law Money Raised By AAUP

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

The American Association of University Professors here has reached its goal of $1,500 for the speaker ban court case.

Dr. Joseph W. Straley, local AAUP chairman, said yesterday that the money would "cover all forseeable costs in the near future.

"We have no financial problems."

By May 1, said Straley, the AAUP raised the amount which "we set out to achieve by June 1."

Most of the money was raised by a letter sent to permanent faculty members. But, according to an AAUP source, more than $500 was received "without an active campaign" before the letters were mailed.

Meanwhile, former Student Body President Paul Dickson declared the Committee for Free Inquiry's fund raising drive dead for the present.

He said he believes at least $100 has been raised by the students, "although I would have to check with the bank for the exact figure.

"We've got the money we need," Dickson continued, referring to the AAUP funds. "We got it from the campus — from the University people as we wanted.

"Besides," said Dickson, "we may not have to pay the money at all." He says that if the he and the other plaintiffs win the speaker ban case, the defendants — who include the University administration — may be forced to pay court costs.

Straley said last month that expenses in most law cases are split between lawyer and court costs. However, he continued, the law firm of Smith, Moore, Smith, Shell, and Hunter offered to take the speaker ban case at a nominal fee.

The letter read:

'If the students win, the Speaker Ban Law will be declared unconstitutional and void, restoring the situation to that traditionally enjoyed by the University until spring 1963 when the original Speaker Ban was enacted."

The North Carolina AAUP unanimously passed in March a resolution asking every chapter in the state to collect funds for the case.

Lipsitz Won't Speak Friday At SDS Rally

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

Dr. Lewis Lipsitz will not speak at tomorrow's rally in Y-Court, according to Students for a Democratic Society spokesmen.

The rally, scheduled for noon, will be an "informal" protest against student draft deferments and the Viet Nam war in general.

Speaking will be Gary Waller, SDS member, and Churck Schunior, chairman of the Student Peace Union. Waller will talk about the war "in general" and Schunior will read an SDS flyer attacking student deferments.

SDS member Jerry Carr said yesterday that Lipsitz would not be asked to speak because of personal reasons. Lipsitz was out of town yesterday because of a death in his family.

The rally will be accompanied by an SDS booth in Y Court where students may pick up copies of a "National Viet Nam Examination" put out by SDS.

The test is being distributed to point out what SDS calls the "old fashioned 'class privilege' " inherent in the selective service test being offered to college students this month.

"Why doesn't the government look for people who want to be soldiers in this war," the organization asks. "And if nobody wants to fight it, and if they can't persuade us, then why don't they quit trying to force us to fight."

Carr said SDS is still looking for a replacement for Lipsitz. "We don't have one at the moment," he said. Lipsitz was going to be asked to speak about student deferments, a topic he has been vocalizing on lately.

'Dex' Causes Bad Effect —Psychiatrist

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J. (AP) — A psychiatrist Wednesday urged all physicians — including family doctors — to be very cautious about prescribing amphetamine drugs for would-be weight reducers and other patients, lest they inadvertently encourage dangerous addition.

(Dexedrine is an amphetamine.)

Dr. Frederick Lemere of the University of Washington School of Medicine, Seattle, declared it's not generally recognized that the amphetamine drugs — which are prescribed for such things as overeating and exhaustion — can have a "damaging effect" emotionally, and even damage the brain, if chronically used in inordinate fashion.

In a report to the 122nd Annual Meeting of the American Psychiatric Association, the psychiatrist declared:

"In this country, amphetamine dependency has been increasing, but recent government controls will materially help to stop the propagation of this serious personal and social disorder.

THIS IS a picture of somebody we all know. There is no reason for running this picture except that we have a whole stack of them in the office and thought you might like us to finish what we started yesterday with Miss Sunny Smash. By the way, just who is Miss Sunny Smash?

Graduation Exercises Described To Seniors

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Senior class president John Harmon told degree candidates in Memorial Hall yesterday that Chancellor Sitterson urged "as many graduating seniors as possible to take part in the graduation ceremony."

About 200 students attended the meeting to learn the procedures to be followed in Commencement processions this year.

The Faculty Marshall, Dr. Robert M. Miller, said, "If you fail to attend commencement, you may feel sorry in years to come that you missed this opportunity."

Miller stressed the importance of the graduates' attending the Baccalaureate Sermon to be delivered by Dr. Bernard H. Boyd, head of the religion department, at 11 a.m. Sunday, June 5.

"Students who have never had Dr. Boyd as a professor and many of his former students will have a wonderful opportunity to hear him speak before they leave the University," Miller said.

Director of Records Ray Strong told the students that their grades will be available in 01 Hanes Hall all as fast as they come in. The grades will be given out from 10:30 to 12 and 3 to 4 everyday after the grades begin coming in.

After the graduation exercises, the diplomas will be given out on the main floor of Woollen Gymnasium. The caps and gowns will be turned in at this time.

The Book Exchange has ordered over 1200 caps and gowns for the commencement exercises. This is considerably more than last year.

Degree candidates are asked to wear their caps and gowns at both the Baccalaureate Sermon and the Graduation exercises.

Students were reminded to make reservations for rooms in Morrison for their out-of-town guests staying for several days during the Commencement Exercises.

Powledge Will Address Press Club Banquet

Fred A. Powledge, a UNC graduate formerly on the staff of the New York Times, will tell journalism students Friday night how to deal with news sources when writing about controversial subjects like civil rights and Viet Nam.

Powledge, who recently resigned from The Times to work on magazine articles, will speak to the UNC Press Club Awards Banquet at the Pines Restaurant, where scholarships will be awarded to rising juniors and seniors and the journalism school's annual awards will be announced.

There will be honors given to the oustanding senior man and outstanding senior women.

Among the posts to be filled is the $300 per year position of UNC Journalist editor. Editorial nominees are DTH staff writer Steve Bennett, Wendell junior Mary Jo Hester and former DTH staffer Ray Linville.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. resigned today as Chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission — reportedly to run for Governor of New York.

Roosevelt has been chairman of the commission since it went into operation July 2, 1965.

Sororities Wash Cars For Melons

The Panhellenic Council will hold a car wash tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. for 75 cents a car at the Sof-Spra Car Wash across the street from the Oh Boy! on Rosemary Street.

Six girls from each sorority will be taking turns during the day washing the cars. The council has promised that all the girls will be beautiful in order to encourage a large turnout.

Profits from the car wash will go toward the partial financing of the annual watermelon cut to be held next Thursday from 3:30 to 5:30 on the McIver lawn. A free slice of watermelon will be given to women students as long as the supply lasts.

The watermelon cut is also being sponsored by the Carolina Women's Council. This activity has been held jointly by the two organizations for the past several yars.

The organizations are buying 100 watermelons for the cut. A folk singing group will provide entertainment and everyone is invited to spread their blankets on the lawn and relax in their bermudas.

Hayden Fund Announced

Establishment of the Glen Haydon Memorial Fund in honor of the late chairman of the Music Department was announced here today.

Dr. Haydon, a Kenan professor of music, died Sunday morning. He had been associated with UNC since 1934.

The fund, to be administered by the University, will be designed to promote use and expansion of research materials in the Renaissance music period with particular reference to the history of the Polyphonic Hymns. This area was of special interest to Dr. Haydon and he had done research on the subject.

Colleagues and friends of Dr. Haydon across the state who wish to contribute to the fund may do so by contacting the department of music or the UNC administration.

Answer To Suit Expected Friday

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The defendants' answer to the Speaker Ban law suit will be filed today or tomorrow, State Attorney General Wade Bruton said Wednesday.

The answer, prepared by the Raleigh law firm of Joyner and Howison and the Attorney General's staff, has been tentatively approved, he said. Bruton declined to explain the substance of the answer, but added that it will probably be filed in Greensboro tomorrow.

The defendants of the suit, which was filed March 31 by 12 UNC students, Marxist Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson, are Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, Consolidated University President William C. Friday and the University Board of Trustees.

The suit asks that the U. S. District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina issue a permanent injunction against the defendants' further enforcement of the Speaker Ban and declare the law unconstitutional.

The reply to the suit was originally due April 24, but an extension until May 15 was granted by the court on April 12. Att. Gen. Bruton had asked for the postponement, and the plaintiffs' attorney—McNeill Smith of Greensoboro — made no objection to the delay.

The court in Greensboro will be closed on Saturday and Sunday, May 14 and 15, so the answer must be filed by 5 p.m. Friday, when the court closes.

If the answer is not filed by then, the court would be in order to declare the defendants' answer defaulted and grant the plaintiffs' wishes.

The expected answer to the suit is a "motion of dismissal," which would affirm the validity of the plaintiffs' evidence, but assert the constitutionality of the suit.

The court panel to hear the case consistes of Judge Clement F. Haynesworth of the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, Judge Edwin M. Stanley of the Federal Middle District Court of North Carolina and Judge Algernon L. Butler of the Eastern North Carolina District.

The UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors and the Chapel Hill chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union are expected to file a brief of amicus curiae, as a "friend of the court," in support of the defendants.

Also, Carolina Political Union Chairman Eric Van Loon, former DTH Editor Ernie McCrary, Gary Waller and Stu Matthews of the Students for Democratic Society steering committee, student John McSween and student Henry Patterson.

Fallout Harmful From Red Bomb

TOKYO (AP) — A Japanese scientist reported today radioactive fallout from Red China's third atomic test was far heavier than previous ones and warned it might be hazardous to human beings.

Prof. Takao Kosaka of Niigata University said the dust radioactivity was slightly more than 33 times stronger than the second and largest of two previous Chinese tests in May of 1965.

Besides proving possibly harmful to people, the fallout could seriously contaminate vegetables in the Japanese countryside, he said.

Kosaka's findings bore out two Washington reports: that the third test would be the dirtiest of all, and that it was the largest in the series of three. The first test came in October of 1964.

Kosaka's report did not mean, however, that the third blast was 33 times as large as the previous one. Rain and other weather factors affect the rate of fallout. And as Washington had predicted, this was no doubt the dirtiest Chinese bomb yet.

Generally, the findings in rainfall in other parts of Japan were that contamination was less than or about equal to that of previous tests. An exception was Fukushima, 120 miles north of Tokyo.

The Fukushima Prefecture Hygenic Institure and Prefectural University reported that while the radioactivity was insignificant in rainfall there it was bout 65 times stronger than in the second test.

The defense agency's nuclear energy research department in Tokyo said the radioactive contamination would increase as air masses move in from the Chinese mainland Thursday.

Shokichi Uehara, state minister and director of the science and technological agency, and other cabinet ministers studied measures to cope with the increasing fallout.

Niigata, on the west coast 165 miles northwest of Tokyo, is well situated to get the fallout from westerly winds sweeping out of Sinkiag province of far northwest China, where the third test was made Monday.

Kosaka reported dust particles contained a maximum of 1.5 million tiny units of radioactivity, compared with a maximum of 45,000 in China test last May.

Radioactive dust was taken from a collector on the roof of a Niigata university building, and scientists exposed nine rabbits and 60 mice to it to determine effects on their blood and bones.

As the world's only nation to be subjected to an atomic bomb attack, Japan is extremely sensitive about nuclear tests. The government Tuesday denounced Red China's renewed testing.

The Red Chinese announcement said the latest nuclear blast contained some theromonuclear material implying it might have been a hydrogen bomb.

Yack Picks 4 Seniors For Award

The Yackety-Yack announced yesterday the four recipients of the Frank Porter Graham award for outstanding seniors, Hugh A. Blackwell, William A. Graham Jr., David A. Lane and Spencer Wyatt McCallie.

The award was inaugurated in 1963 to honor four seniors "who have demonstrated their excellence in campus participation, academic endeavors and personal character, as well as Dr. Graham, former University President and U. S. Senator.

Blackwell, of Roanoke Rapids, is an economics major who has been elected into Phi Eta Sigma and Phi Beta Kappa. He has served as chairman of the Publications Board for two years, in Student Legislature for three years and as chairman of the Finance Committee of legislature.

The member of Delta Upsilong the order of the Golden Fleece and Order of the Old Well will attnd Harvard Law School next year.

Graham, of Chapel Hill, is a Morehead Scholar who was president of Phi Eta Sigma, president of the Order of the Grail and vice - chairman of the Carolina Symposium.

The member of Phi Beta Kappa, Amphoterothen and Old Well has served on numerous Student Government Committees, as well as the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on Teaching and Curriculum.

Graham, winner of the Phi Beta Kappa Sophomore Award and a Goettingen Scholar in 1964-65, was recently awarded a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship and a Danforth Fellowship for graduate study in comparative religion.

Lane, of Durham, is an Honors student in history and math and a member of Phi Eta Sigma, Pi Alpha Theta, Pi Sigma Alpha and the Mathematics Honorary.

He was chairman of the Carolina Political Union, vice - chairman of the Carolina Symposium and vice - president of Phi Beta Kappa.

The former member of the Student Government Reform Committee and the Carolina Forum was recently awarded a Woodrow Wilson Felloship for graduate study in History.

McCallie, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is a Morehead Scholar who is a meber of Phi Eta Sigma, Phi Beta Kappa and Chi Psi social fraternity.

He was selected for membership in Order of the Grail and Order of the Old Well, and has participated in the YMCA, class cabinet, Scabbard and Blade and Orientation Committee.

A participant in the NROTC program, he is also a member of the varsity soccer team and the Monogram Club. McCallie was one of two Rhodes Scholar nominees from North Carolina.

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

A Poor Showing

What part of twenty is three?

Not a very large part when that's how many Student Government committee chairmen show up to hold interviews for their committees.

Interviews for positions on SG's twenty odd committees started Tuesday. And what a start they got. There were plenty of interviewees — but only one committee chairman. Yesterday's turnout was quite an improvement. Three were there.

Student Government gets criticized day in and day out for being a Mickey Mouse organization that does nothing. Well, chairmen, you've made your contribution to the maintenance of this fine reputation.

We suggest that President Bob Powell get a little life into his appointed chairmen. He picked them, and they're hurting his organization.

Where Will They Park?

Do you walk to the student union or carry your lunch?

Silly question? It may not be if someone doesn't begin to think about parking facilities for the proposed structure to replace Graham Memorial. And they should begin pretty soon. Right now plans seem to be decorated with profuse confusion.

One "informed source" says that provisions have been made to include seven parking spaces around the building. But, in looking at the blueprints, we couldn't find that many. In fact, we couldn't find one.

This seems to be the present train of thought among those who should be attending to the problem:

"Well, of course, all of what is now Emerson Field will be available for parking when the building is completed."

Are there any plans to pave this area, or for that matter, to definitely use it for parking, paved or not.

"No, there aren't any definite plans, but the land will be empty. And it is already level enough for parking. Of course, sometime in the future that space will be used for building."

What will happen then?

"Well, like I said, there aren't any definite plans yet, but they could remove the Tin Can — it will have to be replaced in the future anyway — and park in that area. That will be just across the street from the student union. And if they wanted to build a parking garage, the natural lay of the land would make it ideal."

That could be done. A lot of things could be done. The State of North Carolina could legalize the sale of liquor by the drink. Chapel Hill trees could bear ten-dollar bills. And based on the amount of positive planning that has been done — or at least the amount that anyone in the know is willing to disclose — either of these is about as likely to happen as is the inclusion of a reasonable amount of parking space around the new student union.

It appears to us that this is in contradiction of the basic principle of having a student union. This is supposed to be a place for the students to use. Anyone who has ever darkened the door of GM knows that the present facilities — cramped though they be — seldom are flooded with students.

The main reason for this, of course, is the out-of-the-way location of GM. When the building was erected, it was the center of attraction. All the students lived right around it. An equally desirable location has been appointed for the new union building. Most students will pass by it every day going to and from classes.

But what about students living on south campus who would like to use the building at night? And even more painful, what about the 4,000 students who live off campus? Are they to be given no consideration?

If the parking situation as a whole is serious, it seems to us that this specific problem is critical. We hope that someone will give this matter a great deal of serious reconsideration.

Some people are quite concerned about this. We'd like to pass on to you an analogy that we got from one such interested party:

There are a lot of people around the University who would like to see no student cars at all. That was the situation 100 years ago. But this is 1966 — students do have cars now.

Of course, even in horse and buggy days, I think they would have made arrangements for a few hitching posts outside the student union.

George Kennan

Involvement In Viet Nam Unfortunate

(Editor's note — This is the second in a series reprinting the remarks on US Viet Nam involvement made by former ambassador George Kennan before the Senate Foreing Relations Committee.)

From the long-term standpoint, therefore, and on principle, I think our military involvement in Viet Nam has to be recognized as unfortunate, as something we would not choose deliberately, if the choice were ours to make all over again today. And by the same token, I think it should be our government's aim to liquidate this involvement just as soon as this can be done without inordinate damage to our own prestige or to stability of conditions in that area.

It is obvious on the other hand that this involvement is today a fact. It creates a new situation. It raises new questions ulterior to the long-term problem which have to be taken into account; a precipitated and disorderly withdrawal could represent in present circumstances a disservice to our own interests, and even to world peace greater than any that might have been involved by our failure to engage ourselves there in the first place.

This is a reality which, if there is to be any peaceful resolution of this conflict, is going to have to be recognized both by the more critical of our friends and by our adversaries.

But at the same time, I have great misgivings about any deliberate expansion of hostilities on our part directed to the achievement of something called "victory," if by the use of that term we envisage the complete disappearance of the recalcitrance with which we are now faced, the formal submission by the adversary to our will, and the complete realization of our present stated political aims.

I doubt that these things can be achieved even by the most formidable military successes.

There seems to be an impression about that if we bring sufficient military pressure to bear there will occur at some point something in the nature of a political capitulation on the other side. I think this is a most dangerous assumption. I don't say that it is absolutely impossible, but it is a dangerous assumption in the light of the experience we have had with communist elements in the past.

The North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong have between them a great deal of space and manpower to give up if they have to, and the Chinese can give them more if they need it. Fidelity to the communist tradition would dictate that if really pressed to extremity on the military level, these people should disappear entirely from the open scene and fall back exclusively on an underground political and military existence rather than to accept terms that would be openly humiliating and would represent in their eyes the betrayal of the future political prospects of the cause to which they are dedicated.

Any total rooting out of the Viet Cong from the territory of South Viet Nam could be achieved, if it could be achieved at all, only at the cost of a degree of damage to civilian life and of civilian suffering generally, for which I would not like to see the country responsible.

And to attempt to crust North Vietnamese strength to a point where Hanoi could no longer give any support for Viet Cong political activity in the South, would almost certainly, it sems to me, have the effect of bringing in Chinese forces at some point, whether formally or in the guise of volunteers, thus involving us in a military conflict with communist China on one of the most unfavorable theaters of hostility that we could possibly choose.

This is not the only reason why I think we should do everything possible to avoid the escalation of this conflict. There is another one which is no less weighty, and this is the effect the conflict is already having on our policies and interests further afield. This involvement seems to me to represent a grievous misplacement of emphasis on our foreign policies as a whole.

Not only are great and potentially more important questions of world affairs not receiving, as a consequence of our involvement in Viet Nam, the attention they should be receiving, but in some instances assets we already enjoy and, hopefully, possibilities we should be developing, are being sacrificed to this unpromising involvement in a remote and secondary theater. Our relations with the Soviet Union have suffered grievously as was to be expected, and this at a time when far more important things were involved in those relations than what is ultimately involved in Viet Nam and when we had special reason, I think, to cultivate those relations.

And more unfortunate still, in my opinion, is the damage being done to the feelings entertained for us by the Japanese people. The confidence and the good disposition of the Japanese is the greatest asset we have had and the greatest asset we could have in East Asia. As the greatest industrial complex in the entire Far East and the only place where the sinews of modern war can be produced on a formidable scale there, Japan is of vital importance to us and indeed to the prospects generally of peace and stability in East Asia.

There is no success we could have in Viet Nam that would conceivably warrant in my opinion, the sacrifice by us of the confidence of the Japanese people.

Yet, I fear that we abuse that confidence and good will in the most serious way when we press the military strugle in Viet Nam, and particularly when we press it by means of strategic combing, a process to which the Japanese for historical reasons are peculiarly sensitive and averse.

I mention Japan particularly because it is an outstanding example, both in importance and in the intensity of the feelings aroused, of the psychological damage that is being done in many parts of the world by the prosecution of this conflict, and that will be done in even greater measure if the hostilities become still more bloody and tragic as a result of our deliberate effort.

It is clear that however justified our action may be in our own eyes, it has failed to win either enthusiasm or confidence even among peoples normally friendly to us.

Investigation Of Bathtubs Needed For Public Welfare

"We have come to recognize needed improvements in automobiles," the head of a Cornell University research team gravely proclaimed this week. Now, he said, we must accept the fact that the American bathroom also "needs a drastic overhaul."

According to Theodore Kira, this country's bathtubs are simply too dangerous to get into. In fact, he says, "No tub made today permits a person to relax unless he happens to be a contortionist."

Frankly, I'm worried. Americans have long trusted the bathtub makers to provide us with safe, reliable equipment; now, we find the bathtub industry is clearly avoiding its public responsibilities.

Could it be that what this country desperately needs is a thorough investigation of the bathtub industry?

I think so.

Congress, in my opinion, should wrap up its expose of Detroit and get to work on a far more urgent matter: slippery bathtubs.

Unlike Ralph Nader, I don't have any impressive files of statistics, but I do know this: Hundreds of Americans daily suffer loss of life and limb when stepping in and out of their tubs.

Formerly, people believed the bathtub makers' claims that their products were safe. Now, however, the public can no longer be sure. Could it be, for instance, that the tub industry is emphasizing looks ahead of safety? Could the American public be paying billions of dollars for gleaming, modernistic tub designs when it instead should have good, solid, foolproof equipment which will not fail anybody when he spins the faucet after a hard day at the office? And speaking of the faucets, are they being plated with too much chrome?

Should Congress pass a law requiring that all tubs be equipped with anti-slip devices at no extra cost to the consumer in the interest of safety? And what about the faulty tubs that have already been sold to thousands of customers throughout the nation? Should such tubs be recalled to dealers for maintenance work to wrinkle out the slippery spots? Are imported tubs even more hazardous than the domestic variety?

These questions need to be answered urgently.

After Ralph Nader wrote his famous auto safety book, he found himself the target of some sexy blondes, apparently sent out by the auto makers' detective agencies who were intent on blackmail. I do not know whether the bathtub makers will also hire the girls upon reading this column, but if any are sent, I can tell them exactly where they'll find me after a hard day's work. In the shower.

Reader Defends Berkeley In Letter To The Editor

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

The "star of the West" located in Berkeley, California, known as "Cal" to those who live and work there, has recently come under all sorts of attack which has somewhat exaggerated any fair image of the University of California at Berkeley. It is a place where ideas flow the way beer does in other places. It is the "great marketplace" facilitating the interchange of opinions and philosophies. Granted the existence of a number of "protestors"; however, this is only a part of the idea market. In perspective, one must realize the existence of almost 12,000 graduate students — plus there are students from practically every foreign nation who attend classes at UC. This is not to say anything of the prestige and capability of its faculty.

The university's president has been criticized repeatedly for his defense of a university's role within a society. The California Legislature and Senate have threatened to revamp the system of regency— i.e. more political control, a situation well known in other areas.

California is not a region easy to describe. The existence of verital cosmopolitanism with the newer strain of conservatism, all immersed in the pepsi-type generation which increases more than 1,500 persons a day produces ample social and political tensions.

Cal reflects this diversity and it also benefits from it. This does not mean that there are no disadvantages — mainly size. Lecture classes for undergraduates can number up to 1,000 students which effectively prevents any but superficial contact with some professors.

Academic pressure is high at Cal, and work loads run heavy. Only the top eight per cent of high school classes are eligible to enter the freshman class.

Overriding any disadvantages which do exist are the contributions that Cal makes to society by enabling the development of thinking citizens, and preserving that environment which is necessary for the generation of new thought.

"Footprints" by Paul Dickson

Mrs. Spearman — Professor Walt Spearman's wife and the mother of former student body president Bob Spearman is again in Memorial Hospital. This is the third or fourth time this semester. Her condition is critical and she is in the intensive care section of the hospital. She had a bad night Tuesday.

Mrs. Spearman has lost well over thirty pints of blood. She had lost that much before she entered Tuesday.

Mrs. Spearman has been and I hope that she can continue to be a close friend to many students in Chapel Hill. She needs our help.

We can all help by donating blood — any type — at the hospital blood bank. It takes about thirty minutes and you don't feel a thing. When you give your pint be sure and tell them that it is for Mrs. Walter Spearman.

Longest and Wilson Vs. N.S.A. — Frank Longest (SP) and Ed Wilson (UP) have joined forces and are wheeling and dealing with everything they have to keep the National Student Association out of the budget for next year. Longest is chairman of the finance committee and Wilson is University Party floorleader — an unusual combination.

These two joined forces just before the Legislature held elections for committee chairmanships. The UP controls the legislature and Longest wanted to be chairman of the powerful finance committee. He made a deal with the more conservative forces of the UP and was elected Chairman. He has voted with them ever since.

Certain forces in the UP have been opposed to NSA for a long time and it appears that they are stopping at nothing this year to see that Chapel Hill is not represented in the nation's national union of students. "Easy Ed" and "Fearless Frank" have held a couple of Star Chamber sessions of the finance committee and as of now have effectively kept NSA out of the budget.

A rather special session of the Committee was held in Morrison about two weeks ago after 11 p.m. This effectively eliminated the female member of the Committee and one of the other members had a big quiz the next morning and could not attend. Longest, Wilson and Dunivant (freshman legislator from Ehringhaus) voted to eliminate NSA from the budget. Dunivant has since changed his mind and will support NSA if he gets a chance to do so.

Several days later the other two members of the Committee were informed of the committee's action. They were upset. Lacy Reeves was informed that he could bring NSA up for reconsideration at a later date (he was absent from the earlier meeting).

The Committee met again Tuesday night for final considerations on the budget. Teddy O'Toole was brought in to discuss NSA. The nifty duo questioned O'Toole for thirty minutes about NSA. They had previously gained this information from Eric Van Loon, past NSA coordinator at UNC. Eleven o'clock approached and passed while O'Toole was being questioned. Rep. Rouse (a girl) had to leave. This left the voting power on the committee tied since Dunivant was now supporting NSA. A tie vote is not enough.

There are conflicting reports about what happened between 11:15 and 1 a.m. An attempt was made to have NSA put back in the budget and it was either withdrawn or defeated. The Committee adjourned — forgetting to vote on the budget as a whole which must be done before it goes to the floor of Legislature.

The Legislature was to meet last night to consider the budget. A meeting of the finance committee was to have been held for final consideration of the budget before the legislative session began. I hope that meeting was held.

Several conclusions can be drawn from the actions of these two legislators over the past several weeks.

There is no doubt that they have a difficult job to do. It is a thankless job that takes a lot of time before final examinations.

It would seem that the Committee's work would procede better if it were done in the open and not in Morrison after women's closing hours. It is also disturbing that two members of the Committee (Longest and Wilson) can keep a majority of the Committee (Reeves, Dunivant and Rouse) from exercising the majority's right of control.

It is also disturbing to me that that NSA might be cut out of the budget, especially after the endorsement that it was given by the campus last year in the referendum.

McNamara Defends US Viet Nam Position As A 'Limited Objective'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara said yesterday that if American troops had not been rushed in, the Communists would have overrun South Viet Nam, butchered thousands and brought turmoil to all of Southeast Asia.

McNamara, pulling secret reports from his arsenal of statistics, told the Senate Foreigh Relations Committee the Viet Cong "is losing what support it had from the population."

Also, he said, heavy pounding from ground and air has dented the enemy's morale and expectations of victory.

But still, he said the "dominant theme" of war and peace in Viet Nam is what he saw as a "firm decision" by the North Vietnamese to intensify the war.

McNamara based this judgment on a continuing flow of men from the north — at a rate of about 4,500 men a month.

But the sought to assure the committee, a center of criticism of the war policy, that the United States has a "limited political objective" and wants to fight a war that kills as few as possible, including enemies.

"We have a limited objective," the Defense chief said. "We are seeking to achieve that with the lowest possible cost in human life . . . to the United States, to the South Vietamese and to our adversaries."

All this, McNamara said, is being weighed by the White House discussion on Viet Nam which he preferred to call a "progress report" rather than a re-examination of policy.

McNamara said he shied away from "re-examination" because "I didn't want to give the impression that some change of policy would be announced at any time, and I don't think that is the case."

But Chairman J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., one of the foremost critics of the administration Viet Nam policy, said he thought a "change in policy would be in the national interest."

However, McNamara did not find quite such bristling arguments as Secretary of State Dean Rusk did on Monday when Sen. Wayne Morse, D-Ore., denounced Rusk's defense of the U. S. involvement in Viet Nam.

McNamara, dressed in blue as usual, sat admist an array of attache cases and notebooks into which he dipped now and then to filed questions that ranged over topics from bombs to brothels.

McNamara's appearance obstensibly was in support of the administration's $3.4 billion foreign aid program. Fulbright indicated previously that he expected that McNamara would be the last witness before the committee went into closed sessions on the measure.

The committee plans to hear from the U. S. ambassador to Saigon, Henry Cabot Lodge, at a closed meeting tomorrow.

Lodge, who is in Washington conferring with administration officials, spent nearly an hour today with Secretary of Agriculture Orville L. Freeman.

Interviewed by reporters afterward, Lodge's only comment was: "Viet Nam is an Agricultural country."

Freeman said he and the ambassador discussed steps being taken to help Viet Nam improve its agricultural economy.

Lodge met with President Johnson and the National Security Council last night and scheduled other conferences with McNamara and South Vietnamese Ambassador Vu Van Thai.

One of the liveliest debates at yesterday's Senate hearing involved Morse and McNamara on the question of whether the use of American combat troops had moved the war any closer to a conference table.

Morse insisted it had not. But McNamara argued "The first step in a negotiated peace is avoidance of a loss, and that step has been taken, and that step is a direct result of the introduction of U. S. forces." He added:

"Had the men not been introduced . . . The Viet Cong and North Viet Nam would have won. They would have slaughtered thousands and probably tens of thousands of South Vietnamese, and all of Southeast Asia would be in turmoil."

Morse disputed that.

But sticking to his guns, McNamara said "All of the intelligence we have from both sides indicates that had there been a Viet Cong and North Vietnamese victory, there would have been a slaughter in South Viet Nam. That I am sure of."

Morse countered: "We started this whole cause and effect relationship . . . you've got to stop this war, you've got to stop killing these boys."

"You indicated that you don't know what ought to be done," said McNamara. ". . . It's not clear in adopting your objectives how you achieve them."

Morse repeated his assertion that President Johnson should personally ask the United Nations to achieve a cease-fire.

California Decision Will Be Appealed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The California Supreme Court's ruling Monday that Proposition 14 is unconstitutional will be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court if necessary, the president of the California Real Estate Association said yesterday.

Burt E. Smith told a news conference that the California court first will be asked to rehear the case and if that fails the U. S. Supreme Court will be asked for a review.

Proposition 14, passed as an initiative measure by California voters in 1964, permits racial deiscrimination in rental or sale of privately owned real estate.

"The people of California have just lost an important freedom, the right to deal with a person of their choice concerning their own property," Smith said. "It has been taken from them by the California Supreme Court, which has resorted to astonishing twists of logic to justify their action.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

Death Throes Of Minors?

Minor league baseball is in trouble in Durham; and, I'm afraid, in this case as Durham goes, so goes the nation. The major leagues must squarely face the problem of whether their little cousins, the chief source of big league talent, can survive.

Tuesday night the Durham Bulls, a member of the Class A Carolina League, played Rocky Mount before an intimate gathering of 82 close friends and relatives. When you stop and consider that several University classes have many more students than that, you realize just how small an attendance that is.

The minor leagues have gone a long way since the flush times after World War II. Unfortunately, the road they're traveling is the road to oblivion. Gone are such lower minor circuits as the Cotton States League, the Evangeline League and the Three-I League. More importantly, gone are such "major" minors as the Southern Association and the American Association.

Drives, such as the Durham Chamber of Commerce is conducting, to get more fans to attend baseball games are commendable; but they are only stopgap measures. They can only put off the inevitable collapse of support. People who can see major league baseball for free on television will not pay to see the minor league brand.

The majors, it seems to me, have two alternatives. If they feel that the minors are essential for player development, they will have to completely subsidize them and write off the losses as a necessary expense.

If the majors do not choose to carry the minors as perpetual money-losers, they will have to devise another system for developing talent. The likeliest place is the colleges, which function beautifully as sources of players for pro football and basketball. Unfortunately, college baseball is not really a big sport on campus; and the season is too short to give the players the necessary experience.

Summer leagues, financed by the organized baseball and using college players, may be the answer. Some system will have to be worked out whereby the players can earn money while playing, without jeopardizing their college eligibility. Perhaps baseball can work out an arrangement with private businesses to give the players jobs which won't interfere with their playing ball. In return, the businessmen might get the good-will benefits of acting as team sponsors in the summer leagues.

Whatever the major leagues decide to do, they had better begin making plans now. The days of minor league baseball under the present system are numbered. ent system are numbered.

Tigers In Their Bats

Carolina has won the ACC baseball title, but the Clemson Tigers continue to compile an amazing batting record. Tommy Pack of Clemson has replaced Danny Talbott as the conference hitting leader with a .384 mark. Talbott is hitting .374. Clemson's Keith Waters is batting .373. Other Tiger averages include Rusty Adkins, .369, George Sutton and Ellis Dantzler, .364, Lawton Cowart, .363, and Jack McCall, .356. Catcher Eddie Barbary is the weak swinger for the Tigers. He's hitting only .343.

MASTER AT WORK — Charlie Smith, runner-up in the national collegiate pocket billiards tournament, studies a shot in the pool room in the basement of GM. — DTH Photo By Jerry Lambert

UNC Pool Ace Takes Aim; Whump, Click, Plop—It's In

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Down in the basement of Graham Memorial a young man bends over a table, stares intently at the arrangement of balls on the surface, draws the cue stick back, and whump, click, plop. Another ball drops into a pocket.

This is no ordinary pool player who just wanders in and shoots for the heck of it. This is the second best college pocket billiards man in the country. He is Charles Smith, an UNC graduate student in physical education.

Charles placed second in the National Billiards Championship held at the University of Miami on April 28 and 29. It was an invitational meet among the top four players in the country. A boy from Tulane was the winner, with Charles second, a boy from Ohio State third and a boy from New Mexico fourth.

To qualify, Charles won the regional championship held in Knoxville, Tenn. There are 15 regions in the U. S. and the winners with the four highest averages went to Miami.

"I was flown down with all expenses paid," Charlie said, "courtesy of the National Association of College Unions. They had a very nice pool parlor, with brand-new Brunswick tables."

Charles participated in the pocket billiards championship, which is known to most people as straight pool. The three-cushion championship was also held, as well as the women's pocket billiards championship.

"Billiards is a general term denoting any kind of billiard game," Charlie explained. "Most people talk of three-cushion as 'billiards.' Actually, it's where the cue ball is played off another ball."

Phi Kappa Sig, Phi Delt Win In Softball Tourney

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Phi Kappa Sigma held off a Pi Kappa Phi rally to win their first-round fraternity division softball game Tuesday, 8-7. Doug Wright led Phi Kap Sig with three hits, two rbi's and three runs scored.

Norm Hoffman also drove in a pair of runs. Down 8-1, Pi Kap Phi rallied on five straight walks and singles by Tim Carr and Bob Adams to cut the lead to 8-6. Another run scored later, but Phi Kap Sig held on for the win.

Phi Delta Blue, trailing by 9-1, struck in two innings to beat Chi Psi No. 2, 12-9, and advance in the tournament. Chi Psi mixed some walks, errors, singles and fielder's choices together to take their lead after two innings.

Then Phi Delt strung together singles by five men and doubles by Reynolds and Williams to trail by only 9-8. In the next inning, Phi Delt loaded the bases and Bill Armstrong unloaded them with a grand slam home run to win the game for the Phi Delts.

Marshburn cracked two home runs to lead Sigma Nu A to a 17-4 romp over PiKA Blue. Baddour and Burwell also joined in the parade with home runs. Tom Hunter hit one for PiKA.

The Kappa Psi Choppers humbled Phi Sigma Kappa, 21-4. Bill Boone slammed a home run and Lynn Williams had four singles and scored four runs for Kappa Psi. Bill Lewis homered for the Phi Sigs.

The Mangum Mugs won a place in the resident hall tournament with a 10-2 thumping of the Ruffin Rebels. Five singles and three walks helped Mangum score seven runs in the third.

The Pharmacy Peyotes took advantage of the wildness of Stat Grad pitchers to post an 8-5 victory. Pharmacy had only three hits, but were aided b nine walks.

Jay Schwartz had three hits to lead the TEP Tops over the ZBT Zebes, 6-4. Kohn hit a home run for the Zebes.

The Phi Gam Fijis rolled over St. A Blue, 8-4.

Carolina Defends ACC Tennis Crown

By BARRY JACOBS
DTH Sports Editor

The Tar Heels begin the battle for their second conference championship of the spring today when the ACC tennis tournament opens in Clemson.

Carolina should rule a solid favorite to retain the title won last year at N. C. State. The Tar Heels, under the direction of Coach Don Skakle, have rolled up a 19-1 record this season, losing only to Florida State, 5-4.

Skakle's powerhouse was undefeated in conference play. In fact, only Clemson was able to win any points against the Heels. The Tigers fell, 6-3, while the Tar Heels blanked all the other teams in the conference.

Skakle said he expected the toughest competition to come from Clemson, with Maryland next. The Tigers finished a close secone (68-60) in the 1965 tournament.

Gene Hamilton, a sophomore from Asheville, will play No. 1 singles for Carolina in the tournament. Hamilton took over that slot during the season. Co-captain Bronson Van Wyck will play No. 2. The junior from Greenwich, Conn., will team up with senior Andy Goddard in the No. 1 doubles competition.

Other singles players for the Tar Heels are: Bob Davids, No. 3; Tom Chewning, No. 4; Nat West, No. 5; and Co-captain Ken Oettinger, No. 6. Chewning and West are juniors, while Davis is a sophomore and Oettinger is a senior.

Chewning and Davis will team up for the No. 2 doubles matches, and West and Hamilton will make up the No. 3 pair.

Skakle said he expected all the Tar Heels to be seeded either first or second in the tournament. "This is what I want," he said, pointing out that the Carolina players would meet the toughest competition on Saturday.

Last year the Tar Heels swept top honors in the ACC tourney. O. H. Parrish copped the singles championship and teamed with Van Wyck to take the doubles. Parrish graduated in 1965.

The tournament continues through Saturday. A team gets one point for each match any of its players wins. The championship is decided on total points.

Grill Nights At Carolina Come Only Once A Week

By BOB GARNER
Special to the DTH

"We started having combos on Thursday night about three years ago," says Bill Allen, co-owner of the Carolina Grill. "That's what really started business around here."

It certainly has.

Each Thursday night, fraternity and dorm men alike grow restless, put away their books and march down to the grill, where they find coeds who have nervously applied make-up and recombed their hair to pay a visit to the West Franklin Street establishment.

Everybody's braced for a hectic evening. Once the Grill fills up, there's happy bedlam. Couples crowd themselves around every table, covering the entire floor as they drink, laugh, wander through the smoke-filled room and shout to each other to be heard over the overamplified sounds of electric guitars.

They're happy

It's Grill Night.

It's another world, however, on weekday afternoons, when the grill, also owned by Bill Allen, seems deserted by comparison. All you find there then is dusty white sunlight filtering through the venitian blinds into the dim interior, and a few students eating hamburgers or gulping down a few beers.

"The fire department has limited us to 120 people at one time," Allen says about those crowded Thursdays "I remember when we had 380 people in here to see the Hot Nuts, and it was just too many.

"Those old booths just caved in with the crowd," he adds with a glance at the new tables and chairs.

Allen and Boyles have been owners since December 1963, when they took over from Doug Hardin.

The Grill was started five and a half years ago in the space vacated by a tire re-capping shop, and the decor has been changed regularly.

The present interior features an elevated stage over the bar and a balcony for dining in the back, all Bill Allen's own work. (The balcony is a sore subject with Bill since the fire department closed it for having such a low ceiling.)

The original booths have been replaced with formica-topped tables, with the exception of a huge wooden table occupying a place of honor in front of the main window.

"We kept it because of all the initials carved in it . . . we wouldn't take it out," says Bill.. The scarred old table, a Grill landmark, tells of people and good times gone by with such cryptic reminders as "Theta Chi", "Woogie", "Pug", and "Irving".

Shimmering signs advertising the best in beer revolve on supports from the ceiling and reflect from the black and gold fraternity emblems painted on the walls.

"Most of the fraternities have come down here and painted the signs themselves," Bill says. A once empty patch of wall now contains a freshly painted emblem reading "Phi Sigma Kappa" — a new addition to Carolina's Greeks.

Above the sound of meat frying in the kitchen, employee Joe Husky shouts, "We're turning to more of a steak house than anything else. We do a lot more business in food now than beer."

Bill says the Grill started specializing in food last semester and has done very well since. Their $1.25 T-bone steak is a student favorite — they sell around 100 a day.

Bill returns to talk about entertainment. "I'm looking around for a combo that plays a little quieter — one that we can turn the volume up and down on, like a juke box."

How about the Go-Go girls that have been dancing recently?

"They're all customers who have volunteered . . . we haven't hired any so far. There always seem to be one or two who have to get up and dance when the music starts, doesn't seem to be hurting business," he grins.

The stage is really the only place with enough room to dance.

Bill says more serious, "We naturally specialize in serving and entertaining UNC students . . . there wouldn't be a Grill without them."

The Grill is open only when school is in session and closes when students leave for vacations.

People will tell you that Carolina wouldn't be the same without the Grill.

Controversial Bishop Pike To Resign As Churchman

SAN FRANCISCO —(A) — Bishop James A. Pike said yesterday he is considering resigning as the highly controverial head of the Episcopal Diocese of California to become a scholar.

He expects to announce a final decision within 10 days.

If the House of Bishops approved the resignation, Pike said he would remain an Episcopal Bishop.

Pike was a lawyer before he entered the ministry.

Pike said his decision to seek opportunity to be a scholar - teacher started taking form during his recent six-month sabbatical study at Cambridge University in England.

The standing Committee of the Diocese of California has accepted Pike's resignation "with regret," pending his ultimate decision and action by the House of Bishops.

In a statement Pike said he has devoted incrasing time to re-examining the church "with the aim of presenting the faith in a way which is more relevant to contemporary man."

If Pike's resignation takes effect, the Rt. Rev. Richard Millard, Suffragan Bishop of California, would take over religious leadership. The Standing Committee would become administrative authority until a new bishop is elected.

Bishop Pike has long been a controversial figure in his forthright manner and unconventional approach toward renderning Christian doctrine in new terms.

For him to leave his diocesan post would require concurrence of the House of Bishops.

New Spending System O.K.'d By Legislature

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Student Legislature approved a requisition system for spending Student Government funds in a special session Wednesday.

Legislature also began the slow item by item consideration of the budget. It was not balanced when introduced by Frank Longest (SP), chairman of the Finance Committee.

The requisition system requires the Student Body Treasurer to authorize one to three persons of each organization which receives Student Government funds to sign requisition forms.

Before the organization may spend any funds, the authorized person must obtain a form from the Student Activities Fund Office which will state the amount to be spent and that the expense is provided for in the budget.

Under the requisition system, Student Government would not be liable for funds spent without a requisition form. The person spending the funds without the form would be liable for them.

Violation of the system will be an Honor Code offense.

The system may be suspended for an organization if written request is submitted to the chairman of the Finance Committee and a vote of the commitee approves.

The Finance Commitee may suspend the system only under "a strictly specified situation." The bill does not define what these situations are.

University Floor Leader Ed Wilson told Legislature that they could not afford to wait another year to begin the system of the unbalanced budget.

Longest said the system as necessary now to "make people think" before they spend Student Government funds.

Eric Van Loon (SP) said there was a bill presently in the Ways and Means Committee to study the financial set-up of Student Government. He did not want the system installed until further study could be made.

The vote on the section of the budget defining the requisition system passed in a voice vote.

After approving the new system, Legislature considered the budget until 10:45 p.m. when the rules state that they must adjourn.

Included in the budget was $1.903. 30 for NSA. Rumors had been abundant that the Finance Committe had cut NSA out of the budget totally. When this part of the budget was considered on the floor, $45 was added to the funds appropriat-

Ban Suit Answer:

Defendants To Ask Dismissal Of Case

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The defendants in the Speaker Ban suit will ask for dismissal of the case when they file their answer to the suit later this morning in the U. S. District Court for the Middle District of N. C.

Col. W. T. Joyner, senior member of the Raleigh law firm which aided the Attorney General's staff in preparing the Defense, said yesterday that the answer "will contain motions of dismissal."

The motion would admit the validity of the facts in the plaintiffs' evidence, but assert the merits of the Speaker Ban Law.

The suit was file March 31 by 12 students, Marxist Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson against Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, Consolidated University President William C. Friday and the UNC Board of Trustees.

Attorney General Wade Bruton said yesterday that a representative of his staff will leave Raleigh about 9 a.m. today to file the answer in Greensboro.

The deadline for the answer to the suit is May 15. The defense would be required to file their answer by 5 p.m. today, since the court in Greensboro is closed tomorrow and Sunday.

Nine-Story Book Exchange Set For Completion By Spring Of '68

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The new Book Exchange building scheduled to be started this summer at a cost $3,225,000 will be nine stories, high and is supposed to be completed by the spring of '68.

The high - rise totally air-conditioned structure will be located between the new Undergraduate Library and the new Student Union. It will have a lower level opening on the Raleigh Street side only, two floors for the Book Exchange facing Lenoir Hall and six glass enclosed floors for office space.

Arthur N. Tuttle Jr., Director of planning, said that the plans for the building were changed from the original plans which only called for a three - story building.

Each floor will contain about 12,500 square feet of floor space.

The bottom floor will be divided about evenly between the office supply store located new in the basement of Y Court and the duplicating offices.

The main entrance of the building will be on the Lenoir Hall side and will be on the second floor. As the building is entered from this location, a two - story open section in the middle of the building will show the ceiling of the third floor and will aid in unifying the Book Exchange part of the building.

UNC Officals To Request $ Increase

University officials have announced plans to request an increase in the per - occupant expenditure permitted on the construction of new dormitories, according to Acting Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson.

At present the Advisory Budget Commission enforces a State requirement that a maximum of $3,000 per occupant be spent on dorm construction.

Consolidated University President William C. Friday said last week that no decision on the amount of the increase to be requested has been reached. A meeting has been held with the State Department of Administration to discuss the matter, he said.

Sitterson said the University "will seek relief from the restriction shortly." He added, such a requirement "puts an unrealistic ceiling on dormitory construction and will cause a sharp reduction in the size of the two - man dormitory rooms."

He said such a reduction would become necessary if the per - occupant expenditure is not increased in line with rising labor and building cost.

Friday said, "We will request an upward revision in the figure and the Department of Administration will probably make a similar recommendation.

"It is a statutory matter and must be taken up by the 1967 General Assembly."

Consolidated University Business Manager A. H. Shepherd Jr, said the per - occupant expenditure has risen from $2,687.50 (set by the 1961 General Assembly) to $2,750 (set by the 1963 Assembly)

Janus Inducts 14

Fourteen men were initiated last night in secret ceremonies by the Society of Janus.

New members were picked up at midnight at various locations on campus and taken to the temple of the society where they were inducted. After the initiation a reception was held for old and new members.

New members are: Duane Gary Boggs, Llewellyn G. Brown, Jerry Wayne Cannady, Chan Chandler, William T. Elliott, John Edward Ellis, Terry Clayton Fox, Worth Timothy Haithcock, James Gaston Hough, Charles R. Miller, Ernest Allen Shepard, Dwight E. Thomas, Jr., William Samuel Woodard and Rev. Harry E. Smith.

The Society of Janus is a secret honorary society composed of students, faculty administration officials, and others who have demonstrated outstanding leadership and service to residence halls of the university.

The society makes selections on the basis of leadership, scholarship, and honorable character.

Serving as officers this past year were A. D. Frazier, Praeceps; Bill Robinson, Vice-Praeceps; Jim Pender, Notarius; and Pete Williams, Quaestor.

Other active members on campus are Gordon Appell, Ronnie Aycock, Gerald Droze, Phil Baddour, John Ingram, Chuck Longino, Byron McCoy, Bob Payton, Paul Russell, Bob Hunter, Clark Brewer, Ed Burt, Arthur Hays, Jim Fullwood, Don Carson, Paul Dickson, Alan Craig, Sonny Pepper, and Lanny Shuff.

E'haus Surfers Set Luau Blast This Afternoon

An Hawaiian Luau Party will be sponsored by Ehringhaus Residence College on Friday, May 13.

Bathed in the lights and sights of the tropics, the Shadows Combo will play from 7:30 until 12:30. This party is a group project by the six houses of the college and big plans are now being made for the event.

Admission will be free for persons appropriately dressed for a luau (wild swim suits, sarongs, etc.).

This combo party will be the major event of the spring social activities for Ehringhaus Residence College. Plans now call for the lawn to be fully bedecked with appropriate decorations.

All persons will be greeted with a free lei.

The event will be held on the front lawn. The entire campus is cordially invited and refreshments will be served.

This will be the last big outdoor dance and festival on campus. Wear your "boggies" or your "hang-ten".

'Gods' Make Stars Perform In Skies

By KEN SAUNDERS
Special To The DTH

There are two students on this campus who virtually "play God" to hundreds of children every week.

They are holders of perhaps the rarest "self - help" jobs and get perhaps the highest hourly wage of any working student.

Their job consists of running the planetarium instrument and delivering a 50 minute lecture at the same time.

"But it is not quite that simple, said Stupak, the junior member of the team. "You work in complete darkness running an instrument from a console containing over 150 different switches and dials, 30 of which you must use in the average show."

"Then you have to lecture for almost an hour about what is going on overhead and you can't use a scrip in the dark either."

The "instrument" Stupak mentions is a $185,000 Zeiss Planetarium Projector which weighs 2 1-2 tons. It is one of only six such instruments on the North American Continent. "Zeiss is the Cadillac of planetarium projectors and costs ten times as much as any other."

The Zeiss instrument projects over 9,600 separate stars, all visible planets, the sun, the moon, and even portrays sun-

Phi Kaps' Coed Open House Will Officially Orientate Coeds

Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity's annual coed open house has been made an official part of fall orientation.

The Orientation Committee Monday night approved the inclusion of the fraternity's traditional event — which began in 1946 — in the Orientation Program for transfer and freshmen coeds.

Invitations will be sent to each girl and her orientation counselor to visit the Phi Kap house from 8 to 10:30 on Wednesday of Oreintation Week.

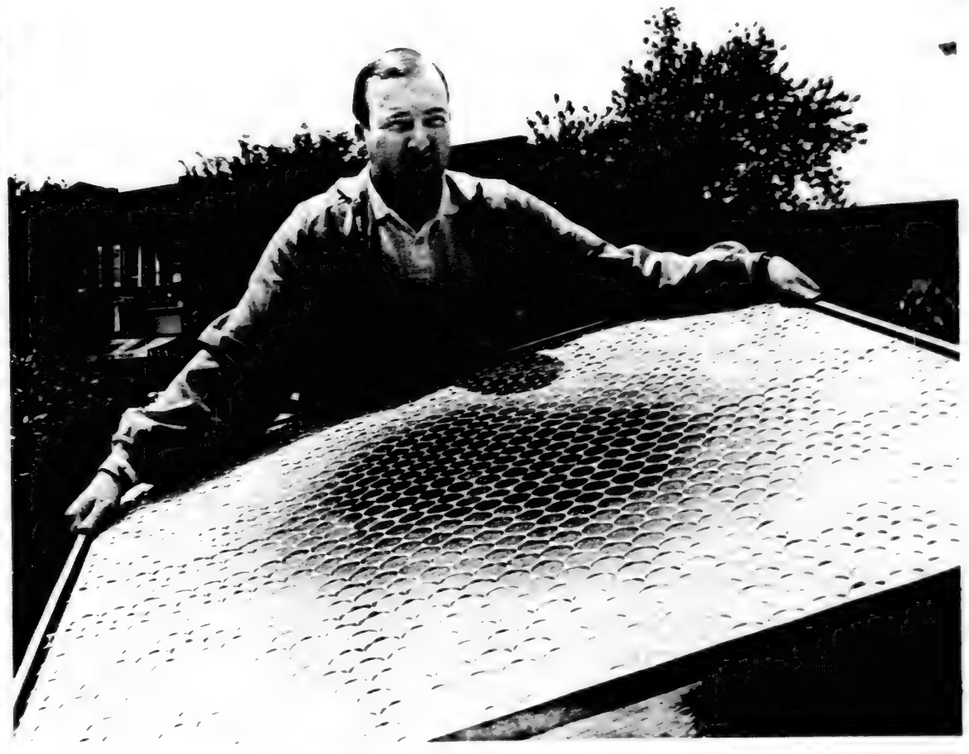
"It's just to show the girls what a fraternity at Carolina is like and to let them meet the type of guys who are in fraternities here," said Hop Hudson, president of Phi Kap.

Hudson said the brothers will return to Chapel Hill a few days early to straigthen the house up before the open house.

Attendance at the buffet - and - punch affair, he said., usually averages about 300. Plus the girls and their counselors, there are the chapter sweetheart and hostesses representing each sorority and girls' dorm.

The open house was held every year from 1946 until 1961, when it was discontinued for three years. In 1964, though, it was resumed as an annual event.

Spring Art Show: A Splash Of Colors On Franklin Street



SPLASHED ACROSS the drab sidewalk by Battle-Vance-Pettigrew today and tomorrow is a cacophony of color. The annual Spring Art show opens today with a host of new works on exhibit. Signaling the opening new spring sun glasses, Melody Dickenson surveys some paintings. Meanwhile Jeannine McGuire rolls in the grass where her mother's paintings will hang. And here comes "Mabel." (the painting is "Mabel," the boy is Bryan McDaniel.) Mabel is by Tom Livengood. If none of this makes sense, it's because you've got to see the exhibit for yourself. — DTH Photos by Jock Lauterer

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

Mrs. Spearman

A valiant friend and stalwart supporter of the University has died, leaving behind many sad and mournful followers. Many generations of students, past and present, will mourn her death, but all will cherish their moments with her.

Her home and her heart were open to all and to many students her's was a home away from home. She was a guiding hand in moments of trouble and a true friend in any time of need.

Mary Dale Spearman will not be forgotten. Her favorite passage describes how we will think of her:

DEATH AND IMMORTALITY

"Such were these men, worthy of their country: and for you that remain, you may pray for a safer fortune; . . . when she shall appear great to you, consider then that her glories were purchased by valiant men, and by men that learned their duty; by men that were sensible of dishonor when they came to act; . . . And having each one given his body to the commonwealth they receive instead thereof a most remarkable sepulchre, not that wherein they are buried so much as that other wherein their glory is laid up, on all occasions both of word and deed, to be remembered evermore; for TO FAMOUS MEN ALL THE EARTH IS A SEPULCHRE: and their virtues shall be testified not only by the inscription on stone at home but in all lands wheresoever in the unwritten record of the mind, which far beyond any monument will remain with all men everlastingly."

— Funeral Oration spoken by Pericles

Mrs. Spearman had been sick for many weeks. She struggled and fought back, and many times we thought as she did that she had defied death — only to find that once again she was slipping.

To those who donated blood for her she sent a letter of thanks and poetry she had written on Palm Sunday. "Perhaps the enclosed sonnets which I wrote on my Palm Sunday vist at home before I slipped back in a near fatal Holy Week spell may give you some idea of the depth of my gratitude to you and the others who were so generous."

THREE SONNETS FOR A VERY SPECIAL SPRING

I. Crown Minuet
The crows came shining, easing, from the Creek
And flow in holy threes a minuet
From pine and back to feeder, fat in back,
A dance of death: "Is this my time?" . . . "Not Yet."
"You must be wrong, my fears are black as you;
My lights go off and switches do not work."
From pine to feeder, back and forth, they flew
And took no hint now was the time to shirk.
I had no way to know their omen soon
Would loom a winter-long above my bed
Yet sight of luminaries—sun, stars, moon—
Would keep reminding me I was not dead.
Indeed, the sparrows came instead of crows
And taught me truly what the Father knows.
II. Whose Grave?
I looked into an open grave and cried;
Red clay lay ochre-bright against the sky
And asked myself through tears just who had died,
What faithful soul would bid her rise and gly.
Upon the slow Potomac's misty edge,
Remembering its many years of strife,
I saw the tomb of Washington beside the edge:
Proclaim "I am the Resurrection and the Life".
The columns set me dreaming in the mist
Of false teeth, Valley Forge and bloody feet,
Comparing modern muskets to a fist
And river-flares to our own hellish heat.
Alliances now bind us hand and foot
Although we think we are not after loot.
III. In Celebration
The flippancy of college, bittersweet,
Has surged in me these chilly April days,
Poignant reminder of the time when heat
Of joy and hope unending filled our ways.
Our precious careless talk of those who tried, —
Millay, or Stein or Teasdale — take your choice,
Came flowing back and shamed my new-bought life,
The "oh-my-God, the pain!" girls had a voice,
Though I held no regard for their hard strife.
Thoughts for prayer: . . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
I looked into a grave and saw the shine
Of sun and moon and stars. It was not mine."

Mrs. Spearman said, "I hope to be there to watch you graduate in a blaze of glory." She will not be there, but she will be long remembered.

George Kennan

US Objectives In Viet Nam Fail To Meet The Cost Of Involvement

(Editor's note — This is the third in a series reprinting the remarks on US Viet Nam involvement made by former ambassador George Kennan before the Senate foreign Relations Committee.)

Our motives are widely misinterpreted, and the spectacle, the spectacle emphasized and reproduced in thousands of press photographs and stories that appear in the press of the world, the spectacle of Americans inflicting grievous injury on the lives of a poor and helpless people, and particularly a people of different race and color, no matter how warranted by military necessity or by the excesses of the adversary our operations may seem to us to be or may genuinely be, this spectacle produces reactions among millions of people throughout the world profoundly detrimental to the image we would like them to hold of this country. I am not saying that this is just or right. I am saying that this is so and that it is bound in the circumstances to be so, and a victory purchased at the price of further such damage would be a hollow one in terms of our world interests, no matter what advantages it might hold from the standpoint of developments on the local scene.

Now, these are the reasons, gentlemen, why I hope that our government will restrict our military operations in Viet Nam to the minimum necessary to assure the security of our forces, and to maintain our military presence there until we can achieve a satisfactory peaceful resolution of the conflict, and these are the reasons why I hope that we will continue to pursue vigorously, and I may say consistently, the question — the questions for such a peaceful resolution of the conflict-even if this involves some moderation of our stated objectives, and even if the resulting settlement appears to us as something less than ideal.

I cannot, of course, judge the military necessities of our situation. But everything suggests to me that General Gavin is on that I can learn about its political aspects the right track in his suggestions that we should, if I understood him correctly, decide what limited areas we can safely police and defend, and restrict ourselves largely to the maintenance of our position there. I have listened with interest to the arguments that have been brought forward in opposition to his views, and I must say that I have not been much impressed with some of them. When I am told that it would be difficult to defend such enclaves it is hard for me to understand why it would be easier to defend the far greater areas to which presumably a successful escalation of our military activity would bring us.

I also find it difficult, for reasons that I won't take the time to go into here, to believe that our allies, and particularly our Western European allies, most of whom themselves have given up great territories within recent years, and sometimes in a very statesmanlike way, I find it hard to believe that we would be subject to great reproach or loss of confidence at their hands simply because we followed a defensive rather than an offensive strategy in Viet Nam at this time.

In matters such as this, it is not, in my experience, what you do that is mainly decisive. It is how you do it, and I would submit that there is more respect to be won in the opinion of this world by a resolute and courageous liquidation of unsound positions than by the most stubborn pursuit of extravagant or unpromising objectives.

And finally, when I hear it said that to adopt a defensive strategy in South Viet Nam would be to rat on our commitment to the government of that territory I am a little bewildered. I would like to know what that commitment really consists of, and how and when it was incurred. What seems to be involved here is an obligation on our part not only to defend the frontiers of a certain political entity against outside attack, but to assure the internal security of its government in circumstances where that government is unable to assure that security by its own means.

Now, any such obligation is one that goes obviously considerably further in its implications than the normal obligations of a military alliance.

If we did not incur such an obligation in any formal way, then I think we should not be inventing it for ourselves and assuring ourselves that we are bound by it today.

But is we did incur it, then I do fail to understand how it was possible to enter into any such commitment otherwise than through the constitutional processes which were meant to come into play when even commitments of lesser import than this were undertaken.

(Tomorrow — The conclusion of Mr. Kennan's remarks.)

High School Collegiates And Miss Smash Draw Attention

By DAVID ROTHMAN

Carolina students sometimes get criticized for being too provencial and for being too . . . a lot of other things.

But somebody out there likes us — well enough to imitate us.

"Somebody" is the students of Chapel Hill High School.

One of them walked into the office recently and said it's "in" to be a Carolina man before you've passed the 12th grade.

He says many high schoolers play the role so realistically that they get drunk .

At times, my source informs me, they even crash fraternity parties, and what's more, avoid revealing their true identities.

For the high schoolers, however, Graham Memorial really seems The Place.

There, they hang around the lounge or try to play pool. According to the people at the GM information desk, the young 'uns haven't succeeded at playing without being caught, since ID cards are checked.

But that doesn't mean they don't try to get in. "The same two or three" regularly attempt it, I'm told.

Jubilee? My high school friend says his buddies look forward to the occasion even more than the Carolina students do which makes me doubt his entire story.

* * *

The big question on campus, naturally is: Who's Miss Sunny Smash?

At this moment, I still don't know the identity of the gal who appeared on the front page of Wednesday's DTH, though regreatably I understand she isn't a Carolina student.

Meanwhile, speculation remains.

Miss Sunny Smash.

The type who takes your mind off exams, Viet Nam and the SPU.

Quite a gal, Miss Sunny.

The rumors continue.

Playboy Bunny?

Waitress at Harry's?

Lynda Bird in her latest hair - do after plastic surgery?

A former WRC chairman?

True, as the DTH says, there's a nine to one ratio of men to women here, but population experts insist the national ratio is about 50-50.

And some of the other girls outside the campus might be like Miss Sunny.

So we can just keep hoping . . . hoping. . . . hoping.

Arguing With A Radical: A Guide To The Beginner

Is this your trouble, friend? Every time the Vietniks set up their tables and placards in hopes of getting a "dialogue" going, you yearn to be able to stand up boldly and refute masterfully all the idiotic statements which issue forth from their terribly concerned mouths — but the only time you ever tried it you got screwed up in the Viet Nam debate because you couldn't remember who was President of Guatemala in 1954?

Well, cheer up, pal, your troubles are over! From many stimulating hours spent observing and participating in such debates, I have discovered the methods employed by radicals to seemingly take and hold the advantage. The trouble with their technique is that it is a bubble which can easily be burst by anyone who understands it. It is also necessary to know a few simple devices of debating. Therefore, if you keep in mind and practice the points mentioned here, I guarantee that you will have better results in the future.

1. In the first place, never blow your cool. There is nothing more damaging to the ability to think quickly in qny debate than getting excited. If you get flustered you will make yourself and your position look bad and will only encourage your opponent.

2. If you can, try to avoid getting personal. Indulging in personalities is worthwhile only if some twerp is carrying a Vietcong flag, calling Secretary McNamara a murderer, chanting "Hey, Hey, L.B.J., How many kids did you kill today," or some such treason. Otherwise, you may be quite willing to finance a package of razor blades for your opponent or to acquire as to when the last time was that behad a bath, but this will only waste time and will not speak well for you.

3. A favorite device of the radicals is throwing in something completely irrelevant to the matter at hand, in hopes of confusing you and getting you off a track which it would be to your advantage to pursue. This is known as the Red Herring technique. If you are talking about North Vietnamese infiltration of the South and he starts talking about the War On Poverty, or if you are discussing Vietcong terrorist bombings and he brings up CIA involvement in Guatemala, you are being thrown a Red Herring. Do not take the bait. If something he starts talking about is irrelevant, quickly slap it down by saying so. Force him to stay on the main topic.

4. In a debate you must employ verbal judo. Always capitalize on your opponent's weaknesses and use them to your advantage. You must take his statements, turn them around, and use them against him. If he pleads for "self - determination" for the South Vienamese (which really means determination of things by an organization of armed terrorists), you might inquire as to what kind of self - determination would be possible under an Asian communistic dictatorship, and also why he doesn't advocate the same thing for the North Vietnamese people. If he wants to negotiate, fine, but remind him that it takes two to negotiate and during the long bombing pause nobody on the other side seemed to be interested. Ask him how he can reconcile his professed love of civil liberties with his knowledge of the state of them under Asian communism. Things of this sort.

5. Never, never, never lose your sense of humor. This will help you because radicals don't have any. One humorous and biting comment can demolish the most high sounding theory. Be careful, though, and make sure your humor is well chosen; otherwise it will blow up in your face.

6. Be consistent and logical, or else your opponent will seize on your contradictions and use them in verbal judo against you. A little thought before hand will usually prevent you from contradicgint yourself. However, if you slip, be able to qualify yourself so as to eliminate the contradiction. It is easy to become flustered when caught in a contradiction, but remember point "one" and don't.

7. The radical will often try to justify his position with some completely ridiculous statement. A good example of this is that Swedish character who keeps writing absurd letters to the DTH saying how communists are really just a bunch of ordinary nice joes who by chance just happen to have somewhat different political ideas, and, really, he doesn't understand what all the fuss is about. Such statements are easy enough to knock down. Always watch for them and once you attack the foundation on which your opponent's whole position is based, it will cast doubt on everything he says which follows from it.

8. "The best defense is a good offense." Try to seize the initiative. If your statement is challenged, defend yourself, your opponent. Your job in any debate is to demolish the statements of your opponent.

9. Keep informed. This is the key to the whole matter. If you are not in possession of the facts you will not be able to defend your position and challenge your opponent's, and you will not do justice to the truth, which is on your side. If you are not informed, you might as well forget the whole thing, for then all the debater's skills and tricks in the world will not be able to help you.

Don't you think it might be a good thing to assign Otelia (who seems in need of a job better than one of criticising things, people and affairs connected with the University of North Carolina) to a steady job of proof reading? In a recent issue of the DTH, you three times spelled deity "diety." God doesn't have anything to do with diet, or does He?

FLAHERTY AND FILM — NET "Louisiana Story" The final of four programs showing excerpts from films by the renowned film maker Robert Flaherty presents the magnificent opening sequence of Louisiana Story, with music by Virgil Thomson. Frances Hubbard Flaherty, widow of the late documentary film maker, recalls the conditins under which the Louisiana Story was commissioned by the Standard Oil Company, then refutes her husband's critics who considered that Flaherty was an escapist — pointing out that although a number of his documentary films were about primitive, machineless people, Flaherty recognized their ability to come to terms with their environment as similar to our need to learn to live with our machines. She notes that Flaherty himself had surrendered to a machine — the camera — knowing that, left to itself, it could show us the moment of truth — in both revelation and recognition of our own world as well as that of others.

Don't laugh.

A Volkswagen police car may seem like a funny idea to you, but it makes a lot of sense to the city of Scottsboro, Alabama.

They wanted a car that could take Police Officer H. L. Wilkerson on parking meter patrol; all day, 6 days a week, in stop-and-go traffic. Without breaking down. And without breaking the taxpayers.

So, in 1964, they bought Car S-5: a VW with a dome light, siren, and 2-way radio.

That was the year of Scottsboro's only 12" snowfall. The other police cars were in trouble up to their hubcaps. But Car S-5 was a credit to the Force. It went uphill. And downhill. And Officer Wilkerson never even put the chains on.

Officer Wilkerson isn't supposed to go after speeders, for obvious reasons. But once (in 1965) he chased one. And caught him. It's hard to say which man was more surprised.

Car S-5 still averages 29 miles per gallon. It still doesn't need oil between changes. And it's never had a breakdown.

After a year and a half of continuous use, it had its clutch replaced, and its valves adjusted.

That is all.

Red China Claims Shooting Down Chinese Plane Is 'Act Of War Provocation'

TOKYO (AP) — Red China said yesterday five U. S. fighter planes intruded over the China mainland near the North Vietnamese border yesterday and shot down a Chinese plane with guided missiles. The incident, a Chinese spokesman said, was an "act of war provocation."

The Defesne Department in Washington said it was checking the report. The plane could be the first Chinese Communist aircraft shot down by the Americans in air battle during the Vietnamese war.

Peking's New China News Agency (NCNA) said the planes fought over an area to the northeast of Makwan, in Yunnan province, at 4:17 p.m. local time Thursday. Makwan is about 170 miles northwest of Hanoi. It said the downed plane was on a training flight with other Chinese aircraft.

No American planes were reported shot down. The Chinese broadcast, monitored in Tokyo, said the American aircraft fled southwestward when Chinese fighter planes counter-attacked.

NCNA quoted a spokesman for the Ministry of National Defense as saying "This is an extremely grave incident — a deliberate systematic act of war provocation by the Johnson Administratin."

It added, "The incident took place at a time when the United States is sending massive reinforcements into South Viet Nam and extending its bombing of North Viet Nam."

The clash is believed to be the first air engagement over Yunnan province, although Peking has claimed American planes have violated its air space over Yunnan.

Previously, three American planes reported missing on flights were shot down over Kwangsi and Kwangtun provinces.

The latest was a month ago, when the Chinese claimed an A3B heavy attack plane was shot down by Chinese warplanes over the Liuchou Peninsula, east of Hanoi, across the Gulf of Tonkin.

NCNA made this brief announcement:

"Five fighter planes of U. S. imperialism intruded into China's air space over the area to the northeast of Makwan, Yunnan province, at 4:17 p.m. today (Thursday) and launched guided missiles to attack Chinese aircraft in training flight. One plane was shot down.

"When Chinese fighter planes counter - attacked, the U. S. air pirates fled southwestward.

NCNA then quoted the denunciation by the Defense Department spokesman.

He said the incident "took place after the U. S. had openly declared China as its main enemy and (Secretary of State) Dean Rusk had clamored that there are of course risks of war with China."

The spokesman continued: "This cannut but rouse our high vigilance."

"The Chinese people and the Chinese people's Liberation Army are extremely indignant at this serious incident of provocation by the U. S. gangster aircraft. They have long been prepared against the sinister schemes of U. S. imperialism to extend its war of aggression. The debt in blood owed by U. S. imperialism to the Chinese people must be cleared.

"We solemnly warn the U.S. government that the great Chinese people is not to be trifled with."

Makwan is about midway between Hanoi and Kunming, the Yunnan province capital where the U. S. 14th Air Force — the famous Flying Tigers of Gen. Claire L. Chennault — was based in World War II. Hanoi at that time was a major Japanese base.

Communist MIGs, including fast MIG21s, have dueled with U. S. planes on repeated occasions in recent weeks. The dogfights led to speculation on the origin of the Communist planes.

A Pentagon spokesman said April 28 there was no evidence that Chinese Communist planes "or planes operating from Communist Chinese bases" were involved in the clashes.

He said the evidence indicated those planes were North Vietnamese aircraft.

One U. S. pilot in a recent clash reported that he came fairly close to a MIG and thought it might have been piloted by a Chinese. The Air Force was skeptical, however.

The belief in U. S. official circles was the MIG 21s were supplied by Russia and flown by North Vietnamese pilots trained by the Russians.

China is reported to have MIG21 types, but it is believed these are copies of Russian - built aircraft. So far as is known, China has recieved no modern planes since its split with Russia worsened in 1960.

Specualtion over possible clashes with Chinese planes led to discussion of U. S. policy in the event U. S. planes actually encountered Chinese fighters.

At a briefing April 29 for 700 U. S. editors and broadcasters in Washington, U. S. officials drew a distinction between a "no sanctuary policy" and the principle of "hot pursuit."

Hot pursuit, they said, means chasing an enemy during a combat engagement, even across a frontier. A "no sanctuary" policy would permit a deliberate strike at an enemy base.

During the Korean war, the officials noted, U. S. planes in hot pursuit flew across the Yalu River over Chinese territory during running engagements, but they did not attack targets in China.

While enunciating a "no sanctuary" policy for thos entering the Viet Nam war, the officials said U. S. forces would counterattack across the Chinese border only after a careful decision high in the U. S. government.

Senate Moves For New Spy Operations Committee

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee moved yesterday to scrap the present Senate system for overseeing the CIA and to establish a single group to supervise all U. S. foreign intelligence activities.

At a closed session the committee refused 11 to 6 to table and thus kill a resolution by Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy, D-Minn., to establish a new select committee to be known as the "Committee on Intelligence Operations."

Chairman J. W. Fulbright, agreed to put off a final vote until Tuesday but said the tally on the tabling motion indicated that the committee's sentiment is in favor of the resolution.

The proposed Intelligence Operations committee would replace the senate's so - called "secret seven" CIA panel made up of senior members from the Armed Services and Appropriations Committees.

Fulbright said the present group was established informally without any specific congressional action.

Fulbright said if enacted the McCarthy resolution would "normalize" the Senate - CIA relationship.

The proposed committee would be made up of three members of the Foreign Relations Committee, plus three members each from Armed Services and Appropriations committees.

The nine - man committee would review budgets and appropriations and keep itself informed of foreign intelligence and counter - intelligence activities of any U. S. agency.

Specifically named in the resolution are the Central Intelligence Agency, the Defense Intelligence Agency, the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research, and the FBI.

News Analysis

Peking Seeks Own World Revolution

A widespread purge in the Chinese Communist Party has taken on such strong anti - Soviet overtones that it suggests the Peking leaders want a permanent division of world Communism and a separate world revolutionary movement headed by the Chinese.

Peking's condemnations of the Soviet party are rising in violence and vitriol. Some of this seems connected with the situation in Viet Nam. But implication, the Russians are accused of scheming for some approach to peace there, and Peking appears to want no peace short of total humiliation of the United States.

The anti - Soviet tone of propaganda inside China became more pronounced during the visit of leaders of Albania's Communist Party, Peking's small but noisily anti - Moscow ally in Europe.

A persistent theme in the current Chinese pinpointing of enemies within the party concerns those who have been tainted by the notion that "peaceful evolution" to proletarian dictatorship is possible anywhere in the world. Peking theroists insist there can be no change except violent change.

In singling out Teng To, former editor of the party newspaper People's Daily, the military newspaper Liberation Army Daily accused him of wanting the Chinese party leadership to "step down as soon as possible." It went on:

"Is there any difference between Teng To's anti party and antisocialist clamor and the Khrushchev modern revisionists' slanders and attacks on us?"

"Khrushchev modern revisionists" is a catchall Chinese term for the Soviet leadership. The paper added ominously:

"We will certainly not let you go, nor will we let go all the freaks and monsters."

The terms "freaks and monsters" often are applied to Soviet leaders.

Intellectual leaders in China have been accused of joining "the anti - Chinese chorus of imperialists, modern revisionists and reactionaries." To hear the propaganda tell it, the Chinese party is laced with opportunists cooking up plots and — in what Peking has pictured as the Soviet style — making "frenzied attacks on socialism."

The Russians are being accused of all manner of "despicable acts" in "collusion with the Indian reactionaries against China." They are being called "accomplices of U. S. imperialism."

The Chinese army's general political department has taken the lead .Its press organs vow "to smash the criminal plots of the bourggoisie against the party and socialism." The campaign accuses antiparty elements of trying to infect Chinese youth, and by implication, of turning Chinese youth toward the road of Soviet revisionism.

"Today's youth," said People's Daily recently, "are the generation of successors to our great revolutionary case . . . The great, glorious and arduous historical task of continuing to oppose imperialism, all reactionaries and modern revisionism and to carry the socialist revolution on to the end falls on the shoulders of the younger generation."

Youth must "carry on the revolution forever without fear of its degeneration."

This is the line of an aging Politburo whose numbers may be lessened at any time by deaths. It seems to want insurance that outside ideas, and particularly Soviet ideas, will be kept out of the Chinese party.

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:
Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.
Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.
Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual
Mike Balog
Duke University

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.
Dick League
Law School
U.N.C.

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

At the Demonstration . . .
- You will see a Reading Dynamics graduate read at amazing speed from a book he has never seen before and then tell in detail what he has read.
- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?
Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?
Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

UNC, Six Others Chase Maryland In ACC Track

COLUMBIA (AP) — To the other seven teams in the Atlantic Coast Conference, the championship track meet usually boils down to an annual chase after the Terrapins from Maryland.

The Terps have won 10 of the 11 ACC track championships and almost nobody expects Maryland to finish anything but first in the two - day qualifying trials at the University of South Carolina's Rex Enright Athletic Center.

Seventeen track and field events are scheduled. The qualifying trials tody will narrow the large field to eight runners in each of the track events to accommodate South Carolina's 8 - lane oval.

"It's the same thing again," lamented Sout Carolina Coach Weems Baskin. "Maryland has the best track team in this part of the country.

"They have 37 entered and every one is a topnotch athlete," he added.

Baskin figures that his team and UNC will be battling for second place.

Clemson sand Duke come next in another bracket," said Baskin "and North Carolina State, Virginia and Wake Forest should make up another bracket."

Two of the Terrapin entries, high jumper Frank Costello and javelin thrower Russ White, will be defending champions in the meet. Costello's 7-1 leap against the Tar Heels a month ago is regarded as one of the oustanding achievements of the current season.

White sailed his javelin 243 feet, 5 inches for the meet record. But teammate Richard Dull is the fourth - ranked javelin man in the United States with a throw of 243 feet. 5 inches.

As an added incentive this year, the first three place - winners in each event at Columbia will compete against similar winners of the Southeastern Conference's championship next weekend at Athens, Ga.

McRae's Battling Parmer For ACC Pitching Crown

GREENSBORO (AP) — Sophomore George McRae of champion North Carolina and junior Bill Parmer of Clemson, both righthanders, are headed toward the finish still locked in a tie for the Atlantic Coast Conference pitching lead and with a serious challenge lurking to the rear.

McRae and Parmer own 4-0 records, the only unbeaten pitchers left in the conference with the minimum four decisions required for contention.

Hot on their heels are Danny Walker of North Carolina and Charles Watson of Clemson, each with 61- records according to latest ACC Service Bureau compilations.

McRae also is the conference pace setter in earned run average with an outstadning 1.06. He has given up only six runs altogether and only four of them have been earned.

Bobby Bryant of South Carolina, the kick return specialist of the Gamecock football team, also remains in contention for the pitching title at 5-1 and has the second best earned run average, 1.62.

Trailing in earned run average are Loveard McMichael of South Carolina at 1.83 and Mark Harris of Maryland with 1.91. McMichael holds his place despite a losing record of 2-5. Harris has a 4-3 record.

Ned Turnball of Virginia, winner of only three games in ten decisions, continued to hold first place in strikeouts with 84. Watson is next with 63.

Three Top SC Track

FR. EUSTIS, Va. (AP) — William and Mary, West Virginia and defending champion Furman are favored in the battle for the team-title in the 42nd annual Southern Conference Track meet that gets under way here today.

Trials are scheduled today in all running events up to the mile and in five field events—broad jump, shot put, javelin, discus and triple jump. Finals in the 17 events begin at 4:30.

The Mountaineers' returning title holders are Jack Carter in the pole valult, Steve Stahovic in the javelin and Maruine Moon in the triple jump. Back for the Paladins are Avery Sayer in the 3- mile, Lavern Barrs in the 120 - yard high hurdles and Gee Merritt in the broad jump.

William and Mary's hold over champions are distance ace Jim Johnson in the mile and Roger Bates in the shot put. Also back are John Crotty of VMI in the 880 - yard run and Gary Pinder of The Citadel in the 440 - yard dash.

Junior ace Bob Crute of Richmond is favored in the 100 and 220 - yard dashes, both won last year by Alan Turner of Davidson.

Several Varsity Prospects

Lovingood's 'Best Team Ever'

By JOEY LEIGH
Special To The DTH

Bill Lovingood, in his fourth year as freshman baseball coach, has termed the 1966 Tar Baby squad "overall the best I've had since I've been here."

Lovingood has had a fine four years, winning 50 while losing only 23 games. A great deal of this credit must be given to the recruiting efforts of Lovingood and varisty caoch Walt Rabb.

"June is the recruiting month," said Lovingood. "I usually spend from 24 - 30 days on the road, and in this time, I'll watch about 24-30 Legion ball games."

"Charlotte's Post 9 was the center of attention last summer," stated the freshman coach. "We tried to get as many of those boys as we could. They were not only good ball players, but also had a history of winning, which is important."

Lovingood considered Garry Hill to be the "king pin" as the Charlotte Post 9 boys formed the nucleus of this year's ball club. With Hill from Charlotte came Robert Rhodes, Ronnie Lemonds and Skippy Hull.

Other recruits were: outfielders Gary Tilley from Pilot Mountain, Neil Wester from Charlotte (another Legion post), Klem Medley from Greensboro, pitcher John Yancey from Newton and shortstop Joe Swain from Durham.

OTHERS DEVELOPED

"I threw these nine out there with about 40 other tryouts," continued Lovingood. "I cut down to 25 when the season began. Others have come along to do creditable jobs, such as second baseman Mike Vannoy from Winston - Salem and first baseman Danny Leigh from Chapel Hill.

Lovingood's freshman team owns a 10 - 4 reocrd, 13-4 if you count three practice games, one a 4-2 victory over the varsity. "The freshman always play 17-20 games," said Lovingood. "This makes for a good freshman baseball program, giving us a chance to develop the personnel."

Out of this year's squad, Lovingood said he believes that eight to 12 men have a fine chance to make the varsity. They may not break into the starting line - up their sophomore year, but will play some ball their last two years.

Lovingood named Rhodes, Hill and Yancey as top varsity pitching prospects, Lemonds and Hull as solid .300 hitters and Vannoy as a hustling, scrappy, fine - fielding, switch hitting second baseman.

FINE PROSPECT

"Yancey (1-3) is potentially a fine prospect," said Lovingood. "His record is misleading. He just hasn't received the greatest support in the field."

BILL LOVINGOOD

The 190 - pound Hill has six victories, four of them shutouts, has struck out 45 and walked only eight in 43 innings, and has allowed but one run, an unearned one. Thus his ERA is 0.00. Said Lovingood, "I think that not playing Garry in the outfield has helped his pitching." Batting .375 for the Tar Babies, Hill has been used as a pinch hitter and substitute outfielder.

"Rhodes has always been in the shadow of Garry Hill his whole life and now at UNC," said Lovingood. "He will make a fine college reliever or starter. He and Garry both keep the ball low, so that when they get knocked out, you know it's a good team."

Besides these varsity — caliber pitchers, outfielders Medley, Wester and Tilley have performed well and will have a shot at the varsity.

TOP HITTER

Medley, the lead - off hitter, is leading the team in hits (21), in batting average (.411) and in runs scored (16). "In the last few games, Klem has made five outstanding catches and hit at a blistering .650 pace with 13 hits in 20 at bats," said Lovingood.

Although Tilley and Wester haven't been batting as high as Medley, they have jelled to become a fine outfield combination a rating by Lovingood as "the best outfield I've ever had" shows the esteem in which this trio, along with Dave Bevacqua, is held.

"Joe Swain has the finest arm in the infield," said Lovingood. "He has been slow to get started after we changed him from second to short." Strickland has been alternating with Swain and is one of the teams leading hitters at .370.

Leigh, the RBI co - leader with 12, "has found his position at first base," according to Lovingood. "Danny has has come through with some critical base hits and there's no stronger boy on the ball club," he added.

Catcher Hull is tied with Leigh for the RBI lead and is batting a "cool" .353. "if there's one guy that sort of takes charge and is the team leader on the field, it would have to be Skippy Hull," said Lovingood. Hill said of his battery mate, good naturedly, "He's the team leader if you mean the guy who talks the most."

LEADS IN THREE

Vannoy is the team leader in three departments. He is tops in stolen bases with seven and walks with 14 and has the dubious honor of having the greatest number of strikeouts to his credit (9).

"My big regret," explained Lovingood, "is that some of the players on the bench may have some undiscovered talent. Out of 25 men, some are not going to be able to play."

"The last few games, we've been moving that bat, not taking third strikes," the freshman mentor continued. "We are not playing the defense that the varsity is, but our pitchers are doing extremely well, having given up the fewest number of walks for the past five years."

Although the team batting average is only about .260, Lovingood rates his club as good hitters, on the three point scale of poor, good and excellent.

Whether the recruiting process, the players' abilities, their team work, or their tremendous desire to win is the key to the Tar Babies success, Lovingood feels that the "outlook for the next three years is not dark by any means."

Freshman Has Bettered Conference Discus Record; Tosses Shot, Too

By BOB CURRIE

There is a new spectre on the track, a cause of excitement among Carolina fans. His name is Kent Keif Svensson, he stands 6-0, weighs 230, and he has the best potential of any shot putter or discus thrower to enter the University in a long time.

As a freshman at UNC Kent has already bettered both the varsity and freshman records in the discus as well as the ACC record. The previous varsity record was 164' 5 1-4", set last year by Bo Wood; the conference record stands at 175' 1". Kent's best toss this year was 176' 11", which he did against the Duke freshmen last Friday, May 6. If he were competing in varsity competition now, his mark would put him in the top 15 discus throwers in the nation for the current year. Kent also holds the freshman shot put record, 50' 6".

One of the Best

As it is, Carolina varsity track coach Joe Hilton considers him to be one of the best in the East.

"Right now, Kent is throwing well enough to beat any freshman in the area. The top mark for varsity discus in the nation is now 191' and a fraction, which is pretty far ahead of Kent's distance, but he is growing stronger and I feel that in time he will be able to add several feet to his throw," comments Hilton.

Kent, a native of Lund, Sweden, is used to heavier competition, though, in his homeland, where the athletic setup is different than in the U. S. "In Sweden the athletes do not represent the schools as they do here," puffed Svensson after circuiting the track to loosen up for his afternoon workout. "We compete in athletic clubs. I represent the IFK Lund Club (he abbreviated the name to avoid the awkward spelling). My coach, Elof Nilsson, was not only the coach for our club but he was assigned to instruct all the athletes in a certain district, not at all like the program here at Carolina."

Heard About UNC

The son of a heating foreman at the University of Lund, Kent first became interested in coming to Carolina three years ago when a friend of his, Carl Sarndall, a high jumper on the same club told him of the physical education facilities and the competitive program at UNC. Sarndall was attending Carolina at the time, studying for his masters degree in biochemistry.

Aspiring to get a degree in physical education, Kent was impressed with what he heard and so after corresponding with Coach Hilton, he decided to become a Tar Heel.

"When I first met Kent after a slight mix-up, I was surprised to see him so poised and at ease," admits Hilton. "Not knowing how accustomed he was to speaking English or how familiar he was with our customs, I wasn't sure of what to expect. I found, however, that the only thing he lacked was a knowledge of our slang words.

Mangum Advances In Mural Playoffs

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The Mangum Mugs pounded the Craige C Clowns, 19-9, to advance to the semi - final round of the residence hall intramural softball tournament. Mangum (4-0) will meet the Ehringhaus C Nubs, who also won Wednesday over the Avery Alcoholics, 5-2.

Danley paced Mangum with three hits, including a home run. Elliott added a triple and a single. Mangum took advantage of 11 Craige walks. Barker slugged a home run for the Clowns.

Jimmy Byrd had two hits and scored two runs in leading Ehringhaus to their win over Avery. Jim Sheehan, Joe Fratangelo and Bill Spain scored the other Nub runs.

Morrison G advanced to the quarterfinals with an 8-0 win over the Morrison H. Marauders. Mull blanked the Marauders on just two hits. He loaded the bases in the first inning, but got out of the jam and had no trouble after that. With their victory, Morrison G(4-0) plays the Old West Stubs (4-0).

The Everett Rogah also moved into the quarterfinals by defeating the Graham Bells, 10-6. Tommy Dail slammed a home run and a double and Jim Hugenschmidt had three hits and scored three runs. Everett broke a 5-5 tie with two runs on Lupton's single and later added three more. The Rogah (6-0) play the Connor UFO's (5-0).

DU Blue II eliminated Sigma Nu A from the fraternity tournament, 7-3. Fumble - fingered Sigma Nu committed four errors in the second inning to let in four DU runs.

Feingold singled in the winning run as ZBT edged Sig Ep, 12-11. Kohn and Cohen had home runs for ZBT. Down by 11-4, ZBT rallied for seven runs to tie, then won in the last inning.

The Kappa Psi Choppers belted the Pi Kappa Phi Baena, 15-8. Minton had a pair of doubles in the first inning as Kappa Psi scored nine times. Craig Meads had a home run in the second. Pi Kap Phi scored eight runs in the first, but that shot their wad for the day.

KA Blue I held off DU III, 11-10. Simons had a home run as KA jumped to 7-4, 9-4 and 11-6 leads. Bennett's home run in the last inning brought DU to within one run.

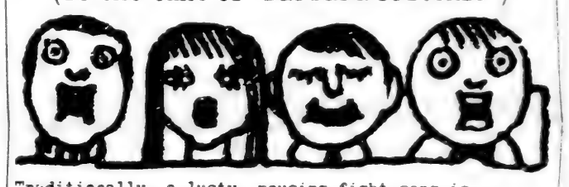
TEP crushed ZBT, 12-3. Bloom and Kleitman hammered triples to pace TEP to the easy victory.

Dental School thumped Law III Blue, 15-2. Morris and Evans had two doubles each to lead the dentists' attack. Dental School scored eight runs in the last inning.

Presenting The Drinking Song for Sprite:

"ROAR, SOFT-DRINK, ROAR!"

(To the tune of "Barbara Fritchie")



Traditionally, a lusty, rousing fight song is de rigeur for every worthy cause and institution. But we wrote a song for Sprite anyway. We'd like you to sing it while drinking Sprite, though this may cause some choking and coughing. So what? It's all in good, clean fun. And speaking of good, clean things, what about the taste of Sprite? It's good. It's clean. However, good clean things may not exactly be your idea of jollies. In that case, remember that Sprite is also very refreshing. "Tart and tingling," in fact. And very collegiate. And maybe we'd better quit while we're ahead. So here it is. The Drinking Song For Sprite. And if you can get a group together to sing it--we'd be very surprised.

Roar, soft drink, roar!
You're the loudest soft drink
we ever sawr!
So tart and tingling, they couldn't keep you quiet:
The perfect drink, guy,
To sit and think by,
Or to bring instant refreshment
To any campus riot! Oooooh--
Roar, soft drink, roar!
Flip your cap, hiss and bubble,
fizz and gush!
Oh we can't think
Of any drink
That we would rather sit with!
Or (if we feel like loitering)
to hang out in the strit with!
Or sleep through English lit' with!
Roar! Soft drink! Roar!

'Kiddie Show' Lyle In RTVMP Here

By RICHARD KLEIN
Special to the DTH

Dr. Lyle

Several of the children's television programs that many Carolina students grew up on were the product of a visiting UNC professor, Dr. Harry M. Lyle of Southern Illinois University. Dr. Lyle worked closely with NBC station WMAQ-TV in Chicago in the development of many educational programs geared to young people.

Three of the best know shows the radio - television - motion picture professor was associated with were "Ding Dong School" with Professor Frances Horwich, "Zoo Parade" with Marlin Perkins and "Mr. Wizard" with Don Herbert. In all, Dr. Lyle worked closely with the service of 18 live television program tapes from NBC, several of which went on the network.

Through the years Dr. Lyle has acquired much experience in the media having served as an associate professor of speech and broadcasting, an education television consultant, a station manager and a director of educational television.

How did Dr. Lyle become one of educational television's pioneers? "It was 1954," he said, "and I was with WNBQ. The Federal Communications Commission said that there were 400,000 pre-school children in the Chicago area and asked the station if they had plans to do programs for these children."

Being more or less "pursuaded" by the FCC, the management of WNBQ gave the task of educational children's programs to the public affairs division of the station, of which Dr. Lyle was affiliated. Dr. Lyle and others scouted for talent for the productions, eventually finding such people as Professor Horwich.

"Ding Dong School" became an instant success and remained on the screen for many years. "It stayed on until 'The Price Is Right' bumped it off the air," Dr. Lyle said.

" 'Ding Dong School' created a new audience. The competition opposite of it was Hopalong Cassidy. And the children watching 'Ding Dong School' didn't always watch Hoppy."

These programs did carry commercials for their survival, but they introduced a new method for selling. "The talent insisted on doing their own comercials," Dr. Lyle said. "They rejected many commercials, including ones for aspirins. They just took a fact sheet presented to them and did the commercials from that."

Dr. Lyle felt he was most fortunate it obtaining the talent he did for the children's programs. "Don Herbert for 'Mr. Wizard' was an excellent choice. He was a good communicator, content specialist and he was personable."

There were some children's program, as 'Howdy Doody,' that Dr. Lyle could debate as to their merits. "Howdy Doody was stupid. It was nothing of real value and educators frowned on it. Elementary teachers did not consider it worthwhile."

U.S. Gov't. Has Summer Jobs For UNC Men

Students interested in and qualified for full - time summer work in the federal work-study program should make application immediately to the Student Aid Office, 2 Hanes Hall.

The federal government provides for two summer work programs, one on campus and one in the home counties of North Carolina residents. The programs are deisgned to enable needy students to earn substantial amounts during the summer, such earnings to help cover expenses for the coming acadmiec year.

To be eligible for either of the work programs, a student must show considerable financial need, on the basis of both his family's income and his individual need for the coming academic year. A student in either of the summer work programs may not be enrolled in summer school and must plan and be eligible to continue his education at the University in the fall.

The on - campus program will provide fifty jobs in various University departments. Students will work a maximum of 40 hours per week for a maximum of 14 weeks during the summer. Wages will be $2.00 per hour. Students must provide their own board and living accommodations.

The off - campus program, entitled P.A.C.E. (Plan Assuring College Education), will be coordinated by the State Board of Public Welfare. Eligible students will be placed in jobs created in non - profit, public agencies within their home counties, will work a maximum of 40 hours per week.

ed for NSA, giving it a total of $1,948.30.

The Carolina Forum did not fare as well. Legislature cut $1,000 from speakers expenses, $50 from publicity and $25 from receptions. It was given $3,830.

The Toronto Exchange was being considered when adjournment time came. Debate on the Exchange centered on what portion of the expenses Student Government should should pay and how much the individual members of the Exchange should pay. No vote could be taken.

Consideration of the budget was to continue last night at the regular session of Legislature.

Still to be considered were the budgets of The Darily Tar Heel, the Yackety - Yack, the MRC, the WRC, and numerous independent student organizations.

Phi Mu's Set 'Munch-Shine' For SS Hope

Phi Mu Sorority will set up two "You - Munch - While - We - Shine" booths Monday to raise money for Project Hope.

It is entering — along with other sororities, fraternities and residence halls — into the project sponsored by the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity.

The campus project also ties in with Phi Mu's national philanthropy, raising funds for the hospital ship SS Hope.

The Phi Mu's part in the fund raising will consist of a combination bake sale and shoe shine to be held in Y Court and in front of the Varsity Theater.

The two booths will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday.

A Phi Mu bakers booth at the campus carnival sold out completely, so this gives a second chance to those who missed out the first time around.

In the meantime, Parker has taken a slight lead over Teague in the residence hall division of the Project Hope Fund drive, with Pi Kappa Phi still leading in the fraternity division.

All those participating in the fund drive are asked to contact Tom Brantley, project director at 933-1044.

UNC Needs Larger Negro Enrollment

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Juan Cofield, newly elected UNC NAACP president, says the University should "step up recruitmen of Negro high school students.

"There are fewer Negroes enrolled in this year's freshman class than in last year's," Cofield said in an interview yesterday.

However, he added that he couldn't say if there has or hasn't been deliberate discrimination by the admissions office.

"The University," he said, "has helped and made some efforts as far as recruitment is concerned, but we know for a fact that the recruitment program as a whole has gone down." "Greater enrollmnt" was Cofield's explanation for the decline.

Asked how many Negro students there are at UNC, Cofield said, "A rough offhand figure would be about 50 undergraduates."

He pronounced this year's Negro recruitment efforts unsuccessful. We can't really judge in one year, but through our efforts this year we definitely know of one person who came to UNC because of our program.

"And we think we were an influencing factor in a couple more cases.

"Also," he said, "we've talked to juniors, and we won't know (immediately) how successful we've been with them."

Cofield said that even if the Negroes didn't come to the University, the recruitment project would make them "more aware of UNC and the things available here.

"We will probably get more and more Negro students each year," he predicted.

Once the Negroes get to UNC do professors discriminate against them because of their race? "I know of a couple of cases of this," said Cofield, "but I can't say for sure.

"There haven't been any cases (of discrimination in grading) that have been brought before the UNC chapter to my knowledge, but I can't say there have been no cases."

Cofield is asking for donations for the recruitment effort and other NAACP projects.

The Raleigh junior says the recruitment program was his group's main activity this year.

Other newly elected NAACP officers are: Lee Greene, vice-president; Francis Eagan and Phil Clay, secretaries, and James Cofield, treasurer.

serted yesterday that the defense could conceivably mail the answer Saturday or Sunday to arrive on Monday since the deadline occurs on a day when the court is closed.

The suit asks that the court issue a permanent injunction against the defendants' further enforcement of the Speaker Ban policies and declare the law unconstitutional.

The reply to the suit was originally due April 24, but an extension until May 15 was granted by the court on April 12 when Bruton asked for the postponement — largely on the grounds that members of the defense would be out of the area for a while.

"You can even play God by moving the stars, sun, moon, and planets through their daily and yearly motions and speed them up or slow them down at will."

Stupak, a Junior from Greensboro, had to study basic astonromy for two months before he even applied for the job of narrator. "Even then I didn't know if I would get the job," he said.

"A student narrator holds a race and specialized job, Stupak said. "Basically it is the job of an educator to the people seeing the show."

"All the job requires is that you know basic astronomy and know it well enough to talk about it for 50 minutes. Then you have to learn to run the Zeiss instrument. You have to be able to talk to little kids and keep their attention. And, oh yes, you have to be someone who isn't afraid of the dark."

Planetarium Hosts Gala Ball Tonight

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

The North Carolina Symphony Ball will be held tonight in the Morehead Planetarium with Governor and Mrs. Dan K. Moore acting as official hosts.

Over 150 couples composed of prominent people from all over the state will be present at the formal affair.

Invitations for the ball were sent to several hundred North Carolina citizens and acceptance of the invitation costs $100 a couple. The money raised will go to help finance the Symphony Fund.

Dr. Benjamin Swalin has been director of the symphony since 1939, when it was reorganized. It was originally founded in 1932.

The full 65 - piece orchestra will begin playing at 8:30 p.m. in the North exhibition room while the guests are greeted by Governor and Mrs. Moore in the Planetarium Rotunda.

Before entering the Planetarium, the guests will pass under the raised sabres of the Honor Guard which will be provided by the UNC Naval ROTC.

Selections from "The Sound of Music" will be played during the reception which will be followed by a buffet supper to be held in the upstairs dining room.

A musical quartet will provide dinner music for the guests who will be eating on the roof terraces, and a harpist will be playing in the dining room.

After dinner the formal ceremonies will begin in the Rotunda at 10:30 with the Governor's Waltz. The Symphony will continue playing until 11 p.m. when the Billy Knauff Orchestra from Charlotte will take over and play until 1 a.m.

The North Carolina Smphony has been holding the ball for six years. The first four years it was staged in the governor's mansion and last year it took place in the Morehead Planetarium.

Co-chairmen for the ball this year are Mrs. Nello Teer, Jr., of Durham and Micou Browne of Raleigh. Browne will also be the master of ceremonies.

The Symphony field representative, Hiram Black said that the money taken in for the Symphony Fund will be used to help offset the difference between the income and the expenditures of the symphony.

Scholarship Information Center Gets $6,400 Grant

The Scholarship Information Center (SIC), a branch of the YM-YWCA Human Relations Committee here, has received a grant of $6,400 from The Fund for the Advancement of Education, established by the Ford Foundation.

SIC was organized this year to inform southern Negro high school students of available financial assistance for college education.

The group's biggest project this year has been the printing and distribution of a 41-page booklet, "Financial Aid for Southern Negro Students."

Members of the committee have also composed and distributed information on careers, specific scholarships, specific schools and areas of study, designed to supplement the more long-term information of the book.

The idea for such a committee was made a reality through the work of Tony Mason and Brenda Bethel, co-chairmen of the Human Relations Committee; Ben Spalding, chairman of SIC; and Joan Davis, John Schoo, Phil Clay, Peter Nemenyi, Jim Medford, Nancy Wilkins, Walter Jackson, Betsy Price and Joyce Watkins.

The first edition of the book has had two printings, totaling 1,500 copies. According to SIC, 1,300 of these have been distributed, most of them at no cost.

Free copies have gone to the guidance counselors of every Negro high school in North Carolina and to other individuals and organizations in the north and south who have requested them.

Distribution has been particularly heavy in Alabama, Mississippi, Florida and Georgia, where several newspapers have printed free advertisement for SIC's services.

The committee plans to circulate 10,000 copies of the second edition next year. With the money from the grant the books will be distributed free or at prices less than cost.

This edition will be broadened in scope and size to include information on careers and discussions on the value of going to college and on how to select a college.

All scholarships except the N. C. Press Women's and MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE are financed from fundsprovided by the School of Journalism Foundation of North Carolina.

This is the first MINNEAPOLIS TRIBUNE Scholarship to be awarded at UNC. Valued at $400, it is one of 50 being set up at accredited journalism schools by the MINNEPOLIS STAR and TRIBUNE.

Stephen J. Bennett, son of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Bennett of Winston - Salem, was named editor of the UNC JOURNALIST, the Journalism School's newspaper. Ernest S. McCrary, son of Mr. and Mrs. gg. Ernest McCrary of Lenoir and former editor of THE DAILY TAR HEEL, received the Sigma Delta Chi Award as the outstanding male senior graduate.

John L. Greene Jr., son of Mrs. Beryle H. Greene of Shelby, received the Sigma Delta Chi award as the senior with the highest grade point average, and a $100 check from the Journalism Foundation for the same honor. Dean Wayne A. Danielson also presented a check for $50 to Septhen Hoar as the junior with the highest grade average.

Seven students were initiated into Kappa Tau Alpha, journalism honor society, by Prof. Norval Neil Luxon. They were Paul Bernish, Samuel Covington, John Greene Jr., Stephen Hoar, Barry Jacobs of New Orleands, La., Marion DeBose Sims III of Westfield, N. J., and G. C. Whilhoit of Albermarle.

New Press Club officers were presented. They were Paul Bernish, preident; Walter A. Jackson of Durham, vice - president; and Frances "Mikie" Wall of Shiteveill, secretary.

Fred A. Powledge, former DAILY TAR HEEL editor, now a free lance writer in New York after several years on the NEW YORK TIMES, was guest speaker.

Spearman Funeral Set At 4 p.m. Today

Funeral serivces for Mary Dale Spearman, 54, will be held today at 4 p.m. in the Chapel Hill Presbyterian Church, the Rev. Vance Barron officiating. Burial will be in Chapel Hill Memorial Cemetery.

The wife of Journalism professor Walter S. Spearman and mother of former student body president Robert Worthington Spearman died Friday at 11:55 a.m. in Memorial Hospital following a lengthy illness.

Mrs. Spearman was born in Nashville, Tenn., July 26, 1911. She was graduated from Vanderbilt University, Phi Beta Kappa, in 1933. She was a member of Gamma Phi Beta sorority.

She and her husband have lived in Chapel Hill since their marriage in August, 1937. She has worked here in public relations with Hospital Savings and Memorial Hospital and with the Computation Center.

One of the organizers and an early president of the Chapel Hill Junior Service League, she was active in many civic and state affairs, especially in organizations concerning world peace. She also took great interest in the children of Chapel Hill, serving as a cub scout den mother.

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson commented on her contribution to those with whom she lived.

MRS. SPEARMAN

"Dale Spearman was one of the vibrant personalities in the University community. She was always interested in every worthwhile University and community activity. I value greatly my associations with her. She was a dear friend."

Survivors, in addition to her husband and son, are one daughter, Mary Lindsay Spearman of New York City; her mother, Mrs. D. Y. Dale of Nashville, Tenn.; and five sisters.

Budget Balancing Fills SL Agenda

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

Attempting to balance the Student Government budget kept Student Legislature in session until midnight Thursday night.

However, the section of the budget for the Yacket Yack was recommitted to the Finance Committee, making another special session necessary next Wednesday. Final action on the budget should come then.

Finance Committee chairman Frank Longest (SP) told Legislature that projected income from student fees for next year in $221,879.68 of which over $73,900 goes to GM.

Budget requests exceed $150,000. Thus there is a deficit of more than $2,300.

Cuts were made on the floor to the Legilature's own budget, the Carolina Women's Council and The Daily Tar Heel. More cuts are expected when the Yack is considered next Wednesday.

The amendment proposed by Eric Van Loon (SP) to let Student Government pay a larger part of the Toronto Exchange budget was defeated.

Steve Salmony (UP) said Legislature must cut out "paid vacations" like the Exchange. He urged members of the Exchange to pay for its costs themselves.

David Kice (UP) replied that the program is not a "paid vacation." He said the experience is worth the cost.

Longest said, "Student Government will not pay for the liquor and expanded social activities of the Exhange. The cost per member is not a great burden and we cannot keep increasing the budget."

A standing vote was taken in defeating the change.

Careful study was given to the DTH budget. Steve Hockfield, SP floor leader, led an attack to cut its budget as closely as possible. He was unsuccessful for the most part.

The salary of the assistant sports editor was cut from $297.50 to $175.

An attempt to cut the feature editor's salary from $350 to $200 failed when Student Body Vice President Bill Purdy voted to create a tie and thus to leave the salary as reported by the Finance Committee.

Legislature cut 50 from the budget which had been alloted to them for communication with their constituents. It was pointed out that the amount gave only $1 to each member and it had not been used in the past.

The social appropriation of the CWC was cut $100 to $400 and the amount for a reception for the outstanding senior dorm woman was cut from $110 to $75.

In addition to considering hte budget, Legislature passed a bill establishing a commission to study financial organization of Student Government.

They also passed a list of appointents for the summer school student government.

A resolution extending sympathy to the family of the late Mrs. Walter Spearman passed unanimously.

Body President Bob Powell to the judicial branch and executive were approved with one exception. The appointment of David Labarre as assistant attorney general was recommitted to the Waysnad Means Committee.

An allocation of $1,000 was given to the Glee Club for their summer tour to Europe.

Resolutions calling for an investigation of the reorganization of the semester system, encouraging Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson to help get parking facilities for residents of Ehringhaus and James Residence Colleges and approving appointments were introduced.

Bills were introduced to establish a press secretary for Student Government and to provide an expense fund for him.

Richard French was sworn in to fill the vacancy in MD I.

Defense Requests Split Complaints

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

GREENSBORO — Yesterday's answer by the defendants in the Speaker Ban suit contained a motion to separate the complaints of the student plaintiffs and speaker plaintiffs and several motions to dismiss the case.

Andrew Vanore of the Attorney General's staff, a 1959 graduate of UNC, file the answer in U. S. Middle District Court here at 11 a.m. before an audience of four newsmen.

Hearings will begin on the case after 20 days, according to the clerk of court's office, because the plaintiffs are allowed that time to answer the defendants.

The answer consisted of four defenses, a motion of severance, which differentiated the claims and rights of the student plaintiffs and the speaker plaintiffs, two motions of dismissal; and a summary of admissions and denials of the plaintiffs' allegations.

Some 17 of the plaintiff's 41 allegations are admitted by the defense, 17 are denied and six are partially admitted.

One motion of dismissal was pleaded because:

"The complaint on its face shows that student plaintiffs have been denied absolutely no rights, but, to the contrary, have been accorded absolute freedom to see, speak, hear, associate, demonstrate, congregate and assemble and do any and all acts specifically guaranteed by any section of our Constitution or implied there."

The defendants added:

"The complaint does not allege any violation of any constitutionally guaranteed rights in respect to the student plaintiffs. In fact, the only right allegedly breached in respect to the students is that of the right to hear."

"However, the complaint shows that the students were not denied the right 'to hear' but they could and did listen to the plaintiffs Aptheker and Wilkinson while standing on the property of the campus of the University of North Carolina and other places, could have listened to them on radio, television or any other communication system and were not in fact forbidden nor prevented from hearing the plaintiffs (Frank) Wilkinson & (Herbert) Aptheker nor any person they desire 'to hear.'"

The defendants — Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, University President William C. Friday and the UNC Board of Trustees — filed another motion for dismissal on the grounds that:

"If any rights were denied plaintiffs Wilkinson and Aptheker, which defendants deny, at the two specific times outlined in the complaint, such denial arising under a set of unique circumstances which can never happen again and any question as to plaintiffs Wilkinson and Aptheker's rights at that time are therefore moot."

The defendants' answer further charges:

"Because of the zeal of the student plaintiffs to set up a 'test case' purely for litigation purposes, the invitations to plaintiffs prior to establishment of standard procedures now in effect for carrying out the provisions of (the Speaker Ban Law) in a resonable and constitutional manner."

"The alleged claims of the student plaintiffs," the defense reads, "do not arise out of the same transaction, occurrence, or series of transactions or occurences as those of the plaintiffs, Wilkinson and Aptheker."

The defendants also note, "The circumstances surrounding the action taken in respect to plaintiffs Wilkinson and Aptheker have materially changed; cannot possibly reoccur; were not taken persuant to the statutes and regulations purportedly attacked by this complaint; and leave the question of any possible violation of plaintiffs Wilkinson and Aptheker's rights in a moot condition because of the unique timing of the events brought about by students."

The answer also asserts that Aptheker and Wilkinson were denied speaking permission "for this present semester only," and that the denial "does not forclose or prohibit consideration of further invitations" to them in the future.

led a riot on the West Coast when a subcomittee of the House Committee on Un-American Activities attempted to hold a hearing" and "invoked the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution when he was questioned by a congressional committee."

Also provided in the defense are statements of findings from the U. S. Congress and Supreme Court describing the Communist movement in the U. S. as presenting "a clear and present danger to the security of the United States and to the existence of free American institutions."

Among the evidence cited by the defendants is a statement that "Wilkinson promoted and

A. S. Chipsi III Captures State Frog Jumping Crown

By BILL AMLONG
DTH Staff Writer

A Carolina Chi Psi will carry the colors of this state to the Natonal Frog Jumping Contest in Calavaris County, California, today.

A. S. (for Alpha Sigma Chapter) Chipsi III, a magnificent championship bullfrog with a throaty croak and well-muscled hind legs, won the state competition on the Capitol lawn in Raleigh Friday by leaping a long 12 feet, 2 inches.

Cheering him were 25 Chi Psi brothers dressed appropriately for the affair — like the frog's bearded manager, Jim Little, who wore a tuxedo tie shirt, cumberbund and dinner jacket over a pair of wheat jeans and sandals.

A. S. Chipsi III was carried to the starting line on a silver tray — along with A. S. Chipsi's I, II, IV and V and Little Dan Moore, the smallest of six Chi Psi entires.

Since A. S. Chipsi III won, his "pledge brothers" are going to be set free, said Little. "If we'd lost, we were going to eat them," he said.

It was quite a move up in the world for A. S. Chipsi III, who until midnight Thursday had been anonymously croacking his life away in a "secret Chapel Hill pond" where the Chi Psi's found him.

He might not have made it though, if it hadn't been for the "extensive early morning training" he was put through by Christophcer Randolp, who showed for the event in a tux outfit with madras pants and sneakers.

And even so, he almost did not make it anyway.

An entry of Theta Chi's at State acutally jumped further — 12 feet, 11 inches — than did Chipsi, but was disqualified after Little protested about the Theta Chi trainer's touching the frog.

As it was, though, Chipsi was declared the winner, the jumpingest bullfrog in North Carolina. As such, he was quickly re- named "Tar heel Terror IV" and packed on a plane for California.

There he'll compete against bullfrogs from all over the nation in a spectacular sporting event that last year drew 60,000 persons to see the winner jump only 11 feet, 2 inches — a full foot shorter than Chipsi's Friday performance.

And, if he leaps further than 17 feet, 1 1-2 inches he'll win $1,000 for breaking the national record.

Even if he does, though, things won't change that much. He'll always be just plain, old A. S. Chipsi III to his fraternity brothers.

Hunt And Kill

Ursella Andress playing the lead in her latest movie "The 10th Victim" not only captures our attention as good old sex-craving males who came just to see her first and the film second -- Miss Andress gets to the very heart of a basic problem, which is, what in the hell are we going to do for excitement when there aren't any wars around to fight?

Granted, this is forward-looking in view of Viet Nam.

In "The 10th Victim" Ursella and Marcello Mastroianni chase each other around the world each earnestly trying to kill the other before they themselves get killed.

Ridiculous?

Of course.

Ridiculous today, maybe, but not a few years from now when wars will have been wiped from the face of the earth and men get tired of scrabble 1934-style to keep themselves from sinking into what Terry Southern has called "easeful death" in "The Loved One."

In view of these facts, however, we propose a game here at Carolina which has been tried at various other college campuses.

The game is called "The Hunt." The rules are just like in the movie. There is a club, with equal numbers of hunters and hunted. Each member has a victim and is another member's victim.

The only difference is that nobody really gets killed.

Imagine a student walking past the lower quad or Cobb dorm and wump! A pillow hits him squarely on the heard. A note attached to the pillow reads: "You have just been crushed with a two-ton safe. You are now dead. Signed, your hunter."

Or perhaps there is the unsuspecting student who received a formal letter addressed to him from the dean of men. Meticulous care has been taken by the hunter to duplicate all details of South Building stationary.

And at the very bottom of the letter, it doesn't really matter what the letter says, there is a note attached: "You have just spent approximately 35 seconds reading this letter. Since the ink has been treated to release poisonous fumes you died from asphyxiation before getting to the second sentence. Signed, your hunter."

The thrill of the game is that you never know in what bizzare way your hunter will strike, and you must be on the lookout at all times. Your objective is to kill your victim before your hunter kills you, and the various methods of murder are graded by how unique and effective they are, and how much elaborate shenegans the hunter has to go through to accomplish his objective.

In this way murder becomes a way of life, so to speak, and the will to live becomes a game of the survival of the fittest in the literal sense.

We couldn't think of a better way to spend our free times before exams start next week. And maybe our hunter will succeed.

At least we could pretend the threat of the draft is not so threatening by our vicarious death before graduation, and then again our hunter may be a little too zealous about the game and succeed in killing us.

And by getting killed this way one needn't worry about whether he believes in the Viet Nam war. Face it, potential draftee, this way is the only honorable way out, as the Japs used to say.

Curse Foiled

The Minnesota Daily

After a weekend of worrying and researching, we have reached the conclusion that an ad in one of last week's Dailys merely suffered a typographical error and was not a statement of fact.

THE AD READ: "Attention, Seniors! Become a Montessori Teacher — Midwest Curse begins July 5". We've heard such predictions before, of course. There was the group of people who holed themselves up in a Far Western town a few years ago because they believed the world was coming to an end. It didn't.

But still, curse is more likely than the end of the world. And when the date is the day after Independence Day, the prediction seemed to have political overtones as well.

But a check with the advertising department revealed only that a tired proofreader had allowed the error to pass. It was disappointing, in a way. A curse on the Midwest would have made a great news story.

Viet Cong Cruel, Arrogant, But The Battle Is Not Ours

(Editor's note — This is the last in a series reprinting the remarks on US Viet Nam involvement made by former ambassador George Kennan before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.)

Now, just two concluding observations: I would like it understood that what I have said here implies nothing but the highest respect and admiration for the fighting qualities of our forces in the field. I have the greatest confidence in them, men and commanders alike. I have not doubt, in fact, that they can and will, if duty requires, produce before this thing is over military results thatwill surprise both our skeptical friends and our arrogant adversaries. It is not their fighting qualities, it is the purpose to which they are being employed that evokes my skepticism.

Secondly, I would like to say I am trying to look at this whole problem not from the moral standpoint but from the practical one. I see in the Viet Cong a band of ruthless fanatics, partly misled, perhaps by the propaganda that has been drummed into them, but cruel in their purposes, dictatorial, and oppressive in their aims. I am not conscious of having any sympathy for them. I think their claim to represent the people of South Viet Nam is unfounded and arrogant and outrageous. A country which fell under this exclusive power would have my deepest sympahy, and I would hope that this evenutality, at any rate, would be avoided by a restrained and moderate policy on our part in South Viet Nam.

But, our country should not be asked, and should not ask of itself, to shoulder the main burden of determining the political realities in any other country, and particularly not in one remote from our shores, from our culture and from the experience of our people. This is not only not our business, but I don't think we can do it successfully.

In saying this, I am only paraphasing and very poorly, the words once muttered by one who had at one time been a member of the United States Senate, and who, had a foreign relations committee existed in his day, would unquestionably have been a member of it. This was John Quincy Adams, and I would like your permission to recall, before I close, the words of his that I have in mind. They were spoken in this city 145 years ago on the Fourth of July, 1821. Some of you may be familiar with them but they stand repeating at this moment:

"Wherever the standard of freedom and independence has been or shall be unfurled, there," Adams said, "will be America's heart, her benedictions, and her prayers But she does not abroad," he went on "in search of monsters to destroy. She is the well-wisher to the freedom and independence of all. She is the champion and vindicator only of her own. She will recommend the general cause by the countenance of her voice, and by the benignant sympathy of her example. She well knows that by once enlisting under other banners than her own, were they even the banners of foreign independence, she would involve herself beyond the power of extrication, in all the wars of interest and intrigue, of individual avarice, envy and ambition, which assume the colors and usurp the standards of freedom: The fundamental maxims of her policy would insensibly change from liberty to force . . . She might become the dictatress of the world. She would no longer be the ruler of her own spirit."

Now, gentlemen, I don't know exactly what John Quincy Adams had in mind when he spoke those words, but I think that without knowing it, he spoke very directly and very pertinently to us here today.

Letters To The Editor

Carolina Men, Coeds At Odds

Carolina Coeds Beware

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

To all Carolina Coeds:

Some of you may be vaguely familiar with the fact that General Hersey's Selective Service will, in all probability, be drafting the lower percentages of the four undergraduate classes in the coming year. This will be done in spite of the "harangue" in Y court. The males who find themselves firmly established in these lower percentages are understandably concerned with the propsects of the future. You even hear some talk of studying!

One simple solution to the tension created by the General's plans has come to my attention. If each and every one of you girls would cease studying for the upcoming exams it is entirely likely that your grades would place you in that lower percentage of each class which is to be affected by the draft. The General will be rendered help less on this campus. They do not draw on the draft for the WACs.

I might add for incentive that any reduction of the nine to one ratio you currently enjoy will severely curtail the ability ity of many of you to compete in the social arena.

Brantley's Back Again

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I do wish your male readers would stop complaining about the female of the species, both Northern and Southern varieties. If you don't like us, ignore us. Believe me, that would hurt much more than this constant drivel in the morning paper. I have yet to discover whether these slanderous young men actually despise women, or whether we are confronted with a simple case of diarrhea of the mouth.

I was born in the North but brought up in the South, so I don't know into which class I fall. If recent definitions are accursy Long Island than dulcet-ding-dong-yousy Long Island than dulcetding - dong - youall, so I suppose in that respect I'm a "loud Yanke ebroad." I have also recently come to the unfortunate realization that I own four orange dresses; O myriad gentleman gripers, where do I fall in the clothing category? Upon occasion, I have been known to participate in an intelligent and coherent conversation. Which mold is that? And I have yet to be seen in public in hair rollers — sorry about that.

Gentlemen of the Western World, would you like to hear about your faults? Shall I discuss your tatered, grimy blue jeans or your unshaven counternances? Would you like me to mention your unwashed, uncombed, uncut tresses or your sockless feet? How about your 8,008 identical monogrammed sweaters? Shall I say that I have noticed that, Yankee or Southern, you are either pushy and obnoxious or spineless and mealy - mouthed? Shall I say your conversations are fatally boring, your attidues are imature and bigoted, your so - called convictions strikingly resemble wet washrags, and your treatment of young ladies is insufferably rude, thoughtless, and generally abominable?

Aha! You rise up in arms against this subverisve female element. Of course you don't want me to say those things; they aren't true for all of the male populus.

Why not divert your energies into more productive channels? You could be inventing a cure for cancer or figuring out a foolproof draft dodge. Nobody forces you to date these young ladies you hate so much; you can't even have to talk to them. Your griping will not save the world or even change the female sex. But are you prepared to a feale retaliation en masse?

I'll make a deal with you. If you'll stop griping about women, we'll ignor the whole unpleasant incident this time. The adage is hackneyed but accurate: "Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned." Patience lasts only so long. After that the claws descend upon you.

Cornell Student Is Drafted After He Changes Colleges

Editor's note — The amazing tale of woc appeared recently in the Cornell Daily Sun. It was written as a letter to the editor by Rudolf E. Zwicklbauer of the Cornell class of 1968.)

May 4, 1966, shall always stay in my memory. Why? That is the day I was to enter the Armed Forces — during my first semester at Cornell.

My local board was very considerate, however, as they cancelled my induction until June. At least I can finish one semester at Cornell — the university I have always wanted to attend.

Why am I writing you? Mainly because I wish to inform Cornellians not to transfer. I transferred twice — from Michigan State University to Paul Smith's College (a small two year school in northern New York State) to Cornell. Hotel administration has always been my major, but I lost a semester in each transfer. It may not even be a total of one year lost as hotel has not notified me of all transfer credits. This loss through transfer has determined by induction.

I have an associate in Applied Science degree from Paul Smith's College and the Selective Service will not let me work for my B. S. — even though I made Dean's List three times in two years at Paul Smith's.

Needles to say, this entire situation has placed undue pressure on me and my attitude toward college was shattered. I was the first student from Paul Smith's College to be accepted to Cornell in a number of years and I am quite proud of that. I was determined to make everyone connected with my acceptance just as proud. Then, everything fell apart and I really did not (and to not) know where I stand.

I certainly hope that I may return to Cornell this September and work toward my degree. I will appeal my next induction notice and do anything to make them see what they are doing to me. After all, they must have a heart!

How I envy everyone busily making plans to return in September. I have preregistered, but now I wait.

Can anyone help?

Merger Of TV Stations Advisable

By RICHARD KLEIN

The next move in the state educational television system will probably be to the Charlotte area. There, in Concord, N. C., a federal grant to put channel 59 on the air has already been applied for. This could be a mistake.

There are three educational television stations now on the air in North Carolina. Two of these, WUNC-TV and WUNB-TV are owned and operated by the University of North Carolina. The third station is WTVI, channel 42, in Charlotte which is owned and operated by the public school system there. WTVI is charerted to serve local people with largely local material, so they say at the station.

While WTVI does largely depend on the "local" slant for its survival, channel 42 is closely affliated with the National Educational Television system and runs many of its programs every night. Many more NET shows are seen on WTVI than locally produced programs.

When the next state educational station begins broadcasting in Concord Charlotte there is likely to be repetition in programming. The new station will be closely alligned with WUNC-TV, which itself has a heavy schedule of NET productions.

While educational television stations should definitely be encouraged and supported, more than one in any market could be dangerous. For the audience that is receptive to educational television is still small, even though it is growing. Dividing the Charlotte area between two competing educational stations is unwise.

Soon Charlotte will have six television stations, including channels 42 and 59. Even a market as large as Charlotte's will probably find itself grasping for viewers with six stations. To our knowledge, only New York City has more than six stations serving it. (The other Charlotte stations are WBTV, WSOC-TV, WCCB-TV and WCTI—which will sign on this fall.)

To divide the educational television audience between two stations makes little sense since many of their programs are bound to be the same. Even the local slant WTVI is after may be in jeopardy when Charlotte station WCTI goes on the air next fall. WCTI, channel 36, has made a point of saying they will largely depend upon local talent and local production for their programming.

The most ideal solution to the situation is a merger of efforts between the two television stations. The University of North Carolina's new station should work with, not against, the Charlotte school system's station. A combined powerhouse like that would be a progressive step in the right direction for educational television in North Carolina.

Martz Gets Guggenheim Fellowship

A University of North Carolina political science professor has received a Guggenheim Fellowship to study class and political culture next year in Peru and Ecuador. He is Prof. John D. Martz, a specialist in Latin American political parties and movements.

A native of Latrobe, Pa., Martz joined the faculty here in 1963 and is assistant director of the Institute of Latin American Studies. He has served as political science director of graduate studies and as area studies coordinator for the UNC Peace Corps Project on Central America.

A magna cum laude graduate of Harvard, he holds the masters degree from George Washington University and the doctorate from UNC. He is author of four books on Latin American political movements and numerous articles in professal journals.

Son of Col. and Mrs. John D. Martz Jr., former Latrobe residents who have retired in Clearwater, Fla., he is married to the former Mary Jeanne Reid of Jacksonville, Fla., a candidate for the Ph.D. degree at Duke. His grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Harry L. Sipe, live in Latrobe.

Pianist Spivak Plays Thursday

Raul Spivak, outstanding Latin American pianist and artist - in - residence at North Carolina State University, will present a recital at the University of North Carolina Thursday, May 19.

The RCA Victor recording artist will play under the sponsorship of the UNC chapter of Phi Mu Alpha, the national professional music fraternity. Proceeds will go to the fraternity's James Michael Barham Scholarship Fund.

Spivak, who appeared at UNC in March during Phi Mu Alpha's Festival of Contemporary Music, will perform in Memorial Hall beginning at 8 p.m. Tickets will cost $1.00 and may be bought at the door or in advance at Kemp's, The Record Bar, Ledbetter - Pickard's and Danziger's.

The scholarship fund was set up in 1962 as a memorial to a fraternity officer who died during his term of office. It will be used to establish an annual award to a student in the UNC Department of Music.

Spivak, who is considered one of Latin America's most prominent musicians, has performed with distinction throughout this hemisphere and Europe. In the United States he has presented recitals at Carnegie Hall and Town Hall in New York City and has appeared as solist with such orchestras as the New York Philharmonic, the Detroit Symphony and the University of Miami Symphony.

Born in Buenos Aires, Argentina he studied piano, harmony and composition in his native land and was a student of Edward Steuerman, Alexander Borovsky and Arthur Borgusky and Arthur Schnabel in this country and in Europe. He has been a faculty member at the National Conservatory of Music in Buenos Aires and at the University of La Plata. His master classes and work in chamber music as well as in conducting symphonic concerts have revealed his musical depth and versaility.

For his apperances with such eminent conductors as Ansermet, Kemperer, Paray and Villa - Lobos and for his recitals, Spivak has been called "a virtuoso of the first magnitude" (Washington TIMES HERALD), "an artist of unusual distinction" (New York POST), and "a musician's musician (Miami HERALD).

He has been living in Raleigh since last September.

Friday Chairs AID Meeting

University of North Carolina President William Friday presided earlier this week as chairman of the U. S. State Department's Agency for International Development (AID) advisory committee on university participation in international programs of the government of the United States.

Meeting at the State Department Building in Washington, D. C. for a discussion of "Long Term Overseas Commitments of the U. S. Government" and other topics, the AID university committee was composed also of President Harlan Hatcher of the University of Michigan, President Grayson Kirk of Columbia University; Logan Wilson, executive director of the American Council on Education; Louis Benezet, chairman of the American Council on Education; Charles McCurdy of the AAUP; Russell Thackrey of the American Association of State Universities; Chancellor John T. Caldwell of N. C. State University, and others.

Musician Wins Full Fellowship

Jonathan Arterton, a junior from Washington, D. C., has been awarded a full fellowship for this summer's session of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass.

The Center, founded by Serge Koussevitzky in 1940, is the summer home of the Boston Symphony and boasts such names as Erich Leinsdorf, Joseph Silverstein, Victor Babin, Gunther Schuller, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Howard Hanson, Charles Munch, Gregor Piatigorsky, William Schuman, Harold Spivacke, Isaac Stern, Roger Sessions, Paul Callaway, Roger Voisin, Sir Adrain Boul and Phyllis Curtin.

UNC Dentist Receives Grant

Dr. H. Wayne Mohorn, an instructor in operative dentistry and endodontics at the UNC School of Dentistry, has been awarded one of eight national teacher training fellowships.

The fellowships are provided by the American Fund for Dental Education and each is valued at $6,000 a year.

Dr. Mohorn will enter the University of Michigan School of Dentistry next fall for two years of study leading to a master's degree in endodontics.

AFDE has awarded more than $160,000 in fellowships since its creation in 1955. The grants are to encourage more dentists to go into teaching on a fulltime basis.

Dr. Mohorn, a native of Halifax County, received his dental degree from UNC in 1964 and immediately joined the dental faculty here.

He was a chemist with the N. C. Department of Agriculture for two years after completing his undergraduate studies at UNC and before entering dental school.

He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Mohorn of Rt. 3, Enfield.

- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past elever years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

If you've never used an electric shaver before, the Norelco 'Flip-Top' Speedshaver® is a great way to find out the easier side of shaving. Its rotary blades stroke whiskers off. Never cut or nick. They won't hurt you. Neither will the price, which is about the same as a year's supply of razor blades and shave cream.

P.S. If you want to spend a little more, get the Norelco Speedshaver 30 (at right). 35% closer shaves. 'Floating heads,' too. And a pop-up trimmer for sideburns. All the trimmings. From shave to price, it's clear about any Norelco—you can't get stung!

LSD Researcher Admits Drug Out Of Control

WASHINGTON (AP) — A pioneer experimenter with the drug LSD, Dr. Timothy Leary, acknowledged yesterday that use of the drug was out of control. He estimated that one-third of the nation's college students are "experimenting with this drug."

But Leary told the Senate subcommittee on juvenile Delinquency:

"The use of LSD by young people has provided a crisis, not a crisis of peril but a crisis of challenge."

Leary, a former Harvard University psychologist, is now a director of a private foundation dealing in research on LSD and similar hallucinogenic agents, and is appealing a 30 - year sentence for transporting marjuana.

He defended what he saw as proper use of the drug and called alcohol a much more dangerous substance. Leary said LSD has "an eerie power to release ancient energies from the human brain, I would say even sacred energies."

Leary ran into some sharp cross - examination from Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Leary suggested that legislation be passed that would allow responsible adults to use the drug for "spiritual growth and pursuit of knowledge. . ."

He also suggested that colleges be authorized to conduct laboratory courses in LSD and said such courses "will end the indiscriminate use of LSD and be the most popular and proactive courses ever offered."

To this, Kennedy demanded: "What's going to happen to the boy who doesn't get to college ? . . . Are you going to offer high - school courses as well?"

Leary said it was a question that would probably have to be left to research.

Another witness, Capt. Alfred W. Trembly of the Los Angeles Police Department, said use of LSD among California "Teenagers, students nonconformists, radicals and beatniks" is mushrooming to serious proportions.

But he and Bernard Tannenbaum, a special consultant to the subcommittee, said there is not enough data available to assess the magnitude of the problem.

Three witnesses Thursday agreed that the drug presented a problem, but said reports of its widespread use have been exaggerated.

LSD, a hallucinogenic agent derived from plant fungus, has been called "instant ecstasy."

Tannenbaum, however, called it "instant insanity."

In their testimony, Tannenbaum and Trembly presented cases of abnormal behavior from the use of the drug.

For instance in October last year, Trembly said, police in Hollwood observed two young men "on the front lawn at this location eating grass off the lawn and bark off the tree." Both admitted taking LSD capsules, Trebly said.

Tannebaum gave these examples:

—A resident physician trained in psychiatry took LSD and proceeded to destroy the room he was in as "part of a severe psychotic episode."

—A 15 - year - old girl hospitalized after using LSD escaped and tried to kill her mother.

—An artist broke down under LSD "and thought she was the Messiah returned to earth to save the world."

Tannenbaum said that many LSD abusers become insane in a few short ours, "a reaction rarely if even reported in connection with any other of the traditional drugs of abuse."

However, tannebuam said that "there is no evidence that all users of LSD become emporarily insan." And he added:

However, Tannenbuam said that "There is no evidence that all users of LSD become temporarily insane." And he added:

"Nor is there evidence that the drug cannot be used to produce beneficial effects in medicine or in some other discipiline; nor is there conclusive evidence that the drug cannot increase productivity or social adjustment or artistic performance."

Tannenbaum said he does not think "we want to criticize the drug out of existence." And he said he does not question "the sincerity of people advocating an open approach to the use of LSD."

Kindness Was The Weapon That Saved Troops From Deadly Trap

(Editor's Note: Associated Press photographer Henri Huet accompanied the 1st brigade of the 101st Airborne division on a week-long patrol near the Cambodian border. This is his report on his return Friday).

GU GIA NAP, Viet Nam (AP) — Kindness intead of the death blow he expected prompted a wounded young North Vietnamese soldier to stop a U. S. patrol from walking into a deadly trap.

The American called for reinforcements and in fierce head-on fighting Wednesday dealt a staggering punch to North Vietnamese forces in jungles near the Cambodian border. They counted 53 enemy bodies and many more probably were carried away. U. S. casualties were light.

Five days earlier the Americans of the 1st brigage of the 101st Airborne division on Operation Austin VI, had moved west from Bu Gia Map, about 10 miles from the Cambodian border and 90 miles northeast of Saigon. Drizzling rain soaked the men.

On the fourth day, four enemy soldiers were spotted. The Americans opened fire. One North Vietnamese was hit and the others fled.

As the Americans approached. the wounded man trembled and held his hands over his head as he lay on the ground. He said later he had been told the Americans would kill anyone they found.

A medic set to work tending the bullet wound in his thigh. Other Americans gave him cigarettes and food.

When an interpreter came the North Vietnamese soldier talked freely. He said four companies of North Vietnamese were about 40 minutes away, waiting for the Americans to walk into their trap. Another 40 minute march farther on, he said, were six more companies. Capt. Henrick O. Lunde, 30, of Clarksville, Tenn., commander of Alpha company, sent a patrol to check. Within an hour word came back that a large enemy force was waiting.

Back at the Battalion command post, Col. Henry Emerson of Milford, Pa., the Battalion commander, ordered Alpha company to remain where it was and ordered up reinforcements.

Charlie company, a reconnaissance company, and Alpha company, 17th cavalry, of the 1st air cavalry division, moved in.

Shortly before dusk the enemy attacked. It was an estimated company of North Vietnamese. The reinforcing elements were too strong and fought through, killing 15 enemy soldiers.

The next morning the four units moved carefully in the tangle of vines and trees of the shadowy jungle, so defense they often could see only five yars ahead.

At about 10 a.m. with Alpha company at the center of the force, the enemy opened up from 50 yards away with heavy machine guns.

As radio calls came in to Lunde, he shouted: "The enem is all over the place."

Within four minutes artillery shells were tearing and blasting into the jungle. Some shells exploded no more than 60 yards ahead of Apha company's forward element.

Then air attacks pounded the North Vietnamese positions. When the planes had finished their work, the artillery picked up the bombardment.

After four hours, the enemy machine guns blocking the trail still fired. They were too close to friendly troops for the artillery to hit them so Lunde sent out squads with orders to get them.

Pfc. Louis A. Aguilla, 19, of Newark, N. J., was with one of these squads. He had been in Viet Nam only 10 days and this was his first fight.

"I was scared, very scared," he said, "but I just keep following our squad leader . . . He kept talking to me and kept me moving. It didn't seem real. It was like a movie . . . like a dream."

Aguilla moved within 10 yards of one machine gun and threw a grenade.

"A prefect throw," he recalled. "Right in the hole."

The blast destroyed the position. The gun was silenced and four enemy soldiers were killed.

US Has 'No Comment' On China Aerial Battle

WASHINGTON (AP) — A State Department spokesman said yesterday he had no information to indicate that U. S. fighter planes had entered Red China's airspace yesterday or fought an aerial battle there.

That was as close as the spokesman would go toward denying yesterday's Peking charge that American jet fighters had shot down a Chinese plane over Chinese territory.

Specifically on the Chinese charge, press officer Robert J. McCloskey had "no comment." He did refer questioners to an announcement made by military authorities in Saigon early yesterday. This announcement said a U. S. F4C Phantom jet had knocked down a Communist MIG17 about 105 miles north of Haoi.

McCloskey was asked whether the Chinese accusation and the U. S. announcement in Saigon were concerned with the same incident.

"I'm not trying to draw one into the other or to separate the two," he said.

McCloskey was asked whether had made a protest through official channels, or whether the United States had known only of their public protest. McCloskey said he was aware only of the public protest.

The United States and Red China meet periodically through their ambassadors in Warsaw. The next meeting is set for May 25.

Senate Committee Approves Federal Labeling Regulation

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill calling for tightened federal regulation of the labeling and packaging of such house-drugs and cosmetics was approved by the Senate Commerce Committee today.

A 14 - 3 vote sent to the Senate for action a revised version of what sponsors term truth - in - packaging legislaton. President Johnson asked for such a bill, saying it such a bill, saying it would such a bill, saing it would make it easier for shoppers to compare carpeting products.

The Commerce Committee's bill would give industry an opportunity, in cooperation with distributor and consumer representatives, to draw up voluntary standards for the weights and quantities in which products are to be marketed.

But if these stadards were not approved by the Secretary of Commerce, or if the industry didn't comply with them, the government could set up mandatory weight and quantity standards, enforceable through seizures and fines.

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., who has been pushing for such legislation for five years, described the committee bill as excellent, although not all he wants. Committee chairman Wareen G. Magnuson, D-Wash., termed the revision more practical than Hart's original bill.

Chief objection within the committee was to the provisions on weights and sizes of packages.

The senior committee Republican, Sen. Norris Cotton, R-N.H., argued that empowering the Secretary of Commerce "to control the sizes and quantities of packages" would stifle competition, raise prices and 'vest in the government a power over the market place that is dangerous."

Cotton's move to strike out this whole section lost 11 to 7.

Voting with him against approval of the bill as a whole were Sens. Thurston B. Morton, R-Ky., and James B. Pearson, R-Kan.

Senate Republican Leader Everett M. Dirkson of Illinois has said he plans, when the bill comes to the Senate floor, to ask that it be sent to the Judiciary Committee for further study. Magnuson said he will oppose any such move to have another committee "repeat all the work we have done."

Another proposal to modify the section on weight and quantity standards lost 10 to 7.

'I've Got A Lot To Work On'

Bob Lewis Wants To Get Better

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

Suppose you're a six-foot-three college basketball player.

You're a rising senior, and during the previous campaign you were the 10th leading scorer in the nation with an average of 27.3 points-per-game, which was easily the best in your conference.

You made 51 of your first 69 field goal shots, hit 39 consecutive free throws at one stretch, set a school record with 49 points in a single game, polled more votes than any other player in the all-conference voting, and were name to an All-America team.

What do you do for an encore?

Well, if you're Bob Lewis—the Tar Heel star who accomplished all those things last year — you try to improve. And to do that, you hit the court again just three weeks after the season ends and start working for next year.

Which is exactly what Lewis did, and he'll be at it on his own almost constantly until formal practice kicks up in October.

Switch to Guard?

"I've got a lot to work on," said Lewis recently as he paused at courtside in sweltering Carmichael Auditorium before a mid-afternoon workout.

"I've got to begin thinking as a guard now, and make myself a smarter all - around player. I've never played guard regularly before, and there's a lot I have to learn."

Lewis has been a forward for the majority of his two varsity seasons, but with the addition of freshmen big boys Rusty Clark, Bill Bunting and Joe Brown to next year's squad, he anticipates being switched to the backcourt.

And he wants to be ready.

Unofficial Drills

"Most of the guys have been working out pretty regularly," Bob pointed out. "We come down (to Carmichael) on our own and play a lot of three-on-three, and that gives us a good chance to work on personal improvements. Playing against each other is good competition, and we try to win each game — you always want to win — but the big thing now is to improve yourself."

Larry Miller, the sophomore who teamed with Lewis to form the top one-two scoring tandem in the nation last year was firing away at the basket at the far end of the court as Bob cited the particular things that he is personally concentrating on during these self-styled sessions.

Concentrated Work

"Basically, I'm working on defense, ball - handling and moving without the ball. They are the main things, and I'm also giving lots of attention to setting screens and picks for the other guys.

"Plus," he continued, "I need to keep working on my outside shooting. I probably won't be inside too much next year or on into the future."

Basketball figures very much into Lewis' plans for this summer, too.

Summer Plans

"I'll be here at Carolina during the first term of summer school," he said, "and I'll be working out in here at least every other day — if of every day.

"Then I plan to go to Red Auerbach's basketball camp, and after that I'll be home in Washington, D. C., for a few weeks before school starts in September."

When practice gets under way next fall, Bob Lewis will be moving into his final year at Carolina. That gives the season added importance, and Bob talked about that, too.

Wants Big Winner

"We'll have some good ball next season," he says, "and should be better than we were this past year.

"You know, I've played on good teams since I've been here, but I want to play on a winner next year. I mean, we've won pretty good (15-9, 16-11), but I want to play on a big winner.

"But I know I have a lot of work to do to get myself ready (to play guard)," he concluded, "and there's so little time to do it."

Wins And Losses

Can Marichal Win 30?

The .400 hitter and the 30-game winner are two members of the vanishing—or vanished—breed of sports heroes. The super-batter is apparently extinct, for no one has seriously threatened to top .400 since Ted Williams hit .406 in 1941. Williams himself came the closest with .388 in 1957, but .350 is becoming something of a rarity these days.

Every so often, however, a pitcher comes close enough to winning 30 games to keep the hope alive that one will finally do it. None has since Dizzy Dean turned in a 30-7 chart for the St. Louis Cardinals in 1934, but the chance is still there, especially now that the expanded major league schedule gives starting pitchers an extra two turns.

In the past few seasons, Sandy Koufax has had baseball fans wondering about 30, but this year Juan Marichal is off to such a fast start that he apparently wants to win 40 games, rather than just 30. Juan blanked Pittsburgh, 3-0, Thursday night to run his record to 7-0.

Marichal's seventh win came in the Giants' 27th game, exactly one-sixth of the season. If Juan keeps up that pace—a bit unlikely—he will rack up 42 wins. wins. Even if he slows down a little, though, he can still hit 30.

Since Dean won 30 games in 1934, Hal Newhouser and Robin Roberts have come the closest to hitting the magic figure. Newhouser, a lefthander, won 29 for Detroit in 1944. Roberts, a righthander, copped 28 for the Philadelphia Phillies in 1952. Koufax's best season was 1965, when he won 26 games.

How does Marichal's start compare with the early-season records of Dean, Newhouser, Roberts and Koufax? I did a little checking to see how these pitchers stood on or about May 13 of their big seasons. Here are the findings:

Pitcher	W-L	Date	Team Games
Dean	4-2	May 13	24
Newhouser	4-3	May 12	20
Roberts	5-1	May 10	20
Koufax (1965)	4-2	May 13	27
Marichal	7-0	May 12	27

Thus Marichal has won, at this stage, at least two more games than any of the others and three more than Dean. Only Roberts approaches his record of wins compared to games played by the team. Marichal has won seven of the first 27 San Francisco games, better than one out of four. Roberts, with five of 20, had won exactly one-fourth of the games played by the Phillies.

Juan, of course, has a long way to go. He still must win 23 more ball games. Marichal, though, is no flash in the pan or spring sensation who faces in the fall. He's a proven 20-game winner (22 wins last season). The biggest obstacle he must avoid is injury. If he can stay healthy, Juan has a good shot at winning 30.

Sports At Large

Carolina's ACC champion baseball team is currently ranked sixth in the nation. The Tar Heels received this rating in the latest poll taken by the publication Collegiate Baseball. I've said before that I don't think much of baseball rankings, but I must admit it's nice to be up there. Southern Cal is ranked No. 1, just ahead of Florida State, a team the Tar Heels took one out of three from . . .

Tom Craver, sports editor of the '69er, freshman class newspaper, suggests that the new baseball field be named for George "Snuffy" Sternweiss, former Yankee second baseman. Stirnweiss, Craver informs me, played for Carolina in the late 1930's. He led the American League in hitting with a .309 mark in 1945. Stirnweiss was killed in a train wreck several years ago . . .

Graustark, the colt who was virtually conceded the Kentucky Derby before he broke a bone in his foot, has been retired and will stand at stud next year. John Galbreath, Graustark's owner, said the son of Ribot will not race again. He may be bred to a few mares this year . . . .

Tony Oliva, Minnesota Twins outfielder, is making a strong bid for his third straight American Leabue batting championship. No major leaguer has won three titles in a row since Stan Musial turned the trick in 1950-51-52. No American League champion has won three striaght crowns since Ty Cobb, way back in 1917-1919.

UNC Ends ACC Slate With Wake

Carolina's ACC baseball champions close out the Conference schedule tonight with a game against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem. The Tar Heels beat Wake earlier this year, 4-0, behind Beattie Leonard.

The red-hot Tar Heels have reeled off ten straight wins to increase their record to 18-8. The pitching has been sensational during this streak, having allowed only 22 runs in the last 13 ball games.

The hitting has been impressive during this stretch, too. Charlie Carr especially has been stinging the ball with authority, upping his average to .371. First baseman Danny Danny Talbott is hitting one point less.

After the game tonight, the Tar Heels play Wake again in Asheboro on Monday and finish against VPI on Wednesday.

TEP Unloads Big Base Hits To Beat PiKA

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

TEP unloaded the big bats to bury PiKA, 12-2, and move up the in fraternity division intramural softball tournament Thursday, Jay Schwartz had three hits, including a home run, and Kleitman added another homer for the TEPs. Bill Zuckerman, TEP pitcher, allowed the PiKA's only five singles.

The Everett Rogahs advanced in the residence hall playoffs by trouncing the Connor UFO's, 11-5. Dail and Biddle knocked home runs to lead Everett to the win.

The Gamma Nu Ganus hammered Med Blue,22-6. Woodard had a home run among three hits and Ward had four singles and scored four runs. The Ganus collected 19 hits in all.

Med Red scored seven times in the first inning and went on to thump the Hilltoppers, 14-7. Kouri homered for Med Red while Southern and Nelson homered for the Hilltoppers.

The English Bards took advantage of four Stat Grad errors to score all their runs in one inning of a 7-4 win.

The Lambda Chi Lo Balls edged Kappa Sig No. 2, 7-6. Morgan hit a round tripper for the losing Kappa Sigs.

Morgan added another homer in another game as the Kap Sigs beat SAE Blue 1, 12-4. Kirtley had two home runs and Robbins added another. Martin hit one for SAE.

The SAE's won another game, beating KA Black I, 9-7. Willingham had two homers and Simons one for the KA's.

Stewart scattered four hits as DKE Blue shut out Pi Lamb, 10-0. White had two hits and scored three runs.

The Pi Kappa Phi Baena got a home run from Wellington in their 9-2 win over St. A Blue. Pyne homered for St. A.

The Phi Gam Fijis beat the Kappa Psi Choppers, 6-4, when Hudson blasted a two - run homer in the last ining.

The Morrison H. Marauders downed the Morrison C Cavaliers, 9-6.

The Craige B Swingers defeated the Craige B Wetbacks, 11-5.

Tar Heels Off To Fast Start In Conference Tennis Action

Carolina roared off to a fine start in defending its ACC tennis championship by winning five singles and three doubles matches at Clemson Thursday.

Clemson also won all their matches in the tournament's first-day action. No other team is challenging.

Carolina's number one man, Gene Hamilton, won his first-round match over Ed McLean of North Carolina State, 6-2, 6-0. Other winners were Jim Stephens of Virginia, Zulfi Rahlm of Clemson and Ed Parker of Wake Forest.

Bronson Van Wyck of UNC defeated Jay Ginsburg N. C. State in the No. 2 bracket, 6-3, 6-3. Len Modzelewski of Maryland, Tom Long of Clemson and Harry Burn of UVa. also won.

In the third bracket, Tar Heel Bob Davis and Seve Parsons of Wake Forest, 6-2, 6-3. Winners here included Sammy Smithyman, Clemson Doug Jones, Duke and Rich Davis, Maryland.

Second - seeded Tom Chewning of UNC beat Tom Albert of Wake Forest in the fourth bracket, 6-0, 6-1. Top man Dikran Ornekian of Clemson also won, as did Ken Troutman of State and Randy HERRING Virginia.

In number five singles, UNC Nat West posted a 6-1, 6-0 triumph over Jim Fisher of State. Top - seeded Perry Reynolds of Clemson won along with Warwick Butler of Duke and Tom Merryweather of Maryland.

Carolina's Ken Oettinger, first - ranked in number six singles, had a bye. Winners were Richard Harrington of Maryland, David Wilkins of Clemson and Ashton DePeyster of Virginia.

The top - seeded doubles team, Andy Goddard and Bronson Van Wck of UNC, won over Ed Parker and Bob Knapp of Wake Forst, 6-2, 6-2. Other winners were Modzelewski - Sheaffer of Maryland, Rahlm and Long of Clemson.

In number two doubles, Davis and Chewning of UNC won over Burke and Al Cox of South Carolina, 6-0, 6-1. Burn and Herring of Virginia won along with Smithyman and Wilkins of Clemson.

In the third doules bracket, Hamilton and West of UNC dereated Lankford and Ginsburg State, 6-4, 6-1. Sibert and Reynolds of Clemson won as did Chapman and Davis of Maryland.

Carolina Runners Strong

By DRUMMOND BELL
DTH Sports Writer

Carolina's track squad traveled to Columbia, S. C., home of the Gamecocks for the ACC track chamipionships yesterday.

Maryland is the favorite to win the meet, but second place is a tossup. Duke, Carolina and Clemson all have a chance to take second place honors.

Carolina will probably pick up most of its points in the running events. However, Carolina has a fine discus thrower in Peter Worthen. Also, Tilden Birdges and Jim Frye have added strength in the high jump clearing 6'4" against Duke a week ago.

In the broad jump and the hop, step and jump Carolina's Gary Iverson has a good chance to finish in the top four in each of these events. In the shot put the Tar Heels have a fair depth with Barney Varner, Felix Alley and Ron Short, but lack the services of a Rod Stewart from Duke who is the favorite to retain his crown.

The javelin is another event in which the thinclads have fine depth with Pat Tone and Chris Heaton, but need good performances from these two men if they expect to pick up points on the rest of the ACC.

The running events should give Coach Joe Hilton a good indication as how his team will finish overall. In the 100 and 220 as well a the relays Jon Levin will carry the load. His main competition will most likely come from Maryland's King and Dunaway of Duke.

In the 220 Levin will have a fine counterpart in Ed Daw, who will also be used in the relays and the 440. Against Duke, Daw was sick, but he has come around and has a chance to finish in the top four at Columbia.

In the distance events Mike Williams will provide the main obstacle for the rest of the ACC. Against Duke, Williams won the mile in 4:10, the half in 1:54 and ran the quarter in a relay under 50.0. In the mile Williams will not have an easy race. Taylor of South Carolina and Henry of Maryland are fine distance men who finished second and third respectively to Williams in the Indoor Games.

In the half there is a possibility that Williams will run, but if he does not, Bill Bassett, Tom Carpenter and Co-Captain Bill Janowitz will give Carolina a fine trio.

In the hurdles Carolinas hopes rest on Richie Ambrose

THE COLLEGE PRESIDENT: HIS CAUSE AND CURE

Oh, sure, you've been busy, what with going to classes, doing your homework, catching night crawlers, getting married, picketing—but can't you pause for just a moment and give thought to that dear, dedicated, lonely man in the big white house on the hill? I refer, of course, to Prexy.

(It is interesting to note that college presidents are always called "Prexy." Similarly, trustees are always called "Trixie." Associate professors are always called "Axy-Pixy." Bursars are called "Foxy-Woxy." Students are called "Algae.")

But I digress. We were speaking of Prexy, a personage at once august and pathetic. Why pathetic? Well, sir, consider how Prexy spends his days. He is busy, busy, busy. He talks to deans, he talks to professors, he talks to trustees, he talks to alumni. In fact, he talks to everybody except the one group who could lift his heart and rally his spirits. I mean, of course, the appealingest, endearingest, winsomest group in the entire college—delightful you, the students.

It is Prexy's sad fate to be forever a stranger to your laughing, golden selves. He can only gaze wistfully out the window of his big white house on the hill and watch you at your games and sports and yearn with all his tormented heart to bask in your warmth. But how? It would hardly be fitting for Prexy to appear one day at the Union, clad in an old rowing blazer, and cry gaily, "Heigh-ho, chaps! Who's for sculling?"

No, friends, Prexy can't get to you. It is up to you to get to him. Call on him at home. Just drop in unannounced. He will naturally be a little shy at first, so you must put him at his ease. Shout, "Howdy-doody, sir! I have come to bring a little sunshine into your drear and blighted life!" Then yank his necktie out of his vest and scamper goatlike around him until he is laughing merrily along with you.

Then hand him a package and say, "A little gift for you, sir."

"For me?" he will say, lowering his lids. "You shouldn't have."

"Yes, I should," you will say, "because this is a pack of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades, and whenever I think of Personna Super Stainless Steel Blades, I think of you."

"Why, hey?" he will ask curiously.

"Because, sir," you will say, "though you are no longer a young blade, still you gleam and function. Full though you are of years and lumps, rheumy though your endocrines and flaccid your hamstrings, still you remain sharp, incisive, efficacious."

"Thank you," he will say, sobbing.

"So it is with Personna," you will continue. "Naturally you expect a brand-new blade to give a close, speedy shave. But how about a blade that's had hard and frequent use? Do you still expect a close, speedy shave? Well, sir, if it's a Personna, that's what you'll get. Because, sir, like you, sir, Personna is no flash-in-the-pan. Like you, sir, Personna abides."

He will clasp your hand then, not trusting himself to speak.

"But away with gloom!" you will cry jollily. "For I have still more good news to tell you of Personna!"

"How is that possible?" he will say.

"Hearken to me," you will say. "Personna, in all its enduring splendor, is available not only in Double Edge style but also in Injector style!"

He will join you then in the Personna rouser, and then he will bring you a steaming cup of cocoa with a marshmallow on top. Then you will say, "Good-bye, sir. I will return soon again to brighten your dank, miasmic life."

"Please do," he will say. "But next time, if you can possibly manage it, try not to come at four in the morning."

* * *

Prexy and undergrad, late and soon, fair weather and foul—the perfect sharing companion to Personna' Blades is Burma Shave.' It comes in regular and menthol; it soaks rings around any other lather; it's kind to your kisser; try Personna and Burma Shave.

Rhodes Scholar Tells Of Student Life At Oxford

(Editor's note: Bob Spearman, last year's student body president, has been studying at Oxford University this year as a Rhodes Scholar. His following impressions on life as student there were written especially for the DTH.)

Several years ago an American was asked to describe his memories of student life at Oxford some twenty years after he had graduated. He said that most of his recollections were hazy, but he remembered Oxford as a place where there were lots of spires and too many bells rang in the rain.

The bells still ring and the rain still pours, but Oxford has had much of its scholastic character diluted as the ancient University has blended with industrial England. The city's industry expands each year, much of it centering in the British Motor Corporation's automative works. Some of the change was reflected this spring when the sitting Conservative member of Parliament was defeated by a Laborite for the first time in Oxford's history.

Much of student life is still the same, but it too has altered. Fifty years ago, students live in austere luxury. Heating and plumbing to himself and many had three rooms. Each had a "scout" who made beds, brushed clothes, polished shoes and served a leisurely afternoon tea.

With rising enrollents and rising wage rates, there are fewer scouts and much of the luxury is gone, but a hard core of austerity persists. Showers are rare and considered to be of dubious value.

Few of the colleges regard central heating as even a future possibility. It was politely explained to me when I arrived last fall that such questions were purely a matter of national taste: Americans believe in central heating and individual plumbing, while the British prefer the reverse.

University life centers around the 32 individual colleges, which range in size from around 200 to 500 students. The major college event of the day at Merton is the formal dinner at 7:30 each evening, served in a cold, dimly - lit hall.

Students in black academic gowns file in to the ringing of chapel bells and seat themselves on long wooden benches. Supper begins after the college faculty members finish their sherry in the Senior Common Room and after a long Latin grace hasa been pronounced by one of the classics students.

The 3-course meal is completed with 17 to 18 minutes, and most conversation is reserved for after dinner coffee. According to a custom of obscure origin, certain topics (the quality of the food, academic work, the names of living women) are forbidden.

If anyone forgets, he is likely to be "sounced". When the scounce cry rises, a white-coated scout immediately appears carrying a silver goblet filled with 2 1-2 pints of lukewarm beer.If the guilty party can drink this without taking the goblet from his lips, his accuser has to pay the costs or may be scounced himself.

College regulations on student activities are a stronge combination of ancient restrictions and social privileges which would delight many Americans accustomed to the structures of in loco parentis. The college serves beer at meals and beer, win and liquor at a special college bar.

Women are allowed to visit in men's college rooms until 11:45 each night, but all students must be back within the college walls by midnight. (One of the reasons for this rule is that University statutes require students to spend a certain number of nights in college before they are eligible for degrees.)

If a student returns too late, he hs to face climbing the college walls, which are topped with barbed wire and broken glass. But no one need take such restrictions too seriously.

On the first day of the term, the Principal of the Postmasters, who is primarily a philosophy professor but doubles as a Dean of Men, gathered the new students together to explain college regulations and the techniques of wall climbing. Certain parts of the wall, he said, were dangerous, and he described the quickest, safest routes.

He added that if one were back into the college and not interested in adventure, the best technique was to bribe the porter. He closed with a final word of advice: "Merton welcomes all its students to experiment with matters in the Kingdom of the Mind but it does not feel that experiments with seduction and marijuana are necessary for a lively intellect."

Afternoons at Oxford, or at least that portion which falls before 4 o'clock tea time, are usually devoted to sports. In the fall and winter, there is rowing and rugby (and basketball for the few who have sufficient fortitude to travel to the nearest gym located at a U. S., Air Force base, some twenty miles away.)

With spring comes cricket, tennis and more rowing. The college has a large clubhouse beside its cricket field and lawn tennis courts, and at four all matches stop for the teams to come in and have tea or drink beer.

The University's academic life is characterized by intellectual rigor and strong resistance to change. Emphasis is placed upon the development of critical faculties rather than on the memorization and repetition of facts.

The semi - weekly that many students in a large American University never see.

But the whole system is pervaded with a bias toward the past which does not always produce the most fortunate results. The study of Anglo - Saxon and Elizabethan handwriting are still required for a degree in English.

When it was proposed lst fall that Anglo - Saxon be made optional several English professors immediately objected that such a step would cause "a flood of students into English from the less scholarly subjects such as history." The reform never got off the ground.

Oxford has yet to come to terms with the social sciences The catalogue states that the faculty of social studies so called because "it was and is disputed whether the word science is properly applicable to this branch of learning." It is still impossible to obtain an undergraduate degree in economics and only two undergraduate courses are offered in sociology.

Economics and politics (pojargon) were combined in a joint program with philosophy, for it was felt that neither of the two "social studies" had enough trength to stand alone.

Oxford's finest curriculum is undoubtedly classics. One American studying here claimed recently that English students with an Oxford degree in classics know more Greek and Latin than most of the Ph.D's who taught him the same subsubjects on the United States. Much is said about Oxford's academic life and indeed about Britain, in a few words in the University catalogue. The discussion of Oxford's classics is concluded with the remark: "It is said to produce men who are unrivalled as expositiors and judges of any situation or set of facts placed before them."

Girls, Be In The Know On Fashions

NEW YORK (NAPS)—If you can tell a gaiter from a garter . . . if you see why "construction" may be better in a skyscraper than in a suit . . . if you know what goes with (and more important, what goes under) this year's slip of a dress — then fashion experts would call you smart, in every sense of the word. For a sound knowledge of current style trends can pay off in money saved and discomforts avoided as well as in good looks.

1. Why are there now two sides to the fashion fabric story?
structed" look? What's good about it?

2. What is the "unconrequire a new kind of girdle?

4. Would you wear gaiters with (a) slacks (b) a swimsuit (c) your newest suit or cotat?

5. Are the latest hats big and bold — or small and close to the head?

6. What accessory are smart girls borrowing from racing drivers?

7. Name three dazzling new uses of vinyl (other than rain gear).

8. Whatever happened to the strapless eveing dress?

9. Where, besides in fashionable outerwear, can you find the popular bias cut?

10. Are the new coat shapes small — or daringly flaring?

ANSWERS

1. Double - faced fabrics add an extra helping of "bazazz" to current clothes. Very often the flip side of a coat or jacket matches the color and fabric of the dress underneath. Or, a checked or striped suit can be made to look even snappier when trimmed and double - faced in a coordinated solid color.

2. "Unconstructed" clothes have natural charm. Thanks to skillful cutting and sewing, suits and coats can hold their shape without inside stiffeners like canvas or muslin. As easy to wear as a sweater — and not much bulkier — these garments can actually be rolled up for carefree carrying or packing. In dress, the uncontructed look means shape —currently a slim, unwaisted and free - moving shape — without a welter of darts and complicated seams.

3. Today's lithe and limber clothes demand foundations that control without cramping your style. This means airy fabrics like spandex, and designs that take the bind and pull even out of panty girldes. For example, Sarong's new departure, appropriately name So-Freee. Unlike conventional panty girdles, which are designed in one continuous iline from leg to leg, it has entirely separated legs for maximum freedom of movement. To make motion even more free and easy, spandex front & back panels adjust to your stride—or, says the manufacturer, to your Frug!

4. Gaiters, says the dictionary, are coverings for ankle instep to knee. But this dry definition doesn't hint at the fun and fashion potential of these accessories, which currently rise to several inches below the knee. Try white gaiters with a navy costume, beige or gold onts with brown coat or suit, bright red to spark a red plaid oufit. A word of caution: since gaiters snap right over shoes and leave a large portion of shoe lether visible, b sure they also harmonize with footgear.

5. Small and head - hugging; visor hats. in all kinds of facric, are tiptop. But nobody has banned big and striking hats — especially for them as can wear 'em.

6. Their gloves. The newest-looking ones have the racy cutouts associated with racing gloves.

7. Beach coverups; shifts; slacks and tops; hats, scarves; evening coats and even evning dresses! New fashion uses are being devised all the time, partly because vinyl is now softer and more supple, easier to work with. And it's available in matte as well as shiny surface.

8. It's back! Look for it in both short and long versions.

9. In foundation garments, which are more supple and easy - moving because of the bias cut. The new So-Freee panty girdle by Sarong has bias panels in front for control, bias panels in back for curves. Criss-cross paneling is also a feature of the So-Freee regular girdle, which takes a highly flexible approach to figure shaping. It rises high in front and back to leave legs free, dips low on the sides for thigh control. There's even bias construction in bras: Saron criss-cross front panels adjust with every move you make and breath you take.

10. Sometimes both! Plenty of narrow coats are to be seen, and they are pervect mates to the new lean little dresses. But some of the freshest - looking coats play it close to the chest)and shoulder), flare out boldly for a wide new hem.

If you were the gal who knew all the answers — or only eight of them — be proud of your fashion sense. Five to seven right answeres make you pretty smart — though not quite a model of fashion knowledge. But even if you scored four or less, you now have the facts — and can use them to look lovelier and save

Navy Flyers Will Recruit Here Next Week

College men having an inclination towards flying as a career will have the opportunity to check with the Naval Aviation Information Team which will be on campus May 16-18, in Y-Court.

The team, headed by Lt. Commander L. C. Atkin, will administer the Aviation Qualification Test to interested men to determine their potential for val Aviation. Qualified students will be flown to the Naval Aviaion. Qualified students will be flown to the Naval Air Station, Norfolk at their convenience. There they will take their flight physical, fill out an application for a naval officer's commission and get a closer look at the Navy itself.

Students passing the qualification test will be given an indoctrination flight in the T-34 "Monitor" at the local airport or during their isit at NAS Norfolk.

and Jim Frye. Against Duke last weekend Ambrose won the 440 yd. hurdles in the best time of the year.

In the two mile Jim Meade is one of the three contenders for the laurels. The other two are Duke's Robers who beat Meade last weekend with the fine of 9:19 and Maryland's Starnes who defeated both Meade and Rogers in the Indoor Games.

The race for second place should be right as it was in the Indoor Gaes. It is also very important since the Tar Heels are close to winning the Carmichael Cup and a second would help.

Internal Transportation System Closer To Reality

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Cancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson has announced that experiments will be conducted on campus next year concerning an internal transportation system that may be used to relieve some of the critical parking problem on campus.

Sitterson thinks that motorcycles will be subject to the same regulations next year that cars have been subject to this year.

If he does approve this policy which has been recommended by the Traffic Advisory Committee, freshmen will not be allowed to have motor cycles anywhere on campus or in Chapel Hill.

Sitterson said that he has not yet completed his investigation into the traffic situation and that it would be the last part of this week before he can issue the final policy for next year's regulations.

"We can't solve our traffic problem by adding more vehicles to a limited restricted area," Sitterson said.

"I walk a mile and a half to work everyday. I wish that more students would begin walking to class. This would help relieve some of the traffice problem on the center part of campus."

The faculty will be charged with a parking fee next year for the first time, but this means that the entire central area of campus will be used for faculty parking.

Sitterson doubts that the intramural fields will be used for parking next year. He said there is a greater need for playing fields right now than for additional parking areas.

Sitterson said that it was unfortunate that the tradition of bicycling has not developed on this campus as it has on many of the Northern campuses.

'Computerniks' To Establish Assn. At UNC

Plans are underway to establish a student chapter of the Association for Computing Machinery at UNC. Twenty to thirty students representing Information Science, Math, Business, and Biostatistics, meeting May 9th, decided that a UNC chapter was feasible and would be beneficial.

A meeting to establish by-laws to be submitted to the national organization and to elect officers will be held Tuesday, May 17 at 3 p.m. in Philips 233. All interested students are invited to attend.

The ACM was founded in 1947 as the society of the computing community, it is dedicated to the "development of information processing as a discipline, and to the responsible use of computers in an increasing diversity of applications."

The organization has nearly 15,000 members operating in every sector of the computing sciences and their applications.

There is a N. C. chapter that meets at Chapel Hill but this is mainly for people in business. Bill Hanson, Director of the Computation Center at UNC is president. The student chapter being formed will not be connected with these regular metings. There will be a more student-orientated program.

Gail Woodward and Bill Speary, both in Information Science say that the chapter will be concerned with what is happening on campus in this area. For example, many related departments are not aware of what is going on in other departments. It is hoped that the student ACM chapter will lead to more interaction between the departments."

CAMPUS BRIEFS

Julian's Robbed

Julian's College Shop on East Franklin Street was the site of a robbery for the second time this month early Saturday morning when a someone broke in and stole a pair of pants.

A UNC student was charged with knocking a hole in a store window with a rubber mallet about 1:30 a.m. and stealing a pair of pants worth $18.95, police reported.

He is charged with breaking and entering and with larceny, and was reportedly drunk at the time, police said. The student is being held in custody.

Bond has been set at $1,000, and his trial is scheduled for May 17 in Chapel Hill Recorder's Court.

On May 2 three adults and two juveniles stole $50 from a customer and were also charged with shoplifting. The adults' trial will be held on May 17, and the juveniles will be tried later this month in Juvenile Court in Hillsborough.

Munch And Shine

Want to have women swarming at your feet, men?

A core of campus coeds will be shining shoes for Carolina gentlemen tomorrow at Y Court and in front of the Varsity Theatre.

Phi Mu Sorority's contribution to the hospital ship S. S. Hope project, a combination shoe shine and bake sale, promises to bring delight to all who "Munch-While-We-Shine."

Two booths will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday.

Phi Mu is entering—along with other campus groups—into the fund drive sponsored by the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity. Raising funds for S. S. Hope is also Phi Mu's national philanthropy.

NSA Encampments

The National Student Association will offer students at member schools scholarships to the Encampments for Citizenship to be held this summer in Washington, D. C., and Cayey, Puerto Rico.

The campus of the University of Maryland will be the home base for the Washington, D. C., Encampment. The theme of the program will be "American Politics in a Revolutionary World." Speakers from among the national leadership of both parties, left and right-wing critics, and administrators of anti-poverty, Peace Corps and other Federal Programs will be featured. The program will run for six weeks, from June 19 to July 30.

A camp at Cayey, Puerto will house the students attending the Inter - American Encampment. "Democracy and the Social - Economic Development in the Western Hemisphere" will be the theme of this encampment, which is co-sponsored by the Y.M.C.A. Peace Corps of Puerto Rico and the Department of Education of Puerto Rico. Students interested in attending the Inter-American Encampment, to be held June 26 through August 26, should have some knowledge of Spanish as students from many Latin American countries will be present.

Any student wishing additional information pertaining to the encampments or scholarships should come to the Student Government Offices.

Fun And Games

The Nurses Dorm and Morrison Residence College have two hours of "fun and games" planned for the intramural field behind Chase Cafeteria this afternoon.

Beginning at 3:30 there will be boy - girl team softball games, three legged races, orange beneath the chin relays and other events with "unbelievable" prizes.

This is to be the last social event between the two colleges this spring. The emphasis will be on having fun and meeting members of the companion dorm, with dates permitted but discouraged.

Local Girl Featured

The Durham Savoyards, Limited will present as its fourth annual production, the Gilbert and Sullivan favorite, "The Gondoliers," at Duke University's Page Auditorium Friday and Saturday. The evening performances begin at 8:15, with a Saturday matinee set for 2:15 p.m.

Marky Buxton of Chapel Hill who was seen in the major role of Katisha in the Carolina Playmakers fall production of "The Mikado," will be seen in the romantic lead, Tessa. Marky is employed by The Record Bar.

A Student Profile

The MRC Chairman At Work

Lew Brown: Enthusiastic Man With A Big Challenge

By RON SHINN
Special to the DTH

Lew Brown is an enthusiastic young man with a big problem — UNC's youthful residence college system.

The blond - haired sophomore from Charlotte is the new Men's Residence Council president, a job that puts the success of the residence college program squarely on his shoulders.

The political science major is a Whitaker Scholar, so he must maintain at least a 3.0 quality point average. He now has a 3.4 average and is a member of Phi Eta Sigma, national freshman scholastic honor society.

Strangely, next year's residence hall head is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon social fraternity. He will also be a resident advisor in a residence hall next fall.

"To make the residence college system strong we must first have a strong MRC," Brown said. "The best way to do this is to try to make the MRC a coordinating body instead of the disciplinary body that it is now."

He envisions the MRC functioning like the Interfraternity Council, the governing body for UNC social fraternities.

"We need more of the campus 'elite' as members to make the MRC more powerful," he said.

Brown has outlined three major areas where residence colleges need improvement: residence college government, residence hall improvements and coordinating campus social activities.

"An area that could stand much improvement is the orienting of new residence college officers and acquainting them with their duties."

A residence college handbook is in the making under the leadership of Brown. It is designed to inform the officers of their responsibilities and to acquaint the students with the MRC.

"We also need to add an MRC program to the student orientation program for new students held at the beginning of each semester," Brown said.

He has been vice chairman of the MRC court and cites unawareness of the residence hall rules as a big problem. The handbook and orientation programs are aimed at correcting this problem.

"The Board of Governors (made up of the governor, social and academic lieutenant governors and the speakers of each college senate) needs to become a more coherent body for better results," he said.

"Working together, we could bring more demands on the administration — giving the students a louder voice to express themselves."

He sees lack of coordination as the biggest problem in the social area.

"During the first semester we had all colleges on the south campus sponsoring dances and parties on the same weekend, leaving a three to four week period without a single social function."

Conflicts Cited In Claims Of Defendants, Plaintiffs

By ALA BA
DTH Staff Writer

There was little surprising about the defendants' answer to the Speaker Ban suit.

It has been long suspected that the answer would be filed at the last possible moment. Unless the defense could have mailed the answer to arrive in Greensgoro on Monday, they had to file it by 5 p.m. Friday, since the court is closed Saturday and Sunday. Sunday was the designated deadline for the reply.

It had been long suspected that the defendants — Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, University President William Friday and the Trustees — would stall so that the semester would end and the suit declared invalid.

A Look Inside The Ban Suit

The plaintiffs — 12 UNC students, Marxist Herbert Aptheker and Frank Wilkinson — are required to answer the reply within 20 days after the filing on Friday. So hearings in the U. S. Middle District Court may not begin until June.

This factor is important because the defense claims that Aptheker and Wilkinson were denied speaking privileges on campus by Sitterson only for this academic year. The answer notes, "This action did not preclude later consideration of either or both of these individuals or any other proposed invitation by any authorized student group."

This point will probably be one of conflict in the court, since the plaintiffs state that they petitioned the chancellor to allow Wilkinson and Aptheker to speak here in March, April, May, the summer session or early fall.

"All requirements of the procedure set forth in the resolutions of the Board of Trustees of February 18, 1966, were complied with in this further request," the plaintiffs state. "The defendant Sitterson has failed and refused to act upon the further request," they add.

A very important point of conflict will be the defendants denial of paragraph 28 of the complaint, which reads:

"The defenant Sitterson has denied the requests of the student plaintiffs dated March 14, 1966, and these plaintiffs are informed, believe and allege that the defendant Sitterson will continue to deny their requests."

The denial of this paragraph can be interpreted to deny 1) that Sitterson ever denied the students' requests or 2) that Sitterson will continue to deny their requests.

It is noteworthy that 17 of the plaintiffs' 41 allegations were wholly or mostly admitted by the defenants and that six were partially admitted.

The first issue in the hearings will be the question of juristiction of the Federal Court.

The plaintiffs cite three federal statutes justifying the jurisdiction of the court, including the Civil Rights Act of 1866, which the Supreme Court has upheld to allow Federal Courts to hear any suits regarding the violation of Constitutional rights.

The defendants deny this

YAF To Be Organized Tomorrow

By BILL ROGERS
Special to the DTH

The Carolina chapter of Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) will hold an organizational meeting tomorrow at 7:30 p.m. in the Woodhouse Room of Graham Memorial. The YAF steering committee has invited all interested students to attend.

Paul King, a member of the steering committee, explained that, "YAF's basic commitment is to the individual, the smallest minority group of all, the one threatened most by today's worship of the mass, the collective, the 'public' or other euphemisms for the majority and its coercive apparatus, the State."

"Rights are not a gift from the State but are inherent and inalienable in each person," King added, "Millions of people must make millions of personal decisions each day; no Government Planning Board or regulatory agency can possibly make those decisions satisfactorily, or has any business attempting to do so.

According to King, YAF relies on many types of action to achieve its goals. Its members work in political campaigns for candidates of both parties who represent their position. YAF's views are brought to public attention by picketing, distributing literature, and sponsoring speakers and seminars.

YAF was founded in 1960 at Bill Buckley's estate in Sharon, Conn. Its purpose is to serve as a rallying point and training ground for the "new right" (both libertarian and conservative). The "new right", although not as highly publicized as its counterpart on the left, nevertheless exists and is growing.

YAF now has over 600 college chapters and several hundred high school or community chapters. During the coming year membership is expected to rise to over 250,000. YAF is weakest in the Southern states.

Bang! Bang! I Shot You Down— Kill Games Take Campus By Storm

Group Of Thirty Kills For Money

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

Thirty UNC students have decided "to let off a little steam before exams" by killing each other for pay.

And, what's more, they may even have a chance to gun down a few professors, says Sherry O'Donnell, organizer of UNC's make - believe version of "The Tenth Victim" game featured in the Ursella Andress film.

Deliberately or not, the game starts Tuesday and ends May 24 just before you-know-what.

Due to certain legal obstacles that discourage realism, the victims at UNC can be shot at only with cologne Brute for boys and Ambush for girls.

Sherry got the idea for the game after reading Andy Myer's editorial in yesterday's DTH and a recent Time Magazine article.

"We (the game's organizers) were just sitting around talking . . . and we decided it would be fun to let off a little steam before exams," says Sherry, explaining how the fad got started here.

To play the game, the participants will each hand over $1 to Miss Patricia Williams. But they'll have a chance to retrieve their money by shooting their victims with water pistols (which the participants must furnish), or, if the participants are victims, by eluding their pursuers.

"If you kill the wrong persons," says Sherry, "it's minus five points." In the Andress film, it's 30 years.

"Wrong persons" include anybody other than the assigned victims.

Also, Sherry says, if the hunters kill students not in the game, they, the hunters, have to turn themselves in. "We're on the honor system."

The game will be limited to the 30 students and any others Sherry contacts. This is because the game's organizers don't want it to get out of hand; "there's no way of controlling it," according to Sherry.

The winner will be the hunter with the most victims or the victim who has successfully resisted the most attacks. He'll get the money left over from paying "bounties" and buying the perfume.

Before the kills, hunters must say these words within their victims' hearing distance: "We sure have had a lot of rain lately."

"What with the present Chapel Hill weather," Sherry says, "we're pretty worried that innocent people will think they're victims."

Here's Your Chance To Murder Without Fear Of The Gas Chamber

By KERRY SIPE

From the sleepy shadows of the campus after dark erupts the sound of sudden death. The flash of a lethal blade cuts into the blackness. The odor of deadly poison hangs in the air. A gasping breath, a gush of red, the reach of a stiffened hand as a limp lifeless body makes a thud against the still, cold earth.

Through the opportunity provided by a new campus organization known as the Men From U.N.C.L.E. (University of North Carolina League of Executioners) you, too, can be a part of the satisfying, delightfully titilating scene described above.

A campus - wide game of homicide has been organized as the pre-examination project of two students who got their idea from the "Big Hunt" fad currently occupying the campuses of several western universities.

Any member of the UNC family who is interested in playing should leave his name and address with the secretary in the Daily Tar Heel office sometime Monday.

Players will receive a list of three persons, chosen by random matching, whom it will be their duty to seek out and "kill."

The object of the merriment is to plan and carry out the most bizarre and unique method of murder that your wicked mind can conceive with a given time limit. In carrying out your plan you must find some way of notifying your victim that he has been killed.

You might choose to blow his brains out by rigging a small bomb to a cigarett lighter and mailing it to him. When he goes to light up, he will open the lighter and find a note inside. "You have just triggered a small bomb which has blown your head off," it will say. "You are dead. Signed Your Hunter."

Each hunter in turn will also be a victim. He must try to kill his victims without either being discovered first by one of them or beng killed himself. In either case he is disqualified.

Murders will be judged for ingenuity, thought and neatness by an independent panel of judges. Entrants will be given official instructions when they receive their list of victims. Winners will be announced in The Daily Tar Heel.

Get your name in the game now and, if you like living, don't trust anybody.

DTH Unfairly Covered

A vast amount of sweat and toil on the part of several willing students can yield a most rewarding product. And one, thoughtless, distastefully, irresponsible move can give the whole organization a black eye. Such is the case with the 1966 Yackety Yack, which begins distribution tomorrow.

This year's Yack is bigger than ever. Its pages contain a well-balanced collection of photographs of students, caught in various facets of the daily routine of University life. Departing from the plain cover bearing the engraved title of the book, this year the Yack cover displays a beautiful picture of the Old Well with South Building in the background.

Most campus organizations are given a favorable writeup and photo display. Most of them. In fact, all of them except one—The Daily Tar Heel. When you read your Yack we feel certain you will know what we mean.

The Daily Tar Heel pages—which are paid for just like everyone else's—bear a diatribe of cutting remarks which bear a stinch of slander and libel.

A poignant example of the jabs the Yack has taken is the accusation that "editor Ernie McCrary sought sanctuary in the infirmary for six weeks." This, of course, is completely false. McCrary was in the infirmary for ten days with mononucleosis, during which time he talked with staff members every day to insure that his newspaper was running smoothly.

Darts thrown at other staff members—who, by the way, brought home more awards for their paper than any staff in DTH history—are equally distasteful and factually unfounded.

According to Yack editor Scott Castelberry, no one seems to know just who was responsible for the writing and insertion of the material. It's too late to worry about that now anyway.

But we do want all the Yack staff to know how disappointed we are to find that they have gone so far overboard in the traditional campus pasttime of criticizing the DTH. A college year book is designed for pleasurable recollection of college days years after leaving school.

Nowhere does the Yack mention the firsts for the DTH this year—first time for offset printing, first time for six-page daily publication, first time for printing a 28-page edition (orientation edition), and first time to win press awards too numerous to mention here.

No, these things are not mentioned. But those who work on the 1965-66 Daily Tar Heel will have their page of memento. You should be proud.

Unthinkable Thoughts

The Charleston (W. Va.) Daily Mail

It is unthinkable that the government, as Dr. Victor Kassel proposes, will legalize polygamy and polygyny for the aged. We say this with a certain reservation, however, since it is perfectly clear that a lot of things we thought were unthinkable a few thoughtless years ago are not only thinkable, but a statutory fact.

All we know with much assurance is that, when the government finally legalizes plural marriage for those over 60, it will also subsidize the institution. And in doing so it will have no choice but to tax a little more those who can scarely afford one wife to provide more generously for those who have always hankered after half a dozen.

Eventually, the young will be compelled to live in sin while the aged frolic in the fields of publicly supported matrimonial blisses; and everyone will look back on the bad, old days and wonder why no one thought of this ingenious arrangement a thousand years ago.

And the answer, of course, is that in some things the perfect solution takes time.

John Dunne Returns To The Hill And Evokes Lingering Memories

Last Wednesday a familiar figure from the recent past history of Chapel Hill was seen walking the brightly lit interior of Howell Hall.

John Dunne hadn't changed a bit. The thick-set body, the even mop of black hair, the dark eyes within the broad planes of his face was all just as we had remembered them from three years back.

From his intensely preoccupied shuffle he was drawn by a hail of recognition, and there followed the inevitable flow of remembrances that pass between friends who had been drawn apart by circumstance.

Dunne, a former Morehead Scholar and PiKa pledge, arose from ineffectual obscurity three years ago to lead this campus into the greatest period of student activism in recent times.

As president of the local chapter of CORE, he and Pat Cusick organized demonstration after demonstration against racial discrimination in the Chapel Hill-Carrboro area.

They usually took the form of long marches that wound for blocks through the town. They marched by the hundreds and sometimes by the thousands to the post offices, to Carswell's Drug Store, to Carlton Mize's Rockpile, to Brady's Diner and Watts' Motel, and sometimes they were marched off to jail.

They were locked out, kicked out, spat upon, beaten up, verbally abused and even urinated upon in the course of their exploits, and always they kept coming back for more. Both Dunne and Cusick were sent to break rocks on the road by Superior Court Judge Raymond Mallard.

Reminiscences have a way of glorifying the very deeds they recall, and those days of nearly three years ago flashed golden in our minds.

They were great days for the press. With several marches per week, the news stories were exciting and easy to come by. If you happened to be a stringer for Charlotte, Raleigh, Greensboro or one of the wire services, you made quite a bit of money. There was a chance for the wet-behind-the-ears cub reporter to interview and speak intimately with James Farmer, and watch the experienced TV and press cameramen jump to capture the right angle. And transcending it all was the even, assured knowledge that you were watching a social movement capturing the conscience of America.

For John Dunne those were glorious days, too. Imperative in his conviction, gentle in his demeanor, he and those with him were fighting for a cause they knew was right. They believed it, when they held hands in the Baptist Church, when they lay prostrate on the sidewalk and when they raised their voices to chant the mournful old question, "Which side are you on, brother, which side are you on."

The issue was just as clear as black and white, and everyone on campus had an opinion.

The old protest groups eventually broke up as their leaders were jailed, and soon the federal government came in to find a legal means of achieving racial progress.

Dunne went to Harvard and is now working for his degree in clinical psychology. He wants to work with teenage delinquents. Cusick, who chose to work in the same field, is living as a social worker in the worst Negro ghetto of Boston, actively fighting unscrupulous politicians and unsympathetic poverty officials.

Professional protestors with very real causes to champion, they left Chapel Hill to seek those places were the issues were still burning, and the tough, dirty tasks cried out for will hands and minds.

As the conversation drew to a close, Dunne stopped to gaze over the campus and admire the fullness of late spring. It seemed as if the beauty of the place had preoccupied the minds of its inhabitants. Human excitement and initiative had given way to a long lull that marked only the slow and wonderous changing of the seasons.

Dunne left later to return to Harvard and clinical psychology. He took with him the living memory of a rare storm that managed to blow reverberating ripples over this quiet, shaded pool of humanity in central North Carolina.

Letters

The Daily Tar Heel welcomes letters to the editor on any subject, particularly on matters of local or University interest. Letters must be typed, double-spaced and must include the name and address of the author or authors. Names will not be omitted in publication. Letters should be limited to about 250-300 words. The DTH reserves the right to edit for length or libel. Longer letters will be considered for "The Student Speaks" if they are of sufficient interest. However, the DTH reserves the right to use contributed materials as it sees fit.

Branch Goes Off To India As Housing Issue Simmers

When University Business Manager J.A. Branch goes off to India on a mission for the Ford Foundation, he'll leave behind a controversy that should have been settled several months ago: the Victory Village housing situation.

Former DTH staffers Bob Harris and Pat Stith, angered that some World War II structures there were to be torn down when they supposedly could be economically moved, published a series of articles which enraged Branch even more than he would have been had somebody rubbed cigarette ashes into the expensive carpet of his South Building office.

Harris and Stith charged that Branch was "interested in economics, not the philosophy of housing." That's why Branch wanted the structures razed to clear ground for an extension of Memorial Hospital, the two news men claimed, rather than spending money to move them elsewhere. There's been a great demand for low cost married student housing, Harris and Stith insisted. They also said Victory Village rents appeared "higher than necessary to break even"; Sith and Harris did not say the rents were too high, they merely wondered where what they considered extra money was going. "They've siphoned off at least a quarter of a million dollars for projects outside Victory and Odum Villages." Stith said. "Where's it gone."

A visit to Branch's office indicated that Stith and Harris were wrong in their articles about student demand for low cost housing. I don't have the business manager's exact statistics in front of me, but the numbers apparently showed there's a startling lack of student interest in the low cost units the two newsmen seem so intent on saving. But the figures didn't tell the entire story; Branch himself mentioned students who moved back to Victory Village housing after living in more expensive Odum Village, and, significantly, he didn't say anything convincing about their having financial problems which would have necessitated the move. Furthermore, Stith said his own estimates of the need for the Victory Village facilities were based on those made by the University Director of Housing James Wadsworth.

What about suspicions that the University was milking married students to pay for items entirely unrelated to these students' needs? Was it possible that the married students were being indirectly forded to contribute to the University's General Fund so that Branch and others could finance their own pet projects on campus? Branch denied this could happen, he said it's against University policy as far as he knows. So did University Accountant Victor Bowles, but he carefully added that such actions would not be illegal.

Moreover, a check with representatives of the State Auditor's office on campus brought forth frowns and a lot of "It's none of your business" shrugs. Could the auditors — possibly "friends of the University" — be letting Branch and Bowles use the married students' rent money for inappropriate purposes? That question wasn't fully settled after a discussion with state auditor's representative J. D. McLawhorn, who, after 30 minutes of inconsistent remarks, informed me that nothing he said was "for the record."

I'm completely satisfied that Branch, even if he misused the money, did so only for the good of the University, not because of greed or incompetence (Stith and Harris share my opinion). In fact, after a talk with University Accountant Victor Bowle's, with whose remarks Harris contradicted Branch, it became doubtful that the funds had been misused at all. Rather, it seemed that they were bieng spent entirely on married students — at least, that's the way Bowle's made it appear.

"Made it appear" — phrases like this weaken any explanation of the controversy. Unfortunately, though, they may be necessary to avoid calling somebody a liar; and, naive as I perhaps am, I cannot imagine any of the people involved being such.

Nevertheless, various statistics and statements so greatly differ from each other that one cannot help but speculate about confusion — intended or unintended — somewhere; as stated earlier, even the utterances of University officials seem disturbingly inconsistent, especially when you compare Bowles and Branch's.

Thus, even if Stith and Harris (both competent reporters) are wrong about Victory Village, they have rendered a noteworthy service by, if nothing else, pointing out the need for refinements in the University accounting system.

Liberals Aided Mrs. Wallace's Victory

(Editor's note — This article originally appeared in the Yale Daily News.)

By VICTOR H. ASHE

With seven state primaries held two weeks ago, the preliminaries to the 1966 congressional and state elections have officially begun. Last week's mortality rate was high. An Indiana incumbent congressman serving his ninth term went down to defeat. A former governor of New Mexico failed to win his party's nomination for governor again. In the heart of Dixie, Alabama, George and Lurleen Wallace beat off all comers (including two former governors) in the Democratic primary and are now favored to win another four-year term in Montgomery November 8 over GOP Congressman James D. Martin.

Hated with a purple passion by every liberal in the country, Wallace and his former dime-store-clerk wife seem likely to encourage this enmity up to 1971 when the term expires. To paraphrase a Wallace slogan, Alabama stood up for George last week after four years of George standing up for Alabama.

It is remarkable that any state would choose to elect such a political sideshow to the highest office in the state. In any other state it would have ended in disaster. Imagine Bill Scranton running his wife Mary to retain power. Or Carl Sanders of Georgia running his wife. Even if John Patterson, Wallace's immediate predecessor, had run his wife, there is little doubt that the voters of Alabama at that time in their history would have rejected this parody of their constitution.

The answer to why Wallace could do it and get away with it lies in part with his acute political genius. But in large measure it lies in the misguided tactics that some civil rights groups and liberals have pursued.

The strong tactics of constant demonstrations have been successful in many ways. They have alerted the nation to the inequities of the Negroes' life. They have strengthened the Negroes' resolve to overcome their plight. But at the same time such blatant attempts to institute either Negro control of elections or overwhelming Negro influence over white candidates has frightened white voters.

Perhaps whites, after a century of apathy towards legitimate Negro grievances, should be frightened, but the result has been to polarize white voter sentiment (which accounts for only 75 per cent of the total vote) around a George Wallace who in their mind has the guts to stand up and say no.

Since the passage of the 1965 Voting Rights Act, there have been frequent stories (seemingly inspired by professional Negro groups) in the press about thousands of Negroes, who are not literate, registering to vote. The automatic and almost irrational reaction of whites is fear. Martin Luther King Jr. went to Alabama personally to campaign for Attorney-General Richmond Flowers over Wallace. Consequently, even more whites voted for Wallace out of fear of the Negroes suddenly taking over than out of support for Lurleen.

This is a strange dichotomy for civil rights groups, because they have been terribly successful in most every field. The Selma marches were brilliant and George Wallace played into their hands by sending troops to block their passage. But in terms of quietly integrating themselves into the Alabama political structure, the recent primary results indicate the weaknesses of these tactics.

The civil rights revolution has genuinely frightened whites in the South. The courts and legislative bodies of the land have generally sided with the Negroes. The only legal weapon left for whites to respond with is the ballot box with a vote for George C Wallace or his proxy.

There are many times when strategy dictates massive marches and sit-ins to achieve one's goals. A great deal of legislation has resulted from this. Sit-ins dramatized the need for equal accommodations statutes. But there is also a time when strategy, if not emotion, dictates calm, restraint, and moderation.

Somehow an impression was created in the minds of white Alabamans that the Negro under the tight control of the NAACP and Martin Luther King Jr. were going to assume political dominance in the state. Alarmed, many whites, who might under normal conditions have rejected Lurleen Wallace for Governor, saw no alternative but to back the one person who would continue to defy the "mob."

One can always answer that the tide is running against Wallace and his type of philosophy is doomed. No doubt this is true. His days are numbered. But why help him perpetuate himself?

Performing Arts Provides Freedom

By M KE JENNINGS

"It might seem that we're cloistered here, but to us it's really freedom."

Priscilla Cronmelin, a college freshman ballet major at Winston - Salem's North Carolina School of the Performing Arts, is right on two counts.

It does seem that the students at the School are regimented and confined beyond what most kinds would stand.

And there's no doubt that they feel free to do what they really want.

The School is in its first year of operation. It was established by an act of the 1963 Legislature which stipulated that:

(1) The school be open by audition to college, high school and younger students throughout the nation who have exceptional talent in music, dance or drama.

(2) Enrollment not exceed 600.

(3) The State initially put up $325,000, but the rest of the first two years' budget come from private sources.

(4) A board headed by Dr. Vittorio Giannini, famous composer and former instructor at the Juilliard School of Music, choose the site.

In bidding for the School, Winston-Salem citizens raised almost $1,000,000 in two days and persuaded the Forsyth County School Board and Commissioners to make a gift of James A. Gray High School. Raleigh, Greensboro and Charlotte also bid for the School.

Giannini was named the School's president when the school itself was in the planning stage.

A tough-looking, burly man, Giannini is a hard-nosed administrator. He insists that the School be run according to his philosophy, which includes belief in total, planned discipline over every hour of a student's time.

He wants to get the best students together with the best artists in an atompshere conducive to the arts. He assured himself of a top-notch faculty by getting the Legislature to approve salaries ranging up to $14,000 per year. His faculty includes:

Saul Caston, long-time director of the Denver Symphony;

Rose Bampton, famous dramatic soprano;

Ruggerio Ricci, concert violinist;

Andres Segovia, classical guitarist;

Actor Sidney Blackmer; and

Cost to the student is kept as low as possible. Tuition in the high school division is free to North Carolina residents and $200 to $250 to others. In the college division it is $300 to $350 for North Carolina residents and $600 to $650 for others. All other fees combined, including board, total about $700.

The School is the first in the United States both in the source of basic support — state funds — and in the scope of arts, subjects, diplomas and age groups (from age 11 to college senior).

Facilities include classrooms, dance studios, teaching and practice studios, a rehearsal hall, a theater, two dormitories and a cafeteria. Planned facilities include a concert hall, college classroom building, college library, combination student center and cafeteria, amphitheater and two more dorms.

Mrs. Elizabeth Trottman, the School's public information officer, said the School is "running at capacity now. Our present enrollment includes 143 high school and younger students and 86 college students." About half the students are from out of state.

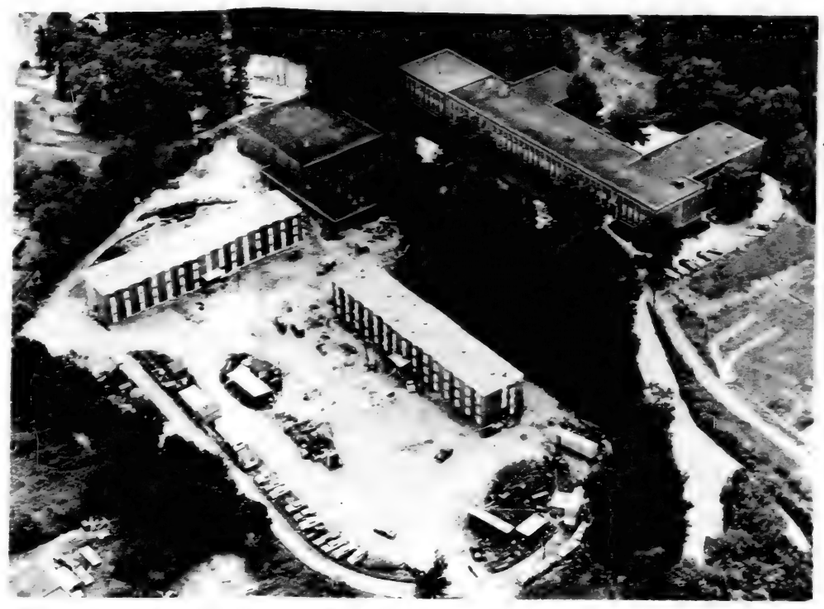
The facilities are of the best quality. The 24 pianos are all new Steinways. The theater is completely portable. The rotating stage and movable lights and props make possible any arrangement from proscenium to theatre-in-the-round.

The work load is staggering. Performing classes run from 8 till noon. Academic classes are from 1 till 6. From 7 till 10 students must study or rehearse. High school and younger students must have their lights out by 11.

The students and faculty see hard work as necessary for artistic growth. But it takes a select student to both stand the load and benefit from it.

Mrs. Trottman said students come to the School because they are "more interested in the arts than anything else. If they aren't they shouldn't be here."

The students love the work. Danny Jones, a college freshman trumpet major from Wytheville, Va., said "Everybody is here for one reason. There's not much horsing around. All the college students have made up their minds to be professional artists, and so have most of the high school students."



WINSTON-SALEM'S North Carolina School of the Performing Arts is in its first year of operation. Dr. Vittorio Giannini, composer and former instructor at the Juilliard School of Music, is president of the school which was established by an act of the 1963 North Carolina Legislature.

The students also feel the specialized atmosphere at the School helps them in ways the hard work alone cannot. Vicki Summers, a high school senior drama major from Fayetteville, said, "I think that if I were majoring in drama at another school I couldn't accomplish as much as I can here. You don't just learn drama here — you live it."

Priscilla, a native of Atlanta, Ga., said, "Even the academic instructors have been artists. They understand what a physical and emotional strain it is to perform and they make allowances for that."

The three students agreed that the arts profit most in conjunction. "An opera singer has to be an actress," Danny said, "and she can learn this best from someone whose main interest is acting."

The School is a closed, specialized community. But the members are free to follow their interests. Those interests happen to be, because of the selection process, homogeneous.

There is unlimited freedom at the School of the Arts. It is the freedom of those with common interests to pursue a common goal.

It is the freedom to be productive.

Cattle Explosions

BRUNSWICK, Germany (AP) — About 20 explosions rocked a section of the Iron Curtain border earlier this month when a herd of cattle from East Germany strayed into a Communist - mined strip, customs officials reported.

Three of the cattle were killed in the explosions, officials said, and 12 had to be slaughtered after Communist guards dragged them from the minefield with long poles. The herd belonged to an East German collective

OUR AVERAGE GRADUATE OF READING DYNAMICS READS 4.7 TIMES FASTER WITH EQUAL or BETTER COMPREHENSION THAN HIS BEGINNING SPEED

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:

Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.

Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.

Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual

Mike Balog

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

UNC'S GLEE CLUB will appear in a dozen European cities between June 15 and July 18. The singing group, headed by Prof. Joe Carter, will appear on the Ed Sullivan show Sunday, June 12.

'Hark The Sound' Travels To Europe This Summer

By PETE IVEY

"Hark the Sound of Tar Heel Voices" will have a special meaning in Europe this summer as 40 singers of the Carolina Glee Club go on a concert tour of The British Isles and France, Holland, Germany and Switzerland, June 15 to July 18.

The UNC musicians will be heard by collegiate and public audiences on a unique series of one - night stands.

Prof. Joel Carter, director of the Glee Club, said the repertoire will include musical interpreations of the life and ideas of Thomas Jefferson.

Adaptations of the poetic works of Robert Frost will also be sung by the UNC vocalists.

The program will include North Carolina songs and will have a number of Negro spirituals.

Ed Sullivan will present the UNC Glee Club on his CBS broadcast Sunday, June 12. Appearance on the well-known Sullivan Show will be the bon voyage performance of the Tar Heel group. They will take a plane for Europe June 15.

Alvin Tyndall, tour manager of the Glee Club and native of New Bern, said the 40 singers will give concerts in Amsterdam, Cologne, Lyon, Bern, Geneva, Leipzig, Wittenberg, Munich, Berlin, Copenhagen, Hamburg, London, Wales and Paris.

They will sing in both West Berlin and in East Berlin, it was stated by Earl Hadden of Charlotte, who is aiding with arrangements.

After five weeks of singing performances, the Glee Club will return to New York on July 18.

The European trip is made possible by the generous contributions of several hundred people — chiefly from alumni who were members of the Glee Club at Chapel Hill when they were students in the University at Chapel Hill. Some of the alumni sang in quartets and chorales and glee club groups 40 and 50 years ago.

The whole trip will cost $30,000, and a total of $26,000 is now on hand. Member of the Glee Club are themselves paying $200 each for expenses.

Included in the numbers planned for concerts in Europe are selections from Beethoven, Bach, Lizst, Verdi and Wagner.

Jane Craige Gray Award Will Be Announced Today

The winner of the 1966 Jane Craige Gray Award will be announced at a tea today at 4 p.m. in the Kappa Delta House.

The award is given annually to recognize the member of the junior class who has been most outstanding in character, scholarship and leadership.

Given by the Beta Chi Chapter of Kappa Delta, the award is in memory of Jane Craige Gray, the wife of Gordon Gray, a former president of UNC. Mrs. Gray died in 1953.

The selection committee for the award included Robert Kepner of the office of the Dean of Men; Miss Leith Merrow of Alexandria, Va., retiring chairman of the Women's Honor Council; Miss Kathy Cauble of Hickory, retiring chairman of women's orientation; Britt Gordon of Grand Rapids, Mich., retiring student body vice president, and Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael.

Ban Suit Conflicts Mount

jurisdiction and further invoke the old "doctrine of abstention" of Federal Courts from taking jurisdiction in questions of certain state laws. This doctrine was reversed last year by the Supreme Court in a case regarding a Louisiana legislative committee on un-American activities.

The defendants moved that the court "abstain from making any determination as to the constitutionality of these statutes and regulations before the North Carolina Supreme Court has an opportunity to interpret them."

This legal question of whether the state supreme court should be allowed to review the case before the federal court will probably be the second issue.

It seems that there are only three significant facts denied by the defendants; the other denials involve legalistic interpretations.

The first fact contested is that the invitations to Aptheker and Wilkinson "were approved by the then Chancellor Paul Sharp and the defendant Friday."

The defendants deny this allegation of paragraph 16, but admit paragraph 17, which states:

"The plaintiffs are informed and believe that the then Chancellor Sharp set up a format of a panel discussion, with a former dean of the University Law School (Henry Brandis) presiding and with other faculty members on the panel to be able, if appropriate, to rebut anything the plaintiff Aptheker might say.

"The plaintiffs are informed and believe that the defendants Friday and Sitterson and Chancellor Sharp supported the invitations in statements to the Executive Committee of the Trustees."

The question is one of "support" in the trustee executive committee meeting by Friday and Sharp to the invitations, as opposed to "approval".

The Chapel Hill Weekly reported on Feb. 2 that a memorandum from Sharp reportedly requested that Aptheker and Wilkinson be allowed to speak. The memorandum was proposed originally by a faculty advisory committee, headed by Prof. George Nicholson.

The second factual question is over the denial by the defendants that "the defenant Sitterson authorized Police Officer Arthur Beaumont to arrest any one."

A third factual conflict is whether the speaker visitation regulations set by the Board of Trustees were complied with by students.

The defendants do not explicitly deny that the students complied with the regulations, but allege that the request for the speakers' invitation was 'not made in good faith, but was for the purpose of creating a status or situation for the purpose of bringing this action.

Tar Heels Finish Third

Terps Romp To 12th ACC Track Title

The defending champions won 10 of the 17 events for 103 team points, 3 1-2 points short of the ACC record.

Host South Carolina won five events for runnerup honors with 54 points.

North Carolina had 23 points, followed by Duke with 19, North Carolina State with 17, Clemson with 15, Wake Forest with 14 and Virginia with 10.

Bob Taylor, South Carolina's all-purpose runner, was voted the meet's top individual performer. He won the 880-yard run, came in second in the mile and was anchor man on South Carolina's victorious mile relay team.

Three records were broken and two tied.

Rod Stewart of Duke heaved the shot 58 feet, 3 inches to break the old mark of 57-9 1-4 he set last year. Marks' leap of 49 feet, 1 1-4 inches in the triple jump beat the old record of 46-7 1-4, set by Avery Nelson of Clemson in 1964.

Marks also won the broad jump.

Lee's time of 21 seconds for the 220-yard dash was considered a new record for the race run on a curve. The old mark was 21.5, held by several sprinters. The ACC record for the 220 on a straightaway track is 20.1 by Dave Sime of Duke.

Lee also won the 100 - yard dash. Running as anchor man on Maryland's 440-yard relay team Lee lost to Fulton Dukes of South Carolina in a photo finish.

However, the slightly built Maryland sprinter was the top individual scorer in the meet with 12 points.

Frank Costello of Maryland tied his own high jump record with a leap of 6 feet, 10 inches.

South Carolina's 440 - yard relay team, composed of Duke, Bob Harris, James Wingo and Eddie Sonnenfeld, equalled the meet record of 41.8.

Maryland's Carson won a new event, the 440-yard intermediate hurdles: in a time of 54.3. This was also a track record. Carson also captured the 120 high hurdles.

The summaries:

440 relay — 1, South Carolina (Sonnefield, Wingo, Harris, and Dukes. 2, Maryland. 3, Virginia. 4, Clemson. 5, North Carolina. 41.8 ties record.

100 yard dash — 1, Lee, Maryland. 2, Dukes, South Carolina. 3, England, N. C. State. 4, Pettie, Virginia. 5, Cone, Clemson. 9.8.

440-yard run — 1, Sonnefield, South Carolina. 2, Newton, Duke. 3, Turner, South Carolina. 4, Warfield, Maryland. 5, Dyksterhouse, Virginia. 47.9.

Javelin — 1, Dull, Maryland 2, Buffaloe, N. C. State. 3, Kaveny, N. C. State. 4, White, Maryland. 5, Nawrocki, Maryland. 223-3 1-2.

Broad jump — 1, Marks, Maryland. 2, Kahle, Wake Forest. 3, Chapman, South Carolina. 4, Smith, Maryland. 5, Rainwater, Wake Forest. 23-6¾.

Shot put — 1, Stewart, Duke 2, Heron, Maryland. 3, Benz, Clemson. 4, Nonenberg, Maryland. 5, Alley, North Carolina. 58-3 new record.

Mile — 1, Williams, North Carolina. 2, Taylor, South Carolina. 3, Matthews, Maryland 4, Beauchamp, Maryland. 5, Vilhman, Wake Forest. 4:15.7

120 high — 1, Carson, Maryland. 2, Gatch, South Carolina 3, Martin, Duke. 4, Fraser, Duke. 5, Patterson, Maryland 14.8.

Discus — 1, Swarts, South Carolina. 2, Wood, North Carolina. 3, Drescher, Maryland. 4, Varner, North Carolina. 5, Nonenberg, Maryland. 173-1.

880 — 1, Taylor, South Carolina. 2, Washburn, Maryland 3, Donahue, Maryland. 4, Tindall, Clemson. 5, Carpenter, North Carolina, 1:52.2.

220 — Lee, Maryland. 2, Cone, Clemson. 3, Harris, South Carolina. 4, Pettit, Virginia. 5, Boxer, Maryland. 21.0 new record on curved track.

George McRae: Carolina's Bullpen Ace

By BILL ROLLINS
DTH Sports Writer

It was early in the spring. Carolina had played four baseball games, and Coach Walter Rabb was still experimenting with his pitching staff.

But George McRae, a strapping 6-3, 200-pound sophomore right-hander, had pitched to nary a batter in game competition.

It was a pretty dismal time for George, but he could still smile and crack a joke.

One day he was kicking around with Danny Talbott, and when the talk got around to pitching, George cracked, "Danny, if he (Rabb) ever puts me in a game, I want you to show me where the mound is."

around to pitching, George cracked, "Danny, if he (Rabb) ever puts me in a game, I want you to show me where the mound is."

They both laughed.

But three weeks later, after McRae had made his fifth relief appearance and blanked Maryland on two hits over eight innings for his second win, Talbott shook George's hand and said:

"Hey, it looks like you've found that mound pretty good now!"

And this time they both smiled.

Because by then, the whole team knew that if a starting pitcher ever faltered, George would be there to pick them up.

And when Rabb has needed relief for his starters, his cry of "let George do it," has not been one of dismay, but one of confidence, and all has gone well.

Except once.

That was when McRae worked two innings against Connecticutt during spring break and was pounded for a home run, double and single while yielding three earned runs.

But that bleak day against the Uconns marked the start of something big for George and the Tar Heels. Because since then, this big, ruddy - complexioned guy they call "Swamp Fox" has simply stopped letting opponents score when he's in the game.

Almost.

N. C. State did manage to score once against him, but it took the help of two UNC errors. And that unearned run is the only one McRae has allowed since Connecticut.

Seven games, 23 innings, no earned runs.

Top ERA

Since developing a virtual mastery of the opposition, George has lowered his earned-run-average to an ACC-leading 1.00 and upped his record to 4-0, good enough to tie for the conference lead in winning percentage.

It is no coincidence that Carolina won 10 straight games and annexed the ACC championship during McRae's stretch of brilliance. Rather, as one observer noted, the big soph has been the "soul and heart's inspiration" of the pennant drive.

Heart of Drive

That winning string started April 19, when George finished Danny Walker's 8-1 conquest of Duke with three innings of one-hit pitching. And the conference crown was clinched when he worked three perfect innings in relief of Beattie Leonard to get the 2-1 win over Virginia.

In between those two performances was his eight-inning, two-hit stint against Maryland, which George insists is "the best pitching I've ever done."

He has worked in seven of the 10 games in the win skein, gotten credit for the victory in three, and recorded the equivalent of a major league "save" when he stopped a Clemson rally when the tying run at the plate in the 5-3 UNC win at Death Valley.

Another interesting statistic is the .157 batting average to which he has limited opposing batters. The UNC staff's mark is a sparkling .204.

Figured in Rabb's Plans

At the beginning of the season, George didn't figure that he'd be very prominent in the pitching picture, but Coach Rabb had a different view:

"George had shown a lot of promise as a freshman, and we were fairly certain he could help us win some ball games. Yes, we had planned to give him a very good look."

Rabb looked closely, liked what he saw, and this is what he said of his relief ace one day last week:

"George has a good, sinking fast ball and just an average curve. But what makes him impressive is that he can come into a game in any situation and throw strikes, with plenty on the ball.

"He has a lot of poise, even more 'guts,' and he stands his ground and challenges every batter — keeps 'em loose and usually makes them hit his pitch."

McRae, who averaged 15-18 strikeouts per game for Riegelwood's Acme-Delco High (near Wilmington), credits UNC graduate assistant coach Bill Haywood with developing what is now his best pitch.

"Haywood showed me how to grip the ball to make it sink," George revealed, "and within a week or so I gained control of the pitch. It was the first time anyone had ever tried to show me something new, and now the sinking fast ball is my most effective pitch.

Shaw Provides Assist

"Really," he continued, "I guess John Shaw (catcher) has been about as big a factor in my success this year as I have been myself. John lets you know he has complete confidence in your ability, and when he calls a pitch, you know he feels that you can throw it for a strike — and he expects it. I never shake off a sign any more, and if I put the ball where John places his mitt, we'll stay out of trouble."

Likes Pressure

How does George feel about his non - starting status?

"I like to work under pressure," he says, "because it makes me bear down more. It's good to relieve as long as I can see action pretty regularly. I almost wasted away about a month ago when we got five straight complete games from our starters, but when the team's going good like that, it makes 'just warming up' a lot easier. Like any other pitcher, I want all the work I can get."

ACE FIREMAN George McRae goes to work against Duke. The big righthander is unbeaten with four wins and an earned run average that is hovering around 1.00.

Pharmacy Students Honored

A senior pharmacy student from Carolina Beach was a triple award winner at the annual Awards Night held last Monday night at the School of Pharmacy.

Neill Hector Musselwhite III was presented the Buxton Williams Hunter Medal for excelling in campus citizenship and scholarship, the Pharmacy Senate Award for the greatest student loyalty and service to the pharmacy school and the Outgoing Student Body President's Key.

Honors to other pharmacy students during Awards Night ceremonies were as follows:

The Pharmacy Faculty Award, presented by E. R. Squibb & Sons for the highest average during four years of pharmacy studies, to Margaret Clayton Gebhardt of Charlotte.

The Student Body Award, a mortar and pestle plaque for high qualities of scholarship and character, extracurricular participation and promise of future distinction in pharmacy, to Jim Noah Tripp of Sanford.

The Merck Awards in Pharmacy, for noteworthy achievements in pharmacy, to Terry Walter Heatherington of Bessemer City and Walter Clark Doggett of Summerfield.

The Bristol Award in Pharmacy, for noteworthy achievement, Neillie Elizabeth Paterson of Charlotte.

Kappa Epsilon Award, to a female student for outstanding leadership, character and scholarship, to Ellon Grace Seawell of Rockingham.

Lilly Achievement Award, for superior scholastic and professional achievement, to Alan Warren Solter of Colonia, N. J.

M. L. Jacobs Memorial Award, for the greatest excellence in pharmaceutical organic chemistry, to June Richardson Peddycord of Kernersville.

Rho Chi First-Year Award, for the highest scholarship in the first year of the pharmacy curriculum, to Graham Abner Patrick of Greensboro.

Fraternity Scholastic Award, to the pharmacy fraternity whose members attain the highest scholastic average in the preceding two semesters, to Kappa Epsilon.

The Distinguished Teaching Award for 1966, to Dr. Fred W. Ellis, pharmacologist on the faculty of the UNC School of Medicine.

Lawler To Head Program

'YES' Educates Underprivileged

Education is a difficult and complex process even under the best of circumstances.

If this statement is true, what of the task of educating the child who is from a poverty home?

According to former UNC student body president Michael H. Lawler, "Educating the children of poverty is a terribly hard process — but for that very reason, it is also more rewarding."

Lawler, coordinator of field activities for Youth Educational Services (YES) is heading a $149,000 summer tutorial program for disadvantaged children.

The Office of Economic Opportunity has just announced the grant for programs in Boone, Charlotte, Greensboro, Raleigh, Laurinburg, Fayetteville and Bertie County.

YES is a private, non-profit condeferation of college students interested in North Carolina's educational and social progress.

"We feel our summer program will be tutoring with a difference," says Lawler.

What are these differences?

"For one thing, these tutors can provide a vision of what's possible for disadvantaged children," says the Rev. R.A.L. Walker, student chaplain at Meredith College in Raleigh. Rev. Walker is working with the YES program to help recruit tutors.

"Tutors can provide encouragement to help the child break through the pattern of disinterest that leads to despair," he says.

A gap often exists between a child's education and his everyday life. YES's tutors will try to erase this gap by living in the poverty neighborhood where they will be working.

Rev. Walker points out, "These college students are not educational experts. But they can become a friend in the life of the child.

"They can overcome environmental factors, especially the factor of 'nobody cares.'"

YES will draw summer tutors from its exisiting 26 tutorial projects. As much as possible, tutors will be assigned near their homes. Neighborhood workers — some paid, some volunteer — will be recruited to aid the college tutors.

Jean Allen, East Carolina College student who will be on the Raleigh staff, tells what YES looks for in its tutors:

"First, of course, is an interest in people," she says. "Also, a lack of prejudice. Then, patience to teach children who have been frustrated a long time."

YES has no intention of usurping the school systems' tutorial function.

"There is more than enough room for the efforts of the schools and that of YES," agrees Fred Cundiff, director of Title I programs of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act for the Greensboro city schools. (Cundiff is working with YES in recruiting.)

"YES's program is neighborhood - based, whereas ours is school-based," he says. "Then, too, we stress academics compared with the emphasis YES places on the total child."

YES uses the term "enrichment" to refer to non-academic aspects of its tutorial program.

Lawler says, "As we use it, 'enrichment' means exposing the children of poverty to things which other children take for granted: books, magazines, nature study, films, parks, zoos, libraries.

"Basically, it's a matter of pushing back the walls which poverty has thrown up around these children," Lawler says.

The tutor will benefit from his experience, YES personnel feel.

Rev. Walker says, "The experience will make the college students more keenly aware of the problems in this state, and really, of the world. In short, we feel tutoring makes for bigger persons."

The grant from OEO will provide funds for five fulltime staff members to help with school tutorial projects from this September until March, 1967.

YES was formed in January, 1964, when Terry Sanford, then governor, challenged college civil rights demonstrators to "turn toward civic enterprise and translate physical action into intelligible dialogue with the entire community."

YES's current goals include the support of existing tutorial programs, help in starting new ones and the exchange of ideas with persons in related fields.

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:

Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.

Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.

Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual

Mike Balog
Duke University

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.

Dick League
Law School
U.N.C.

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

Dr. Jorge Ferriz
N. C. Memorial Hospital

IN RALEIGH . . .

Part of A Letter Home

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

At the Demonstration . . .

- You will see a Reading Dynamics graduate read at amazing speed from a book he has never seen before and then tell in detail what he has read.
- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

MAIL OR FEMALE?? No one knows who his hunter is when he plays U.N.C.L.E. (University of North Carolina League of Executioners.) Stop by the Tar Heel offices to join. Deadline is 6 p.m. today.

Are You Sweating Finals? Enter DTH-UNCLE Club

Want to learn how to kill friends and eliminate people? Join the Daily Tar Heel U.N.C.L.E. Club by 6 p.m. today and you will become an executioner by your own choice.

However, unless you are a skilled henchmen you may become a victim. The game is simple. Just place your name on the list in the DTH offices, free of charge, and the name of your victim will be supplied to you in some devious way within two days.

The U.N.C.L.E. (University of North Carolina League of Executioners) list is located in the DTH office on second floor of Graham Memorial. DTH phone numbers are 933-1011 or 933-1012.

If you kill your victim before your hunter kills you — well, you're lucky. But prizes (!?) will be awarded by a panel of judges (to be announced), and winners will be listed in the DTH.

Contestants will compete in the following categories:

— First Kill.
— Most Bizzare Kill.
— Most Discreet Kill.
— Most Professional Kill.
— Most Elusive Victim.
— Neatest Kill.

First, second, and third prizes will be awarded in the "Bizzare category."

Hunters will not be allowed to kill innocent bystanders. They must work alone and if the wrong victim is killed they must turn in their hunting license.

A victim will be allowed to kill his hunter if the hunter reveals himself, but the same rules hold for victims as hunters.

Rape is not allowed in any form.

Anyone may enter the DTH-U.N.C.L.E. Club. The only requirement is a sadistic mind (urge to kill) and student status.

When a victim realizes he has had it, he is on his honor to record the time and method of the kill and submit it to the DTH offices before 6 p.m. the following day, except Sunday when the offices are closed.

Remember, anything goes; and you're on your honor to report your own death. Prizes and judges' names will be announced soon.

By the way, by reading this story, which was written by a world - famous hypnotist and calculated to destroy the mind of any living person, you have succeeded in transforming yourself into a helpless suicide victim and will immediately throw yourself into the path of the next car you see which is traveling more than 40 miles per hour.

You will now begin walking towards a road . . .

State Dept. Picks Senior

UNC senior John R. Hamilton, has been appointed as an intern for this summer under the State Department's Summer Interm Program.

Hamilton will receive his A. B. degree in History this June and plans to attend law school next fall.

He was selected last December as the representative from Carolina from the seven candidates that applied for the internship.

The selection was made by a committee composed of the several local administrators.

Hamilton has served as co-chairman of the Toronto Exchange. He also represented Carolina as an exchange scholar with the University of Puerto Rico in '64-'65.

He has an excellent command of Spanish and intends to seek a position in the foreign service after securing his law degree.

Besides the valuable experience that Hamilton will gain from the internship, he will also receive a salary for the summer of over $1300.

Student Party Picks Wilson As Chairman

His election came one week after the party annulled a previous action of the party in electing Sandy Hobgood chairman.

Hobgood was the other candidate for Sunday night's 17-9 voted Dick Levy, whose name has been mentioned often in pre - election speculation as a possible nominee, was not a candidate.

Tarheel Terror IV, the Chi Psi frog which won the state jumping contest and is now a candidate for the national title, was also nominated for chairman.

Myles Eastwood was elected policy vice - chairman, and Hurley Thompson was elected administrative vice-chairman, by acclamation.

Anne Belcher was picked to be secretary. Joe Auten is sergeant at arms, and Stewart Rosen was elected treasurer.

Jed Dietz, Anne Brownlee and Alan Banov were elected to the advisory board for full-year terms. Paul Dickson and David Shearon were elected to half - year terms.

Eastwood, who serves as chairman of the Advisory Board will meet from 3 to 5 p.m. Thursday in the Grail Room of GM.

Wilson is serving his second term as chairman of the Orientation Commission

Forum Offers Discussion On U.S. Viet Policy Today

Four foreign policy experts, including the son of the ambassador to Viet Nam, will discuss "The Future of U. S. Foreign Policy in Viet Nam" in Memorial Hall tonight.

The panel discussion featuring Dr. Henry Kissinger, George Cabot Lodge, Allard K. Lowenstein, and Dr. Arthur Larsen, will begin at 7:30.

The program is being sponsored by the Carolina Forum.

Larson has also served as head of the United States Information Agency 1956-1957 and under secretary of labor 1954-1956.

Kissinger, the author of several books, is a consultant for the National Security Council, and is considered to be one of the top civilian foreign policy experts.

Lodge is the son of ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge. Lodge's positions include being a past assistant secretary of labor for international affairs and is now director of the division of international studies at Harvard.

He also ran unsuccessfully against Edward Kennedy for U. S. Senator from Massachusetts.

Lowenstein, formerly adviser to Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, is now a member of the executive committee for Reappraisal of Far Eastern Policy.

George Cabot Lodge

He has also served as professor at N. C. State university and president of the United States National Student Association.

Dr. Henry Kissinger

Lowenstein has been active in the civil rights movement and has championed a number of leftist causes.

Larsen, the fourth member of the panel, is director of the Duke University World Rule of Law Center. In an address at a recent conference on containment policy in Asia at the University of Wisconsin, Larson, who served as a top adviser to former President Dwight Eisenhower, attacked president Johnson's reliance on power in foreign policy.

Students will be able to question members of the panel following their presentations. The panel discussion will be taped by WUNC-TV for later broadcast.

Kissinger and Lodge were invited to participate in the panel when George E. Nicholson III, forum director and several other members of the organization travelled to Boston in February.

Forum chairman Nicholson cited the fact that four nationally known foreign policy experts will be appearing together here and said, "I think it is a real privilege for the Forum to have the opportunity to present such a distinguished group.

"The presentation of differing viewpoints on subjects of current importance has long been a prime function of the Forum."

The Carolina Forum is the official Student Government agency for inviting speakers to come to the campus.

New Space Shot Set Today —Includes Long Space Walk

CAPE KENNEDY, Fla., (AP) — Two confident Gemini pilots yesterday breezed through the last barriers to a daring dash into space today — set for a moon-flight rendezvous rehearsal and a record 2 1-2 - hour space walk.

The final countdown on the Atlas-Agena target rocket will begin at 12:10 a.m. (EST) today — with the Gemini-Titan countdown beginning at 6:39 a.m. (EST) aiming at a 11:39 p.m. launch.

The Atlas-Agena target ship launch is set for 10 a.m. (EST).

The specter of bad weather in the Atlantic faded away with word from meteorologists at sea. A weak depression that might have become a storm was dissipating and the launch and recovery areas were well-protected by a fair-weather pressure system.

With that hurdle past, the Gemini 9 crew, Air Force Lt. Col. Thomas P. Stafford and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Eugene A. Cernan, whipped through final review and training sessions.

Their 70-hours and 40 minutes in space is a hectic, jam-packed parade of events that will see the 32-year-old Cernan maneuvering himself solo through the heavens on Wednesday.

He will try out for the first time a back-pack maneuvering unit with 12 tiny jets and its own independent oxygen supply — the forerunner to devices that will enable man to work free and alone in space. An extended tether connected to the spacecraft will allow Cernan to get as far away as 140 feet.

But before and after those orbital acrobatics, Stafford, at 35 a crack pilot, will guide the Gemini 9 spacecraft through some intricate and difficult maneuvers that will duplicate as close as possible some of the rendezvous techniques needed to return from the moon.

He will fly the Gemini 9 spacefraft into a 4 1-2 hour pursuit of the Agena target rocket at blast-off Tuesday— a hurry-up rendezvouz chase that will cut two hours off the time it took Gemini 8 to perform the same task two months ago.

After practice dockings with the fuel-loaded Agena target, they will shut down for the night to rest up for Cernan's space walk the next day.

But those initial dockings were the point in the last Gemini mission where trouble cropped up endangering the lives of Gemini 8 pilots Neil A. Armstrong and David R. Scott. A maneuvering jet on the Agena went wild and sent the joined vehicles into an uncontrolled spin.

During Cernan's space walk on Wednesday, Stafford will undock with the Agena and move about 80-feet away from the target ship. Then — with Cernan out on his tether — Stafford will guide the Gemini into a mock rescue of his space buddy who will play the part of a disabled astronaut.

After Cernan returned to the spaceship, Stafford will redock with the 7,000-pound Agena and trigger the Agena's big thrust motors — the first time two space vehicles will have joined and one will be used to propel the other. This too is potentially a most dangerous moment. The Agena has been called "a flying bomb" in space b cause of its fuel load.

On the third day of the flight, the Agena's engines will be used to twice change the orbits of the joined vehicles with Stafford controlling the Agena rockets by electrical connections from the Gemini.

If all goes well, there will be two more rendezvous attempts — one in which Stafford will pretend that his radar is out and attempt to find the Agena without electronic aids.

The final rendezvous will see Stafford attempt to reach the Agena from a higher orbit instead of a lower one. That little trick is also designed to gain experience in case trouble arises when the Apollo men voyage to the moon.

On that moon trip, the Apollo mothership will go into orbit around the moon, discharge a small space cab to the moon's surface with two astronauts aboard.

Citizens Should Learn Of 'Evils'

By ALAN BANOV
DTH Staff Writer

The state prisons director told the Carolina Political Union Sunday night, "Until and unless we get the citizens of the state really aware of what happens in the prisons, we can't hope to correct the evils of the system."

Lee Bounds, former Professor of Public Law and Government in the Institute of Government, said, "Removing the negative values about the system would be only part of the program.

"We need positive approaches and more competent personnel to convey to the people the challenge."

Outlining a history of the prison organization, he noted that "we were off to a wrong start in many ways — every General Assembly from 1868 to 1901 changed the administrative pattern of the prisons."

From 1901 to 1925 prison expenses were paid by the labors of the prisoners themselves, Bounds asserted. "They were exploited to he full. From the very beginning the State constitution has asked the General Assembly to keep in mind that the prisons be self-supporing.

"The public wasn't much concerned about the barbarities in the prisons," he said, "until Judge Susie Sharpe held the handcuffing of a prisoner for 30 hours "an assault."

North Carolina became "aware of some of the evils of the system" then, Bounds said. "The League of Women Voters and other militant groups lobbied for the establishment of a prison system independent of the Highway and Public Works Commission, of which it was a subordinate unit.

"It's shocking to a lot of people to be told that as late as 1955 there were still riveted-on leg bands for prisoners," the graduate of the University of Virginia Law School said.

The 1955 the prisons took off the rivented-on step - chains and a removable leather strap was then used, Bounds noted. But with the new straps, the men could no longer be chained to their beds.

"Men could be confined to their beds with the old chains, but when we got 'humane' more problems were created. We could no longer control the prisoners' actions throughout the night, so it wouldn't be inaccurate to say that a rape occurs in the prison every night."

Bounds, who claims that he "wrote all of the prison regulations and legislation since 1952," explained that the "rat system" ostracizes any prisoner who informs the authorities of discrepancies.

"The moment a person becomes a rat," he said, "we have to handle him individually. There are very few individual cells, and most are devoted to 'rats.' They are locked there for their own protection."

There are no physical means for locking anyone else up. "This has resulted in a rash of self-mutilation," Bounds declared.

"Over 500 prisoners have mutilated themselves at least several times. This is a method of getting oneself protected, either in a hospital or at least by the attention of prison officials."

Mangum Competition

Competition for the Willie P Mangum Metal for oratory will be held Sunday night at 7:30 on the third floor of New West.

The Mangum Metal is presented annually to the graduating senior who presents the best five minute speech before a panel of three faculty members.

Sponsored by the Di - Phi Senate, the competition is open to all seniors regardless of their speaking experience.

The topic of the contest is open, and seniors may speak on anything they wish.

The gold Mangum Metal will be presented from the stage at June commencement.

Those interested in participating are asked to contact Di-Phi President John Greenbacker at the Pi Lambda Phi house, 968-9025.

Work Permit

All foreign students who intend to be employed on campus either full - time or part-time during the summer are reminded that they must secure permission to work from Dr. Julian Mason, associate adviser for foreign students, whose office is 2 Hanes Hall. Students making inquiries should ask for Mrs. Culbreth. Permission to accept summer employment is necessary under current immigration regulations.

Students Flock To GM As Yackety Yack 'Hits The Stands'

THE YACKS ARE OUT and students thronged from afternoon classes yesterday in eager crowds to collect the booty. The new Yacks depart from many old customs: the cover is a photograph of the Old Well. The Man To Watch

Everybody has an opinion on Viet Nam: Get out! Stay in! We're wanted! We're dispised!

Everybody has an opinion. But, unfortunately, all too often not everybody has all the facts. Tonight there will be an opportunity for this gap in information to be filled.

Winding up an already outstanding year, the Carolina Forum has drawn together some if the nation's foremost experts on United States involvement in Southeast Asia for a panel discussion tonight in Memorial Hall.

A rare treat, indeed, is in store for all who go to hear this discussion. Dr. Henry Kissinger, consultant to the U. S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and The National Security Agency is considered one of the civilian foreign policy experts.

Arthur Larsen and George Cabot Lodge hold equally impressive positions in the spectrum of entertise in this field.

But certainly the most fascinating member of the panel should be Al Lowenstein. For those what remember his never-ending crusades when he was here and for us who have heard and read so much about his activities in civil rights and liberation movements all over the world, this is the man to watch.

In case there are those among our readers who missed the multi-page spread on Lowenstein in the New Yorker a few weeks ago and haven't heard about him elsewhere, we'd like to pass a story your way.

He was participating in cviil rights demonstration in Alabama when he was arrested. Through some work of oratory, he convinced the jailers to allow him telephone privileges. According to our source, the conversation went something like this:

L: Operator, I want to call Washington, D. C., Mr. Franklin Delanor Roosevelt. (At this time, Lowenstein knew FDR Jr. was not in Washington and that FDR III would answer the telephone. But he was careful not to reveal which FDR he was calling.)

FDR III: Hello.

L: Hello Frank — Al Lowenstein. (At this point the jailers perk up with the "Who the Hell is this guy?" look. Luckily for Loweinstein, they could not hear what the Washington end if the conversation is saying.)

FDR III: What the hell are you doing calling at 4 p.m.?

L: I'm in jail in Alabama.

FDR III: What am I supposed to do about it?

L: No . . . no, Frank. Don't call the White House.

FDR III: What are you talking about?

L: No, don't call the Attorney General either . . . well, at least don't call them before tomorrow morning.

The jailers were impressed, amazed and probably scared half to death. At any rate there were no beatings in that jail house that night, and the prisoners were released the next morning.

This is the way the story came to us. Perhaps, it has been doctored up a bit — but we assure you, not much. This is not intended to give the idea that Lowenstein is a professional clown. Far from it. His record is astounding. But bear in mind, he has never done anything in a dull way.

Go out tonight and see for yourself.

He Was Frustrated

Ernest Hilgard, author of Psychology for Learning (the text for psychology 26), would have rewritten his book yesterday afternoon if he had been here for the distribution of the 1966 Yackety Yacks.

In a chapter entitled "Frustration and Adjustment," Hilgard points out that one of the most prominent consequences of frustration is aggression. He gives the example of a child who gets a spanking and then goes and hits his teddy bear.

This is an example of displaced aggression. Another type of aggression is direct. And what a fine example of direct aggression after frustration there was in the parking lot beside GM yesterday afternoon.

Most students expressed their disgust with the long-awaited Yack by means of tart remarks, coming in varying degrees of profanity. But one young man went all the way. One young man was the direct aggressor's aggressor.

He left the sign of his frustration for all to see in the form of a 1966 Yackety Yack lying on the hood of an automobile—torn to shreads.

Now that's aggression.

YAF Good For UNC, But Don't Join It

When Paul King, a member of Young Americans for Freedom, told me his group was organizing at UNC, he begged me to write a column attacking the YAF. "The publicity will help us out," he admitted.

I'm happy to oblige, Paul, but not in the way you'd expect.

Although an LBJ liberal — a "collectivist," perhaps, in Ayn Rand jargon—I welcome the establishment of a YAF chapter. This year, as in the past, the Student Peace Union leftists and their allies dominated campus political discussions. They performed a valuable service in provoking examination of important issues (despite antics such as the ludicrous orange juice-drinking show), but after a while, students tired of seeing the same persons debating about the draft, poverty and Viet Nam. The SPU has had its say long enough; now it's time to hear the other side also—and hear it politely.

Wilson Clark and his Carolina Conservative Club, together with William Otis's column, provided UNC with conservative comment, but they soon lost the respect of the entire campus by airing their Speaker Ban views.

Clark's group, for all practical purposes, lost whatever goodwill it had, the moment he finished the Memorial Hall speech in which he asked the student body whether it should really go to the trouble of fighting for a totalitarian Communist's freedom of speech. Clark didn't oppose this freedom per se; he merely didn't think Herbert Aptheker — though he was entitled to under the Constitution—should come to this campus. But by the speech's end, many in the audience considered Clark another Hitler. The result: "insiders" are predicting the Carolina Conservative Club's demise by next fall. As for William Otis, his views on the virtues of property were just as effective as Clark's speech in alienating the students, after he suggested that the state legislature indeed had the power to bar Aptheker — merely because UNC is owned by the people of North Carolina; as Otis himself admits, he was dismissed by many readers as a crackpot.

Paul King's group, however, has not yet had a chance to commit the errors of logic, reason and good sense that plague most conservatives. King, for instance, although sharing Clark's hatred of communism and Otis's respect for property, did not let his opinions prevent him from saying Aptheker should come if he wanted. Indeed, William Buckley, one of YAF's national organizers, has had his own share of free speech problems due to the group's ultra-conservatism (it seems that many liberals aren't so liberal after all when it comes to letting extremists exercise their constitutional rights).

Thus, if the UNC YAF follows King and Buckley's examples, its Speaker Ban position won't clash with the rest of the student body's; hopefully, under their circumstances, YAF wouldn't enrage everybody else by taking the wrong position on "Topic A."

But do not misunderstand me when I voice my approval of YAF at this University. Although extremist organizations like King's group and the SPU facilitate a free exchange of ideas on university campuses, they should not be permitted to obtain national power; with their dogmatic ideologies they could end American life as we know it. At UNC, for example, there are at least several members of both the YAF and SPU who privately confess they'd like to see the overthrow of the present government — "a revolution," as both the rightists and leftists term it.

Yet, allowed their Constitutional rights the YAF and SPU (and its allies such as SDS) can strengthen democracy by at the very least showing it still exists in America — despite Thad Eure and the "liberals" who hissed Clark off the Memorial Hall stage. Furthermore, there's no reason why you shouldn't go to the trouble of hearing what King and his friends have to say; an argument with one of them can be quite informative, especially if you want to learn how the country shouldn't be run.

So listen to YAF's speakers and attend its rallies, but, whatever you do, don't sign a membership card.

"You mean the 'Big Hunt' is only a game?"

Communication Should Aid Ban Elimination

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Four years ago, I entered the University of North Carolina as a freshman. In a matter of months, I shall be leaving this university and the state for which this University was created. Admittedly, I have been quiet and even blase about the various crises that have confronted this campus since first I became a member of its community; but now, I feel somehwat responsible for what I think this University stands for, and with such a responsibility, I must state my opinion on a matter which I take to be a serious situation.

We have had an official ban placed on speakers on state-supported institutions: why? I think a partial reason is the lack of understanding and communicationg among the elements of the University itself, the people of North Carolina, and the legislative bodies of the state. Because of this lack of understanding, the image of this university has become one of "whiskey hill" or of "a hotbed of radicalism." This is, in my opinion, not what the University is trying to achieve. The image of this University should be something other than these; it should incorporate the real efforts of this community to search for achievement and truth through higher education.

Yet the image is not this. Rather, sensationalized the obviously politically oriented issues spark up, and are nurtured by minority groups to further their own interest, and the blaze that results burns away not at the heart of the issue, whatever it might be, but at the heart of the University itself. If there did not exist an apathy toward the University on the part of students, faculty, administration, and the people of North Carolina, there would not exist a distorted image of this University. Communication should be improved throughout the state by means of the press, television, radio, and particularly by the conversational opinions expressed by the people of this state; and this communication should not merely answer those who have a political interest in the matter, but should attempt to arouse interest and genuine concern in all quarters political, intellectual, administrative, and others.

Such an effort to enlighten and interest people in what the University really stands for has not been made. What, for example, have the campuses at Raleigh or Greensboro or Charlotte done to eliminate the Speaker Ban, and why is it that only Chapel Hill is the battleground?

Within the University itself this apathy is obvious. I cite my six professors durng the present semester as evidence. Among them, only three have devoted any time at all to discuss the Speaker Ban issue, and this has been one hour and one hour only devoted to their own opinions or to any discussion of the opinions of the members of the class. The other three have remained totally silent, apparently in the belief that strict adherence to their class schedule is more important than an open discussion of a serious problem confronting our community. Such an attitude is not only apathetic, is is sad. It fosters and even encourages a lack of understanding and communication — and this, in my opinion, can be disastrous. But in a few months I shall be leaving North Carolina and its university crises, and, in time, some memories will perhaps fade. Yet I know I shall never forget some of the lessons that have been taught; I shall never forget what it is to be deprived of freedom of speech. For now, it is not merely a question I might have found on a political science quiz, nor is it something the professor said characterized the Soviet Union, nor is it merely Wilkenson's opinion—no, it is and will remain a reality to me. And I shall remember the consequences of beng deprived of such a vital privilege. Vital to the University, to every student, to every professor and to ever American.

Pennsylvania Reader Claims Communication UNC's Hope

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Those of us who last winer witnessed the campus revolt against political interference with the freedom of thought and speech in the place where it is most needed, in a great American university, will long remember the event. The months have passed and the issue is by no means settled. Fortunate will it be if we can avoid in the coming months a renewal of restrictions.

The issue will not be settled as long as a large proportion of the state's electorate do not understand the true meaning and the real purpose of a higher education. There is only one way to settle this issue. That is to enlighten the citizens and voters regarding what true education means and why a genuine university must have complete freedom of thought and therefore of speech on current controversial problems.

If we go about this task intelligently we will be giving this university deep roots in the hearts and understanding of the people, in the West as much as in the East of our state, and this will make it safe—as it has never been—to withstand the next political storm. Those working closest to this issue in the Administration know that the university's future is decidedly uncertain. They are therefore plannng to enlist faculty, graduate students and alumni in a state-wide speaking enterprise — that on every platform the side of the University, the clear voice of the University, may be heard.

It is of the highest importance that this enterprise be planned wisely and then obtain wholehearted cooperation. If it smells of anything like propaganda or public relations or apology it will merely solidify local antagonisms. The appeal must be made to clear thinking and careful reasoning and not to emotional partisanship. The problems involved in the whole issue must be well presented. If we want graduates who have good judgment, if we want Americans who can think for themselves, if we want readers and listeners who are not gullible, not naive, but intelligently critical, how are we going to obtain them? Let the audience think this through. With every great undertaking there is a dilemma. There is always some risk. How will the audience meet it in this case?

This enterprise can be educational in both ways, to the people and to the University. There will be shocks and surprises. Speakers from the University, on special assignment or as teachers of an extension course, will be shocked as they catch the implications in many of the questions fired at them. For under the honest fears, the many suspicions, the resentments, there are lives of isolation and poor grade education and the unease of many older people before all the sweeping and too rapid changes. Behind them speaks both geography and history. Behind these fears speaks segregation by religion, class, race and locality—when men and women meet during months and months only those who think as they do and are afraid as they are

To give an example of a recent meeting, one that Dr. Friday spoke to and which he mentioned to us at a small gathering last March in the Baptist Church of Chapel Hill the results there were significant. After the talk that he cited he had moved among his audience to get some idea of what they were saying. He found that the people were nonplussed. They kept saying in one way and another that what they had heard changed the whole situation. Indeed, they had not thought about that angle, and they wished now that they had known earlier what the speaker had just told them.

Is this not a challenge to every faculty member, every graduate student, and even to the undergraduate student, as he is now getting ready to move back for the summer with his own people? However, to answer an audience's questions well these must be anticipated. A list could now be set up of the fears, the suspicions, the resentments. Some special training to answer and discuss these could be given extension teachers, and even to staffs in the Medical School, Institute of Government and Agricultural College whose work takes them to the far corners of the state. They should know how to avoid dull platitudes trite answers, and any disrespect or impatience in their voice or manner.

The task is a big one. But it must be faced. For a great tree has been standing and growing. But now its roots are needing a better and a richer soil. For even a great old tree can finally shake and fall

All history will judge us of today whether we had the perception and the fortitude to accept this task, whether we dared to look ahead without illusions and see the danger. Or whether we trifled and delayed and then left the task to others.

MARY SUSAN KIRK

A trim young lady who plans to be a doctor has been chosen as the most outstanding junior woman at the University of North Carolina.

Mary Susan Kirk, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Kirk of Raleigh, received the Jane Craige Gray Award for character, scholarship and leadership at a Kappa Delta sorority house tea on Sunday.

The award is given annually by KD in memory of Jane Craige Gray, wife of former university president Gordon Gray, who died in 1953.

Miss Kirk is a member of the Valkyries, the highest women's honorary organization on campus. She has served as vice president of Spencer Dormitory and will be chairman of Women's Orientation next fall.

A former freshman counselor, she is a member of Alpha Epsilon Delta honorary premedical society and has served as secretary of Delta Phi Alpha honorary German society.

Vietnamese Buddhists Build Self-Immolation Platforms

SAIGON (AP) — The powerful Buddhist leadership in Saigon threw its support to South Viet Nam's dissident northern provinces last night and demanded that premier Nguyen Cao Ky withdraw troops he sent to wrest control of Da Nang for his military regime. All Buddhist monks are ready to die for the cause, a spokesman said.

In Da Nang, immolation platforms were thrown up at a pagoda and monks there said they were ready to set fire to themselves if government forces enter the religious compound to seize anti-government rebels holding out there.

Self-immolation by Buddhist monks on the streets of Saigon was one of the factors that led to the downfall of the Ngo Dinh Diem regime in November 1963.

Buddhists hastily piled up firewood around the wooden platforms outside Da Nang's Think Hoi Pagoda for monks who vowed to sacrifice their lives. As they erected the platforms, a fire engine drew up and parked outside the compound. Inside the pagoda 10 monks and four nuns began a 48-hour hunger strike in protest of the presence of Ky's troops in Da Nang.

Ky, a Buddhist nominally, had 2,500 marines and paratroopers holding key sectors of Da Nang in an attempt to bring the dissident areas back to Saigon's control.

But the split between the Northern Buddhists and their followers appeared to have widened since Ky's lightning military strike at daybreak in Da Nang Sunday. Buddhists in the northern areas have formed armed "struggle committees."

In Hue, 75 miles northwest of Da Nang, troops and tanks were reported mobilized to fight off any attempt by Ky's regime to take over that ancient imperial capital, which now is South Viet Nam's Buddhist center.

At Hue, Gen. Ton That Dinh, fired by Ky as military commander of the northern area earlier Monday, broadcast a denunciation of the move against Da Nang and claimed he had support from two South Vietnamese army divisions stationed in the northern provinces to fight the Viet Cong.

Adding to the mounting troubles for Ky and his regime were bold Viet Cong strikes within Saigon itself and its suburbs and the first phases of a general strike — not directly connected with the crisis— that curtailed Saigon's vital dock operations and most public transportation. Union leaders vowed to cut off electrical power and water supplies if their demands are not met.

U. S. officials feared a harmful effect on the war against the Communists. Government troops in large numbers are believed braced for internal troubles at a time when the Viet Cong and their North Vietnamese allies are expected to launch monsoon offensives. Battle action Monday simmered to minor ground skirmishes.

Also threatened were plans announced by Ky's regime to hold civilian elections in the fall as a first step to restore civilian rule in South Viet Nam. Ky and hs government promised the elections in April in a move to halt rising Buddhist opposition to his rule. Just before making the promise, Ky had declared Da Nang in rebellion and flew 4,000 troops to the air base outside the city. But he withdrew them after conferences with northern leaders.

U. S. military and diplomatic officials in South Viet Nam were under orders from President Johnson to strive for a quick and peaceful end to the turmoil overshadowing the war effort. American military men expressed belief that if the crisis continues it can only help the Viet Cong.

The Buddhist demands upon the military junta were announced in an impassioned speech in Saigon by Thick (venerable) Thien Minh, spokesman for Saigon's Buddhist leaders, chiefly Thich Tri Quang, who is regarded as a militant.

Minh charged in reference to the takeover at Da Nang that "There is a plot to assassinate all Buddhists."

He spoke to a crowd of about 1,000 standing in the rain.

"All monks will sacrifice themselves to strike against the government," he said.

He demanded the speedy withdrawal of government troops from Da Nang — site of vast U. S. military installations 380 miles northeast of Saigon — and that the government "find an immediate solution" to restore civilian rule.

Minh said eight persons were killed Sunday in clashes between loyal and dissident forces in Da Nang and that 52 were wounded. He said a dozen persons were arrested.

Other reports said five persons were killed. There were no official casualty figures issued in Da Nang.

Ky's forces were in control of Da Nang's city hall, radio station, market place, docks and other key installations. Rebels held out in pockets. The coastal city was outwardly calm Monday.

So was Saigon until the Viet Cong staged simulataneous raids on four police points and ambushed a police patrol on the strikebound docks. One policeman was killed.

Three Americans and 11 Vietnamese were wounded in attacks on three police checkpoints and a substation. The raids apparently were aimed at sowing more disorder into the political crisis.

The strike in the capital was called by the Saigon Labor Federation to encorde demands for the release of two women workers arrested last week and an apology for alleged police maltreatment. One of the women was realeased Sunday but the other was still held.

The federation claims a membership of 200,000 members. Its chairman, Thanh Tuyen, said the union's plan to shut off electric power and water — except in hospitals and key military installations — was delayed 24 hours in hopes of reaching a settlement with the government.

The strike, joined by longshoremen, slowed down unloading of U. S. military and commercial cargoes until U. S. Army personnel took over.

The crisis drew gloomy predictions from members of the 32-man committee assigned the task of preparing for elections in September or October for a civilian assembly to draft a constitution: A committee spokesman Truc Vien, said the dispatch of troops to Da Nang hampered prospects for the election and likely will destroy all plans for the balloting.

"The government is not helping us at all," he said. "The elections are jeopardized."

U. S. diplomatic informants viewed Ky's action as ill - advised and badly timed. They added that the Vietnamese army, up to now a cohesive force, was dangerously split.

Ky's action came as a surprise. The American diplomats said he did not inform U. S. officials of his plans because "obviously we would have done everything to stop him."

Ky threated to "liberate" Da Nang in April, claiming it was in rebellion and in the hands of Communist elements. He also threatened to execute Da Nang's mayor, Nguyen Van Man. He never followed through with any of these threats and sent his 4,000 airlifted troops back to their war stations. Although anti-Ky sentiment continued in Da Nang, it had slackened off in recent weeks. Thus his strike Sunday came as a complete suprise.

The two top U. S. officials assigned to Saigon were out of the country. U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge was in Washington for consultations and Gen. William C. Westmoreland, commander of U. S. forces in Viet Nam, was visiting his family in Hawaii.

The seizure of Da Nang shook Washington. State Department officials went into hurried conferences.

In Congress, Sen. Mike Mansfield, D-Mont., said a disastrous civil war was imminent in South Viet Nam unless the opposing sides got together. Mansfield said, however, the United States should not interfere with Vietnamese internal affairs.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., said he may reopen hearings of his Foreign Relations Committee on Viet Nam.

He called the situation serious and added: "I am very disturbed by it."

A new indictment of U. S. policies in Viet Nam came from Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin who is visiting Cairo. He said he was reminded of "Hitler's terrible acts."

Hitler's politicies of "subjugating cities, countries and peoples" failed, he said, adding:

"Like Hitler, it can be said that the Americans will meet a similar fate in Viet Nam."

MSU Debate

'Ramparts' Claims Michigan State Became Extension Of Government

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Two magazine writers and Michigan State University officials debated before seven state legislators yesterday whether MSU was a front for U. S. spies in Viet Nam.

John Hannah, Michigan State president, testified it still has not been proved that anyone connected with an MSU advisory mission to South Viet Nam was a Central Intelligence Agency operative. There was only a suspicion, he said.

MSU halted counter - subversion training for Vietnamese police because, he said, "We were convinced a university shouldn't place itself under suspicion."

The school helped train Vietnamese police and other government employes under a federal government contract. MSU advisers were in Viet Nam from 1955 to 1962, although the size of the mission was reduced from a peak of 54 members to just eight in 1959.

Warren Hinckle III, author of a Ramparts magazine article which called MSU a "university on the make," stood behind charges it made that Michigan State had served as a CIA front.

"A university shouldn't become an extension of any government," Hinckle said. "It should be a citadel of academic research."

"We (Ramparts) disapprove of their (MSU's) work because it allowed a dictatorship to be established in Viet Nam," he told the legislative committee. "They were the independent observers there. If we can't trust independent academic observers . . ."

Rep. Jack Faxon, D-Detroit, chairman of the committee, said the group would try to issue a report in about six weeks, "and bring the conflicting statements into some kind of harmony."

Hinckle said senators and members of the MSU staff have contradicted Hannah.

Faxon said he believed Hannah was "technically correct" that it was uncertain that there ever were CIA men with the mission.

He said he plans to try to obtain concrete evidence "from an agency that actually knows." He already has written Sen. Leverett Saltonstall, R-Mass., and Secretary of State Dean Rusk, he said.

One object of the committee hearing, Faxon indicated, was to develop guidelines for overseas projects by Michigan universities.

"We want to be in a position where we won't get stuck with a Viet Nam again," he told newsmen.

Hannah said MSU, learning from the 1955-62 MSU mission, already had changed procedure. The school now will limit its overseas projects to educational programs involving universities or education ministries overseas, he said.

"We have reorganized ourselves on the campus so decisions (on an overseas projject) are made by the people who will have to live with and staff it," said Hannah.

MSU's deicision in starting the technical aid mission in 1955 "at the tme seemed to be wise," he said.

Arguing that MSU had tried to hide nothing, Hannah said the school channeled $5,000 in foundation money to encourage two MSU faculty members to publish a book on the mission, which turned out to be critical, "so that there might be a complete record."

Stanley Scheinbaum, one-time on-campus coordinator of the MSU AID mission in Viet Nam, told legislators he was advised on taking his position that he should not expect to be made aware of the activities of the CIA men in the mission.

Hannah told the committee that the men hired by MSU to teach counter subversion "during the usual working hours were working with us."

The men were hired in the first place, he said, because MSU'S police administration school had no specialists in counter subversion.

"I defy anybody to see anything in their records to show a connection with the CIA," he said.

But, Hannah added, "not long after the after the mission got started, our people became convinced these people had CIA affiliations.

"We decided this was something we should get out of, that it was too tricky for a university to handle," he said.

Hannah and the Ramparts writers disagreed again on whether MSU bought arms and ammunition for the South Vietnemese regime of Ngo Dinh Diem. Hannah said the MSU mission never bought munitions, but advised on what supplies would be needed.

Faxon asked whether filling out a list of supplies needed might not be considered part of the purchasing process.

OUR AVERAGE GRADUATE OF READING DYNAMICS READS 4.7 TIMES FASTER WITH EQUAL or BETTER COMPREHENSION THAN HIS BEGINNING SPEED

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:
Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.
Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.
Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual
Mike Balog

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.
Dick League

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE
We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

Wins And Losses

By Barry Jacobs

Tennis Champs, Baseball Playoffs

The Tar Heels picked up their second ACC championship of the spring Saturday when Don Skakle's netters held on to win the tennis crown. It was no easy victory, however, as Clemson made a strong bid to unseat the defending champs from Carolina. The final score was 67-64.

Clemson's Zulfi Rahim upset Carolina's Gene Hamilton in the No. 1 singles finals, ending a four-year Tar Heel monopoly in the singles championship.

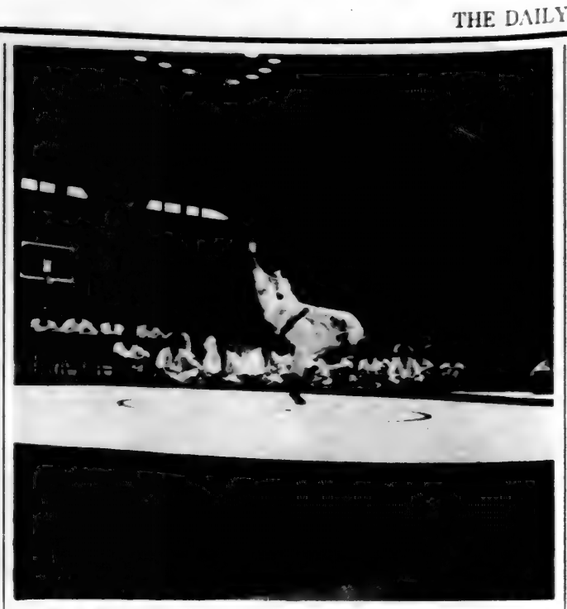
Carolina also lost the doubles title for the first time since 1957. Clemson defeated the Tar Heel team of Bronson Van Wyck and Andy Goddard in the finals. In fact, Carolina was unable to win a single doubles championship.

Where the Tar Heels came through was in the other singles divisions. They swept the Nos. 2 through 6 titles. Van Wyck won the No. 2 crown, and Bob Davis, Tom Chewning, Nat West and Ken Oettinger took the Nos. 3 through 6 brackets respectively.

Meanwhile, the baseball team learned that its opponent in the opening round of the playoffs at Gastonia will be the East Carolina Pirates. ECC won the Southern Conference title under somewhat mysterious circumstances over the weekend. The Pirates won the first game of a doubleheader from the Citadel, but the second game was rained out. The results left ECC with a 12-3 record. West Virginia swept a twin bill from VMI to finish 12-4. The conference baseball committee ruled that the rained out East Carolina-Citadel game did not have to be played, despite its obvious importance.

The conference must have had its reasons for allowing the season to end on this unfinished note, but I can't figure out what they are. Time, travel and expense are good reasons for not replaying meaningless games, but those that have a direct bearing on the conference championship should be played. There is plenty of time between now and the beginning of the Gastonia playoffs on June 2 to settle the matter.

If exams are the reason for ending the season now, the Southern Conference should take pains to see that in the future there is ample time to make sure that its champion is a true champion.



TONY MALLO, black belt instructor from Charlotte, throws brown belt Dwight Bunce in a pre-match demonstration. Both men served as referees during the competition.

Judo Club Beats Charlotte In First Home Competition

In its first home competition the UNC Judo Club defeated members from the Charlotte YMCA Judo Club 180 to 93. The novice tournament was designed to allow the participants to gain experience against outside competition and to learn by seeing new techniques performed.

Before the meet, John Pyecha, instructor and founder of the UNC Judo Club, explained the rules, principles and basic throws while members of the club demonstrated the various techniques. Following the demonstration the officers of the Judo Club presented a plaque to Pyecha "for excellence in instruction and leadership."

The competition consisted of 40 matches. The UNC club won 24, while losing ten and drawing six matches. Outstanding competitors from UNC were George Regan, who defeated a second brown belt, Vic Wynne, who won all four of his matches, Walter Durham and Adrian King, both of whom won two matches.

Lacrosse All-Star Game Picks Stanley

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Harvey Stanley, co - captain and goalie of the Tar Heel lacrosse team, has been selected to play in the North-South All-Star game in Baltimore on June 10.

Don Kelly, coach at Washington College and coach of the South squad, personally selected Stanley to play when Carolina met his varsity on May 7. Also under consideration for the South squad is UNC defenseman Jim Bischoff.

The game will be played on the campus at Johns Hopkins University, long noted as a hotbed of lacrosse. Stanley is from Baltimore and played the sport in grade school and high school, where he was an all - Maryland choice.

"He's the Best"

When asked how Stanley compares to other college goalies, UNC head coach Cony Steele replied, "He's the best. This will be a wonderful opportunity for him to really show what he can do. A game such as this will increase his chances of being named All-America."

The game will be marked by the dedication of the Lacrosse Hall of Fame. The building will be housed on the Johns Hopkins campus.

Stanley was the bulwark of a team which had a disappointing 2-6 record this season. An injury to All - America attackman Jeff Parker crippled the Tar Heel offense, which never got untracked until the last game of the year, a 6-4 win over Towson State.

Second in Division

Carolina did finish second in the Strobhar Division, which is one of the lacrosse divisions based on geography and ability. Washington College was first, a team which beat UNC, 9-2. Other teams in the division are Towson, Washington and Lee and Loyola of Baltimore.

Despite the team record, Coach Steele was not too discouraged over the performance.

"Four out of the six teams we lost to look like they will finish in the top seven teams in the country," he said. "We will miss this year's seniors next season, but we have a lot of fine freshman coming up and I look for improvement."

The development of the lacrosse program at UNC helps to draw many high school players to Chapel Hill. The school itself is a tremendous factor and so are the lacrosse players on the varsity team.

Baseball Tonight

Carolina's ACC champions close out their league diamond schedule tonight against Wake Forest in Asheboro. The game was originally scheduled as an exhibition, but was changed into a league contest when the regularly scheduled conference game was rained out Saturday.

Rabb Praises Tar Heel Catcher

Shaw "Has Really Made The Club Go"

By BOB QUINCY

"The take charge guy, the fellow who has really made this club go is John Shaw."

Coach Walter Rabb, whose Tar Heel team for the third time since 1960 wears the Atlantic Coach Conference champion's robe, was taking time to praise his catcher. Shaw is a highly competitive athlete from Jonesville, N. C. He's just shy of six feet and weighs 180 pounds.

"Our pitching staff has enjoyed a real year," said Rabb, "but the answer is as much in Shaw as in their own ability. He calls the game and they listen to him. And if one ever crosses him up, there's the devil to pay."

The Tar Heels, who have won 18 games in 26 tries and own an ACC mark of 12-1, going into lastnight's game with Wake Forest, had rough going in early games, losing six of their first 11 starts. Rabb, an oldtimer who likes to give everyone a chance, experimented as much as he could. He knew he would call the roll on April 15, when the season officially opened in the league.

"We were on our holiday break trip to Florida," said Rabb, recalling his first game with Florida State, which found the Tar Heels being bombed, 15-7. "John and I had a little talk about then."

The coach told Shaw he looked to him for leadership and urged him to keep the pitchers honest. Added Rabb: "John, we've got the makings of a good team. If you handle our best pitchers with the right touch, we'll win our share of games."

Since then, the Tar Heels have won 13 of 15 games. Most runs given up by any member of the mound crops has been four. In the thick of the action every game was Shaw, hustling like made behind the plate and making each hurler come up with his best pitch at the key moments.

Shaw, a senior, has been a starter for Carolina for three seasons. He led the club in hitting as a sophomore with a .375 average. He slumped miserably last season to .196 but his defensive work kept him in the lineup. This season he can show a .272 plate figure for games to date.

John Shaw

The big three of Shaw's pitching stable are Danny Walker (6-1), Beattie Leonard (4-3) and George McRae (4-0) McRae hasn't started a game and has picked up all wins in relief. He's only a sophomore.

Walker, veteran righty, stopped Clemson twice this season and he doesn't mind pressure. Leonard's three losses against four wins aren't exactly impressive at first glance until one notes he has pitched two one-hitters this year. The southpaw cut down Georgia Tech, 3-0, and gave Virginia only one hit in six innings.

Harris Leads ACC Golf; Duke Tops Team Scoring

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C. (AP) — Sophomore Johnny Harris of Wake Forest was the only player in the field of 56 to break par as he shot 34-36—70 to lead the first round of the Atlantic Coast Conference Golf Tournament yesterday.

The 19 - year - old No. 2 player on the Deacon team from Clarksville, Va., winner of the 1963 Virginia Junior crown, held a two - shot lead over Tom Danluck of Duke going into Tuesday's final 18 holes. Danluck shot 34-39—73, going four over par on the last five holes.

Six of the 15 players to break 80 were members of the Duke squad as the Blue Devils took the lead in the team standings, based on the five low scores. Duke's total was 382, with runnerup Wake Forest ten behind and defending champion North Carolina third, two more off the pace.

Defending champion John Baldwin of North Carolina had his troubles over the 6,750-yard Country Club of North Carolina course, shooting 82.

Harris shot the front nine in seven pars and two birdies, sinking a 35-foot putt on the first hole and a 15-footer on No. 8.

A bad drive brought a bogey on No. 10 and he missed the green on the short 13th for another to drop to even par. But he birdied the 14th from 30 feet and chipped 18 inches from the in in for a birdie four on the 18th.

Danluck, also out in 34, birdied the second and ninth holes. When he birdied the 12th hole to go three under he took the lead, but he shot bogeys on 14 and 15, missing both greens, and took a double bogey seven on No. 18.

On the last hole he drove into the woods and hit his second into the water, finally reaching the green in five and two - putting.

Kenan, KKG Take Honors At WAA Awards Picnic

Kenan Residence Hall and Kappa Kappa Gamma won the top prizes as the Women's Athletic Association presented its annual awards at its picnic last week.

Kenan won the All Sports Cup in the residence hall division, and the Kappas took the same honor in the sorority group. Whitehead and Phi Mu were second in the two divisions.

Tammy Tasker of Kappa and Kenan's Susan Milton won awards as outstanding WAA representatives from the sororities and residence halls, respectively.

Miss Milton was the big winner when trophies were presented for various tournaments during the year. She won singles championships in bowling, table tennis and badminton and teamed with Mary Ann Sowers of Kenan to take the badminton doubles title. Nancy de Grummond, also of Kenan, won the tennis crown.

Gana Roberts of Whitehead won an outstanding senior award for her participation, interest and work in the WAA during her years at Carolina.

Gourmet Society Inducts Members

Eight men were initiated into the Society for the Preservation of Buck Taylor's Mutton and Shoats in a pre-dusk ceremony last night.

The "Young Bucks" are: James Brown Barber, Drummond Crilley Bell, Edgar David Broadhurst, John C. Egbert III, John Lindsay Freeman, Lyons Gray, David Henry Poer, Jr., and John William Yates II.

The black tie initiation rites took place in a field overlooking the hillside where Buck Taylor is buried.

Taylor, a veteran of the American Revolution, was the first cook at the University.

According to the Society, he was "viciously and unfairly attacked" for the quality of the mutton and shoats he served. In an attempt to exonerate the "decent and God-fearing name of Buck Taylor, Mutton and Shoats meets regularly to plan elaborate "commemorative dinners."

The criteria for membership are imagination, taste, wit, and gregariousness.

Active members include: Nelson Schwab, Tom White, Beauchamp Carr, George Butler, David Frey, Armistead Maupin, Bill Harrison, Wade Logan, Jay Hanan, Pat Tone, John Higgins, Chris Wright, Frank Martin, Brit Gordon, and Bernard Baldwin.

Dr. Stephen Baxter is Chawbacon of the Society, and Dr. Hugh Lefler is Historian.

M. Roger Bougard has served as Mutt'n Chef for the year.

Death In Viet Nam Jungles— For Each Shot, 4 Stricken

By DEMONT ROSEMAN
UNC News Bureau

For each life lost in battle in Viet Nam, four lives are lost to infectious diseases.

The ratio is of particular importance to Maj. L. J. Lecters of the U. S. Army's Special Forces, now stationed at the John F. Kennedy Warfare Center at Fort Bragg as preventive medical officer and deputy surgeon.

His job is to know something about the risks of disease in the remote corners of the world in order to provide protection should troops be deployed there.

Major Lecters presented a special lecture on "Medical Problems in Viet Nam" during a visit to the UNC School of Public Health. He was here to confer about setting up training programs in international health — "with emphasis on infectious diseases" — for Army medical personnel.

Western medicine doesn't sell itself in the villages of Viet Nam, he said. "The medics have to go to the people, not vice versa."

U. S. involvement in Southeast Asia has presented medical problems peculiar to any area in which a military man arrives without immunity to the native diseases. Major Lecters referred to the immunity-lacking soldier as an "immunologic virgin."

In the Vietnamese population, the major said tuberculosis is common and difficult to treat because of the advanced stages of the disease and the lack of treatment facilities.

Malaria is an important medical problem, for natives and the military. No preventive drug exists.

On the subject of Malaria in returning military personnel, Major Lecturs referred to "a low clinical awareness" of the disease among physicians in the U. S.

"We must think of malaria whenever a man from overseas comes down with a fever," he urged.

The veneral disease rate in Viet Nam, he reported, is "very high." But, he added, it doesn't represent a problem "from the medical point of view" because it is properly treated when acquired "and the man loses no time."

Modern diseases, such as heart attacks, are rare among the U. S. military in Viet Nam.

These facts should shock many, the prison director asserted. "And I will try to shock many people," he added

"We need at least $20 million worth of physical facilities just to get control of this group, for four or five new prisons to lock them up in individual cells. This will give them a night's sleep, but, despite attempts for constant surveillance, it can't be done."

Bounds declared that he "is troubled. I don't even know whether the job can be done, if my job is worthwhile

"I didn't want the job at first, but was persuaded to take it on the chance that I would be the first non-political appointee to the position. The governor has never asked me for whom I voted for governor, and, in fact, I voted for Preyer."

OUR AVERAGE GRADUATE OF READING DYNAMICS

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:

Quotes from "Triangle"
Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.

Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.

Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual

Mike Balog

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

Gemini Scrubbed After Atlas Fails

CAPE KENNEDY, FLA., (AP) — Two keyed - up Gemini 9 pilots dashed from great expectations to sudden disappointment in eight minutes yesterday when their space target fell to earth, scrubbing their vital sky adventure about three weeks.

"Oh no, oh no, oh no," said pilot Eugene A. Cernan, the 32 - year - old rookie astronaut who was to have made a record 2 1-2 hour space walk on the second day of the three day mission.

The trouble seemed to be in the Atlas booster rocker where swiveling engines went suddenly awry, sending the 113 - foot Atlas - Agena into a wild tumble toward earth, separating as it did.

The rockets plunged into the ocean 160 miles from Cape Kennedy, just east of Grand Bahama Island.

It might take three days to determine the specific gremlin that wrecked the Atlas' performance and tore the mission apart.

"Obviously we've lost something from the program," flight officials said, but added it was too early to tell how much damage was done to the quickening U. S. race to the moon.

Command pilot Thomas P. Stafford — a veteran of disappointment in the nothing-is-for-sure space flights — was reported to have said, "oh shucks. . ." then he told the ground crew: "You can't get your hopes up." I've been up here a number of times before."

He and Gemini 6 command pilot Watler M. Schirra were left without a target in the sky last Oct. 25 when the first Agena in the program developed a faulty fuel mixture and blew up before it could to into orbit.

Then it happened again in December. Waiting to blast off for a hastily planned attempt to rendezvous with Gemini 7 and recover lost program time, Stafford and Schirra spent some frightening moments in their spacecraft when their Titan rocket suddenly shut down right after ignition. The flight went off as programmed two days later.

When the Gemini 9 mission is definitely rescheduled, it will not be attempted with an Agena. Instead an Augmented Target Docking Adapter which is not a flying engine like the Agena, will be put into orbit so that the Gemini 9 pilots

Moore Wins 5th, $250 In Hearst Finals

Curtiss Moore, a senior journalism major from Raleigh, placed fifth in the final contest of the Wiliam Randolph Heart Foundation Journalism awards.

Moore received $250 for an imaginary news story on an unidentified flying object sighting in Chapel Hill.

He qualified for the finals by winning to previous awards in the monthly Hearst contests. The first, in the general news category, was an interview with a motorcycle policeman who caught two escapees from Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh.

The othr, in the sport news category was on the tornado force winds that hit North Carolina early in February, causing one death and resulting in extensive property damage.

Both stories appeared in the News and Observer for which Moore works on weekends. Moore also works as Associated Press stringer in Chapel Hill.

All students from across the nation who had placed in two or more of the montly Hearst contests were assigned an imaginary UFO story for the elimination category.

Moore was one of eight students at the University here who won awards in the monthly competitions, giving the University Journalism School a third place rating.

Professors Like Students Who Break From Patterns

By BROOKE WILLIAMS
Special to the DTH

"What do you find to be the most exciting aspect of a good student?"

UNC professors say this:

DR. J. M. SCHNORRENBERG, Ph.D., Dept. of Art History — "His writing is a pleasure; it's instructive. His questions, conversation, and papers suggest revisions and ideas I've already had or in the most exciting students, ideas I've never had before."

DR. O. B. HARDISON, Ph. D., Dept. of English — "I suppose seeing the student breaking away from the patterns and ideas that are presented to him in the course of his university work and begin to discover his own questions and solutions to them. He develops more independence and a sense of his own vocation."

DR. R. C. LYON, Ph.D., Dept. of English — "The exciting thing about a good student is that he is able to feel continuity between his studies and his own private concerns and interests."

DR. G. B. DANIEL, Ph.D., Dept. of Romance Languages — "The most exciting aspect is his interest in learning not for the sake of obtaining a degree but for the pleasure that is derived from a broader knowledge of man and his world. We have a large number of students at UNC who demonstrate this quality and add to the excitement of teaching."

DR. D. C. JICKA, Ph.D., Dept. of Chemistry — "Beyond the ability to comprehend difficult and involved material, the single most characteristic ability I associate with a good student is the use of imagination and the ability to introduce creativity into his work."

DR. C. D .WRIGHT, Ph.D., Dept. of English — "Engagement and insight."

DR. D. T. LAPKAN, Ph.D., Dept. of Economics — "The thing that I find most exciting in the process where the student begins to question and reassess the ideas and modes of thinking that he has grown up with and apply them to his relationships with the faculty and his fellow students.

Forum Panel Vents Viet Nam Problems

By SCOTT GOODFELLOW
DTH Managing Editor

A dramatic cleavage between conflicting ideas of what direction United States policy in South Viet Nam should take was the highlight of last night's Carolina Forum.

The cleavage developed between the conservative policies of George Cabot Lodge, son of the ambassador to South Viet Nam, who stressed the US commitment and cautioned against dealing with the National Liberation Front and other representative factions of the North Vietnamese government, and the charges of Allard K. Lowenstein, who appraised the present situation in Southeast Asia as "an increasing, escalating tragedy."

The discussion was held in panel form, with Dr. Henry Kissinger, a consultant for the National Security Council, and Dr. Arthur Larson, past head of the United States Information Agency, also participating.

Dr. Larson listed two main points which he felt would serve as alternative suggestions to the present policy in Viet Nam. First, "We could do better in clarifing our war objective." This statement set the stage for Lowenstein's later condemnation of our Viet Nam policy.

Second, Larson said, "We should be prepared to negotiate with the National Liberation Front to the extent of a cease-fire." Lodge later took issue with this idea, emphasizing that the NLF is a North Vietnamese government arm.

Larson countered by saying, "We are simply not taking full advantage of the great opportunity to divide the enemy. "The enemy is split into at least three parts — Hanoi, Peking, and the Viet Cong — each of which has its own distinct desires."

At one point, speaking on the possibility of raking over the many mistakes of the war since 1961, Larson said, "The Republican Party has shown great restraint — magnanimity, bordering on the supernatural."

Responding to Larson's alternative solutions, Lowenstein said that the U.S. should "pursue a reappraisal of attitudes toward China." He then turned to caution against ignoring the mass demonstrations which have recently occurred in South Viet Nam against the present government there.

Kissinger said that the problem of South Viet Nam is more than one of "geo - political importance." He noted two basic issues: first, that "only a bellicose couhse in the way to success", and second, that what is at stake there is the "credibility of the American commitment and the ability to make good on that commitment."

In contrast, Lowenstein said, "We cannot win a war in South Viet Nam." He cited statistics released by the US which show that 80% of those fighting for North Viet Nam are South Vietnamese.

Kessing Pool Is Now Open

At last! The outdoor swimming pool is open.

Students can jump into Kessing Outdoor Swimming Pool from 3-5 on weekdays, 2-6 on Saturdays and 2-5 on Sundays. Those who really think school is all wet can enjoy the indoor pool till 9.)

The pool will remain open through June 10, when it starts its summer school hours of 12-6 and 7:30-9. Adults and students will have the pool to themselves from 1-4 and children and their parents may swim from 4-6.

Campus News Briefs

NSA Alternates

Teddy O'Toole, NSA Co-ordinator, announced that he will interview students who wish to attend the NSA Congress this summer as alternates. The interviews will be held on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons from 1-5 p.m. in the Student Government Offices.

The Congress will be held at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. The Congress will start on August 20 and last through September 1.

Orientation Test

Prospective Men's Orientation Counsellors must take a test in Carrol Hall anytime tomorrow between 5 and 6:30 p.m.

Bill Long, Men's Co-ordinator for Orientation, says the quiz will last about 30 minutes. Anyone notified recently that they have been selected should take this test.

Press Secretary

Interviews for Assistant Student Government Press Secretary will be held on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons in the Student Government Offices, according to Phil Kirstein, Student Government Press Secretary.

All students who are interested in both Student Government and journalism and can type are urged to apply. Girls who can take shorthand are desperately needed — their applications will be given special consideration.

The students who are selected will work on the Student Government Report (SGR), the press releases for the DTH, and the State press releases.

Appointments

The following have been appointed to the Honor System Commission: Alan Banov, Terry Colby, Patty Delaney, Bill Findlay, Ann Fowler, Kent Hedman, Don Leslie, Trey Obenshain, Hal Rainey and John Sarratt.

Taylor Branch, chairman of the commission, has announced a meeting for 5 p.m. Thursday in the Grail Room.

Research Papers

A unique service for evaluating and marketing college research papers, called the Research Writers' Bureau Ltd., was established in New York City recently in response to widespread demand amongst publishers for articles on academic subjects. The firm is reported to be the first organization of its kind to concentrate its efforts entirely on selling campus-written material.

According to Richard Fennelly, director of the literary agency, there are thousands of periodicals, ranging from the smallest journals to some of the largest "slick" magazines, which need well-researched student manuscripts. He reports that some of these pay up to 10 cents per word for this material.

"Academic journals are usually the first and too often the last place students consider as an outlet for their work," Fennelly says. "This is lamentable because there are numerous semi-popular magazines which pay decent money for research writing. They cover a wide field of interest, including science, religion, history, medicine and business." Vertually every area of college study has some representation in this type of periodical, according to the firm's director.

The new agency, which does not return manuscripts unless first quered wth a description of the paper, is located at 95-31 104 St., Ozone Park, N.Y.

Hundreds Of Murders Due Today

Contestants in the University of North Carolina League of Executioners (U.N.C.L.E.) may pick up an envelope at the Graham Memorial information desk containing the names of their three victimes.

Each hunter has been assigned three victims, just in case he flubs the first job or wants to take his choice.

The contest is officially underway right now, and hunters have until noon tomorrow to score at least one kill.

Victims must make a detailed report (under 100 words) which includes the time of murder and the modus operandi (method).

When you have been killed you are out of the game, except for the report you must submit to the DTH offices by 3 p.m. tomorrow. Late reports will be void.

In the victim's report must also be included the name of his killer. He may comment about the effectiveness of the kill. Killers and hunters are allowed to make out the report over a beer in Harry's or the Goody Shop, but remember, no cheating.

Hunters are required to track down their victims and kill them any way they see fit. Of course, more bizzare murders are better candidates for prizes.

YOUR HUNTER MAY STRIKE at any time, any place. He might even shoot you with sulfuric acid from a Y-Court coke. Beware — for no one knows what evil lurks in the heart of man but the Shadow and he isn't even playing U.N.C.L.E. (University of North Carolina League of Executioners.)

Gourmet Society Inducts Members

Eight men were initiated into the Society for the Preservation of Buck Taylor's Mutton and Shoats in a pre-dusk ceremony last night.

The "Young Bucks" are: James Brown Barber, Drummond Crilley Bell, Edgar David Broadhurst, John C. Egbert III, John Lindsay Freeman, Lyons Gray, David Henry Poer, Jr., and John William Yates II.

The black tie initiation rites took place in a field overlooking the hillside where Buck Taylor is buried.

Taylor, a veteran of the American Revolution, was the first cook at the University.

According to the Society, he was "viciously and unfairly attacked" for the quality of the mutton and shoats he served. In an attempt to exonerate the "decent and God-fearing name of Buck Taylor, Mutton and Shoats meets regularly to plan elaborate "commemorative dinners."

The criteria for membership are imagination, taste, wit, and gregariousness.

Active members include: Nelson Schwab, Tom White, Beauchamp Carr, George Butler, David Frey, Armistead Maupin, Bill Harrison, Wade Logan, Jay Hanan, Pat Tone, John Higgins, Chris Wright, Frank Martin, Brit Gordon, and Bernard Baldwin.

Dr. Stephen Baxter is Chawbacon of the Society, and Dr. Hugh Lefler is Historian.

M. Roger Bougard has served as Mutt'n Chef for the year.

Death In Viet Nam Jungles– For Each Shot, 4 Stricken

By DEMONT ROSEMAN
UNC News Bureau

For each life lost in battle in Viet Nam, four lives are lost to infectious diseases.

The ratio is of particular importance to Maj. L. J. Lecters of the U. S. Army's Special Forces, now stationed at the John F. Kennedy Warfare Center at Fort Bragg as preventive medical officer and deputy surgeon.

His job is to know something about the risks of disease in the remote corners of the world in order to provide protection should troops be deployed there.

Major Lecters presented a special lecture on "Medical Problems in Viet Nam" during a visit to the UNC School of Public Health. He was here to confer about setting up training programs in international health — "with emphasis on infectious diseases" — for Army medical personnel.

Western medicine doesn't sell itself in the villages of Viet Nam, he said. "The medics have to go to the people, not vice versa."

U. S. involvement in Southeast Asia has presented medical problems peculiar to any area in which a military man arrives without immunity to the native diseases. Major Lecters referred to the immunity-lacking soldier as an "immunologic virgin."

In the Vietnamese population, the major said tuberculosis is common and difficult to treat because of the advanced stages of the disease and the lack of treatment facilities.

Malaria is an important medical problem, for natives and the military. No preventive drug exists.

On the subject of Malaria in returning military personnel, Major Lecturs referred to "a low clinical awareness" of the disease among physicians in the U. S.

"We must think of malaria whenever a man from overseas comes down with a fever," he urged.

The veneral disease rate in Viet Nam, he reported, is "very high." But, he added, it doesn't represent a problem "from the medical point of view" because it is properly treated when acquired "and the man loses no time."

Modern diseases, such as heart attacks, are rare among the U. S. military in Viet Nam.

These facts should shock many, the prison director asserted. "And I will try to shock many people," he added.

"We need at least $20 million worth of physical facilities just to get control of this group, for four or five new prisons to lock them up in individual cells. This will give them a night's sleep, but, despite attempts for constant surveillance, it can't be done."

Bounds declared that he "is troubled. I don't even know whether the job can be done, if my job is worthwhile.

"I didn't want the job at first, but was persuaded to take it on the chance that I would be the first non-political appointee to the position. The governor has never asked me for whom I voted for governor, and, in fact, I voted for Preyer."

OUR AVERAGE GRADUATE OF READING DYNAMICS

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:

Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.

Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.

Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual

Mike Balog
Duke University

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.

Dick League

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

Gemini Scrubbed After Atlas Fails

CAPE KENNEDY, FLA., (AP) — Two keyed - up Gemini 9 pilots dashed from great expectations to sudden disappointment in eight minutes yesterday when their space target fell to earth, scrubbing their vital sky adventure about three weeks.

"Oh no, oh no, oh no," said pilot Eugene A. Cernan, the 32 - year - old rookie astronaut who was to have made a record 2 1-2 hour space walk on the second day of the three day mission.

The trouble seemed to be in the Atlas booster rocker where swiveling engines went suddenly awry, sending the 113 - foot Atlas - Agena into a wild tumble toward earth, separating as it did.

The rockets plunged into the ocean 160 miles from Cape Kennedy, just east of Grand Bahama Island.

It might take three days to determine the specific gremlin that wrecked the Atlas' performance and tore the mission apart.

"Obviously we've lost something from the program," flight officials said, but added it was too early to tell how much damage was done to the quickening U. S. race to the moon.

Command pilot Thomas P. Stafford — a veteran of disappointment in the nothing-is-for-sure space flights — was reported to have said, "oh shucks. . ." then he told the ground crew: "You can't get your hopes up." I've been up here a number of times before."

He and Gemini 6 command pilot Watler M. Schirra were left without a target in the sky last Oct. 25 when the first Agena in the program developed a faulty fuel mixture and blew up before it could to into orbit.

Then it happened again in December. Waiting to blast off for a hastily planned attempt to rendezvous with Gemini 7 and recover lost program time, Stafford and Schirra spent some frightening moments in their spacecraft when their Titan rocket suddenly shut down right after ignition. The flight went off as programmed two days later.

When the Gemini 9 mission is definitely rescheduled, it will not be attempted with an Agena. Instead an Augmented Target Docking Adapter which is not a flying engine like the Agena, will be put into orbit so that the Gemini 9 pilots

Moore Wins 5th, $250 In Hearst Finals

Curtiss Moore, a senior journalism major from Raleigh, placed fifth in the final contest of the Wiliam Randolph Heart Foundation Journalism awards.

Moore received $250 for an imaginary news story on an unidentified flying object sighting in Chapel Hill.

He qualified for the finals by winning to previous awards in the monthly Hearst contests. The first, in the general news category, was an interview with a motorcycle policeman who caught two escapees from Dorothea Dix Hospital in Raleigh.

The othr, in the sport news category was on the tornado force winds that hit North Carolina early in February, causing one death and resulting in extensive property damage.

Both stories appeared in the News and Observer for which Moore works on weekends. Moore also works as Associated Press stringer in Chapel Hill.

All students from across the nation who had placed in two or more of the montly Hearst contests were assigned an imaginary UFO story for the elimination category.

Moore was one of eight students at the University here who won awards in the monthly competitions, giving the University Journalism School a third place rating.

Forum Panel Vents Viet Nam Problems

By SCOTT GOODFELLOW
DTH Managing Editor

A dramatic cleavage between conflicting ideas of what direction United States policy in South Viet Nam should take was the highlight of last night's Carolina Forum.

The cleavage developed between the conservative policies of George Cabot Lodge, son of the ambassador to South Viet Nam, who stressed the US commitment and cautioned against dealing with the National Liberation Front and other representative factions of the North Vietnamese government, and the charges of Allard K. Lowenstein, who appraised the present situation in Southeast Asia as "an increasing, escalating tragedy."

The discussion was held in panel form, with Dr. Henry Kissinger, a consultant for the National Security Council, and Dr. Arthur Larson, past head of the United States Information Agency, also participating.

Dr. Larson listed two main points which he felt would serve as alternative suggestions to the present policy in Viet Nam. First, "We could do better in clarifing our war objective." This statement set the stage for Lowenstein's later condemnation of our Viet Nam policy.

Second, Larson said, "We should be prepared to negotiate with the National Liberation Front to the extent of a cease-fire." Lodge later took issue with this idea, emphasizing that the NLF is a North Vietnamese government arm.

Larson countered by saying, "We are simply not taking full advantage of the great opportunity to divide the enemy. "The enemy is split into at least three parts — Hanoi, Peking, and the Viet Cong — each of which has its own distinct desires."

At one point, speaking on the possibility of raking over the many mistakes of the war since 1961, Larson said, "The Republican Party has shown great restraint — magnanimity, bordering on the supernatural."

Responding to Larson's alternative solutions, Lowenstein said that the U.S. should "pursue a reappraisal of attitudes toward China." He then turned to caution against ignoring the mass demonstrations which have recently occurred in South Viet Nam against the present government there.

Kissinger said that the problem of South Viet Nam is more than one of "geo - political importance." He noted two basic issues: first, that "only a bellicose couhse in the way to success", and second, that what is at stake there is the "credibility of the American commitment and the ability to make good on that commitment."

In contrast, Lowenstein said, "We cannot win a war in South Viet Nam." He cited statistics released by the US which show that 80% of those fighting for North Viet Nam are South Vietnamese.

Professors Like Students Who Break From Patterns

By BROOKE WILLIAMS
Special to the DTH

"What do you find to be the most exciting aspect of a good student?"

UNC professors say this:

DR. J. M. SCHNORRENBERG, Ph.D., Dept. of Art History — "His writing is a pleasure; it's instructive. His questions, conversation, and papers suggest revisions and ideas I've already had or in the most exciting students, ideas I've never had before."

DR. O. B. HARDISON, Ph. D., Dept. of English — "I suppose seeing the student breaking away from the patterns and ideas that are presented to him in the course of his university work and begin to discover his own questions and solutions to them. He develops more independence and a sense of his own vocation."

DR. R. C. LYON, Ph.D., Dept. of English — "The exciting thing about a good student is that he is able to feel continuity between his studies and his own private concerns and interests."

DR. G. B. DANIEL, Ph.D., Dept. of Romance Languages — "The most exciting aspect is his interest in learning not for the sake of obtaining a degree but for the pleasure that is derived from a broader knowledge of man and his world. We have a large number of students at UNC who demonstrate this quality and add to the excitement of teaching."

DR. D. C. JICKA, Ph.D., Dept. of Chemistry — "Beyond the ability to comprehend difficult and involved material, the single most characteristic ability I associate with a good student is the use of imagination and the ability to introduce creativity into his work."

DR. C. D .WRIGHT, Ph.D., Dept. of English — "Engagement and insight."

DR. D. T. LAPKAN, Ph.D., Dept. of Economics — "The thing that I find most exciting in the process where the student begins to question and reassess the ideas and modes of thinking that he has grown up with and apply them to his relationships with the faculty and his fellow students.

Campus News Briefs

NSA Alternates

Teddy O'Toole, NSA Co-ordinator, announced that he will interview students who wish to attend the NSA Congress this summer as alternates. The interviews will be held on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons from 1-5 p.m. in the Student Government Offices.

The Congress will be held at the University of Illinois at Champaign-Urbana. The Congress will start on August 20 and last through September 1.

Press Secretary

Interviews for Assistant Student Government Press Secretary will be held on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons in the Student Government Offices, according to Phil Kirstein, Student Government Press Secretary.

All students who are interested in both Student Government and journalism and can type are urged to apply. Girls who can take shorthand are desperately needed — their applications will be given special consideration.

The students who are selected will work on the Student Government Report (SGR), the press releases for the DTH, and the State press releases.

Appointments

The following have been appointed to the Honor System Commission: Alan Banov, Terry Colby, Patty Delaney, Bill Findlay, Ann Fowler, Kent Hedman, Don Leslie, Trey Obenshain, Hal Rainey and John Sarratt.

Taylor Branch, chairman of the commission, has announced a meeting for 5 p.m. Thursday in the Grail Room.

Research Papers

A unique service for evaluating and marketing college research papers, called the Research Writers' Bureau Ltd., was established in New York City recently in response to widespread demand amongst publishers for articles on academic subjects. The firm is reported to be the first organization of its kind to concentrate its efforts entirely on selling campus-written material.

According to Richard Fennelly, director of the literary agency, there are thousands of periodicals, ranging from the smallest journals to some of the largest "slick" magazines, which need well-researched student manuscripts. He reports that some of these pay up to 10 cents per word for this material.

"Academic journals are usually the first and too often the last place students consider as an outlet for their work," Fennelly says. "This is lamentable because there are numerous semi-popular magazines which pay decent money for research writing. They cover a wide field of interest, including science, religion, history, medicine and business." Vertually every area of college study has some representation in this type of periodical, according to the firm's director.

The new agency, which does not return manuscripts unless first quered wth a description of the paper, is located at 95-31 104 St., Ozone Park, N.Y.

Hundreds Of Murders Due Today

Contestants in the University of North Carolina League of Executioners (U.N.C.L.E.) may pick up an envelope at the Graham Memorial information desk containing the names of their three victimes.

Each hunter has been assigned three victims, just in case he flubs the first job or wants to take his choice.

The contest is officially underway right now, and hunters have until noon tomorrow to score at least one kill.

Victims must make a detailed report (under 100 words) which includes the time of murder and the modus operandi (method).

When you have been killed you are out of the game, except for the report you must submit to the DTH offices by 3 p.m. tomorrow. Late reports will be void.

In the victim's report must also be included the name of his killer. He may comment about the effectiveness of the kill. Killers and hunters are allowed to make out the report over a beer in Harry's or the Goody Shop, but remember, no cheating.

Hunters are required to track down their victims and kill them any way they see fit. Of course, more bizzare murders are better candidates for prizes.

YOUR HUNTER MAY STRIKE at any time, any place. He might even shoot you with sulfuric acid from a Y-Court coke. Beware — for no one knows what evil lurks in the heart of man but the Shadow and he isn't even playing U.N.C.L.E. (University of North Carolina League of Executioners.)

FRED THOMAS, EDITOR

Full Of Bull

Former student body president Paul Dickson isn't safe from an occasional sarcastic barb these days—even within the walls of his own fraternity house. even within the walls of his iwn fraternity house.

Last week a group of his fraternity brothers gloriously marched away from the Capitol lawn in Raleigh with the State Bullfrog Jumping Championship. These victorious sportsmen received photo and news story coverage in most daily newspapers in North Carolina, appeared on television news on at least four area stations, and even had a telephone interview broadcast nation-wide on ABC Radio.

Some of the more excited brothers constructed a collage of newspaper clippings heralding the event and hung it in a prominent spot in the fraternity's dining room early Saturday morning.

One clipping was especially eye-catching. It came from page 1-C of the Charlotte Observer. There, side by side, was the story of the frog jump and a story on the law suit to test the North Carolina Speaker Ban Law. One column of type separated a picture of frog-trainer Chris Randilph from a picture whose caption read, "Paul Dickson . . . filed suit."

Out to the side, in dark-colored magic marker, was an arrow drawn to Dickson's picture. At the other end of the arrow were these words: "No frog . . . but full of bull!"

Reading Week

Final examinations begin one week from today.

Within a period of one week students will be asked to regurgitate all the facts they have swallowed in their courses this semester. With this performance they will register from 20 to 50 per cent of their total grade.

How could they do it without reading day? But an even better question is this — how can they do it with only one reading day?

In one of his last DTH cartoons Chip Barnard showed a student at his desk, staring at a stack of books and papers. The caption read, "How the hell can I study with so much work to do?"

This remark is certainly applicable to a majority of our students. It's no secret. In the course of a semester there is quite an accumulation of reading material and research work that just never gets done. Even the best students can be heard complaining about an impossible amount of "catching up" to do before exams.

At one time there was no such animal as a reading day at UNC. Then several years ago it appeared upon the scene. Now, it seems it would be appropriate to make another revision.

What we prepose is a reading week — say a four-day span — not necessarily intended for "cramming" for exams, but for catching up on outside work that has fallen by the way.

We hope students will think about this when classes end Monday and they suddenly realize that only one day stands between them and finals. If students want an extended reading period, we sincerely believe they could get it. But we'll never know unless someone sounds off — starting now and ending only when the change is made.

A Flammable Problem

A little more than a week ago the building which housed Chez Kemp Ltd. and Courts Drug store was gutted by a fire of yet undetermined cause. It was the talk of the town for a few days. Now it's history.

But an old axiom has it that history repeats itself. We're not prophesying another fire at Kemp's, but we wonder how long luck will be with many other hazardous and inadequately protected structures in downtown Chapel Hill and on this campus.

The upstairs portion of Kemp's building had been condemned for some time before the recent fire according to the local fire department. Now the whole building is condemned.

Is this the rule that is to be followed? Are we playing burn now, take precautions later?

Take a look around campus. Think of a few carelessly-placed cigarette butts in BVP for example. Of course, with housing space so precious here, we realize the University cannot abandon this building because it is not fireproof. But has anyone thought about installing an automatic sprinkler svstem or more fire extinguishers?

And speaking of fire extinguishers . . . Of all the classroom buildings in which a fire might well find itself at home, we think first of the chemistry building—Venable Hall. Yet a quick tour of that building the other day revealed that the most recent date on any of the fire extinguisher inspection tags was Nov. 15, 1963. Either some inspector doesn't believe in dating inspection tags or someone is taking a big risk of having a bunch of ineffective fire-fighting devices at his disposal if an emergency were to arise.

Then there was the crusade of some years ago to install direct fire alarm boxes in strategic locations across campus. We have been able to find one such device on campus, and we are told that there is another one at Memorial Hospital.

These examples are visible with a minimum of scrutiny. We're sure there are equally dismal situations that go unnoticed every day.

We'd like to see something done about it — before it's too late.

"Maybe there are getting to be too many stray dogs on campus."

GOP, Racists Take Swipe At Woman's Job Corps Center

Republicans and their allies — segregationist LBJ-haters — licked their chops last week after chasing the country's first Job Corps Center for women out of St. Petersburg, Fla.

For the GOP and the racists, it was a first-class victory, but for 244 girls, it meant merely another insult to end those they had constantly received since the center got under way.

Meanwhile, lurking in the background, were circumstances vaguely reminiscent of the Chapel Hill housing controversy.

Bureaucratic blunders by the federal government, as usual, were largely reponsible for what happened in St. Petersburg however, the main trouble was this:

About 65 per cent of the Job Corps women had been Negroes — a statistic that was viewed with disfavor by the conservative residents of retirement communities near the center.

Thus, not many people were surprised when Sargent Shriver, Office of Economic Opportunity director, said a "hostile environment" was responsible for the Job Corps's retreat.

Just as upper-middle class Chapel Hill citizens resented the possibility of low-cost public housing being built in their neighborhoods, so it happened that the bigoted oldsters disliked seeing nearby proof that not all Americans are whites with comfortable incomes.

Rightly or not, the city government, like Chapel Hill's, responded to these prejudices, insisting that the Job Corps move the center elsewhere.

The OEO suggested the girls be housed in another building, but Mayor Harman Goldner objected on the grounds that this plan would interfere with a new downtown redevelopment project

The Job Corps, of course, had been foolish in choosing the original location for the center, as the federal government had been in deciding where to put the Chapel Hill public housing. Yet, by the fervor with which the St. Petersburg officials protested both the original and the changed locations, it became clear they were more interested in sabotaging the OEO's plans than in achieving a mutually agreeable compromise.

Dr. Bennetta Washington, Women's Job Corps head, commented about the hostility against the center: "It's a tragedy, but if it's going to be continually implied the girls are immoral, how can they continue to grow in such an environment." In so doing Dr. Washington, besides illustrating the local officials' reluctance to compromise, showed the tactics of smear and slander which the Job Corps, despite all its resources, could not overcome.

By spending more on the girls than it would have cost to send them through four years of college, the OEO undoubtedly deserved a lot of criticism; but how could it strike back against malicious propaganda circulated by GOP politicians in both Florida and Washington? Driven on by spiteful partisanship, congressional Republicans attacked the Job Corps center, simplistically explaining the controversy with phrases like: "Rocking Chair versus Rock 'n' Roll."

Democrats' racism had also contributed to sentiment against the center: however, if participants in the fight must use catchy phrases, perhaps this one is best:

"GOP Opportunism versus the Office of Economic Opportunities."

Here in Chapel Hill, we've had our own share of problems with the Washington bureaucrats and their inability to adapt their projects to local circumstances; but at least we don't have to worry so much about the segregationist boosters of "the Party of Lincoln."

DTH, Code Are Issues Again

Stith Takes Swing

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The most popular pastime on campus is criticizing The Daily Tar Heel. I myself have enjoyed that sport for four years.

But, according to the Yack, the newest fad concerning that old yellow muckracker is claiming membership on its staff.

The Yack says 18 seniors worked on the DTH this year. Remember, that's this year. Altogether 34 seniors claimed they graced the Tar Heel's pages at one time or another.

But, friends, the key word is "claimed."

Some who said they were staffers must have based their claim on the fact that they wrote a letter to the editor at one time or another, or maybe their roommate did, or maybe they walked past Graham Memorial on their way to class.

Because you see, we just don't remember them. We don't remember Gregory Davis or Ivan Hardesty or Mavis Hill or Richard Hoyt. We don't remember Bob Bettis or Bob Page either. Ditto with Rosa Southerland and Mary Strother

Editor Ernie McCrary didn't remember them. Associate Editor Barry Jacobs didn't either. Neither did Sports Editor Gene Rector. Nobody does.

Those eight must have come and gone so fast they didn't even leave so much as a crumpled piece of copy paper on the floor.

Mind you, we're not complaining — just commenting on the Yack's inaccuracy. Why should we complain, there are enough barbs aimed at that old rag to share with every pretender on campus.

Honor Code Vague

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

The vagueness of the Honor Code and the need for judicial reform is a recurrent issue which receives much talk and little action here at Carolina. Moving under the veil of anonymity which supposedly protects defendants, the Honor Council, the central organ of the honor system, is also shaded from close public scrutiny of the brand of justice it metes out. To the already long and growing list of complaints about the Honor Council we wish to add still another.

In a recent case the council summarily suspended a student on charges of plagarism, a student less than three months from graduation. The defendant pleaded guilty to the technical charge, yet maintained that the offense was committed unintentionally. The list of his character witnesses was long and unimpeachable; even the faculty member who had asked the defendant to report himself testified in his behalf. Yet despite all this, the council saw fit to suspend the defendant.

Those of us who have afixed our names to this letter feel compelled to publicly and emphatically testify to the honesty and integrity of this student judgment formed over long and warm association with him.

Even more emphatically we question the wisdom and the "honor" of any court which would pass such a sentence in the face of the evidence presented. We feel that the mass of testimonials as to the character and honor of the defendant was totally ignored by the Honor Council, a condition which undermines the very code the council seeks to uphold. And if, indeed, the sentence was in accord with the established judicial policies here at Carolina, then we feel these policies are desperately in need of revision. At any rate the harshness of the sentence and the utter disregard of the circumstances present a sharp contrast with some of the council's other more notorious decisions.

Those in positions of authority — the administration, the Daily Tar Heel, Student Government — should take a long and serious look at what passes for justice at Carolina. Above all the students themselves, for whom the "Honor Council" is all too often but a mysterious threat from above, should realize their own responsibility to measure its proceedings aginst the ideals it seeks to enforce.

Orwell's Day Here

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

War is peace.
Slavery is freedom.
Ignorance is strength.

Has the undeclared war on Viet Nam now brought the United States to the point of espousing these Orwellian inversions? We are told by our leaders that the Defense Department (formerly the War Department) carries out its actions against North Viet Nam to preserve the freedom of the South Vietnamese people and defend the US against future communist aggression. Yet where was this freedom we are supposedly defending under the Diem regime, and where is it now under the Ky dictatorship? And when do we forsee the Vietnamese declaring war on the US and the Viet Cong invading California?

We are then told by our leaders it is really China that is the enemy and Viet Nam is only a domino. But where are the Chinese troops then? They will come, the military warn us, and therefore it may be necessary to declare a preventative war on China and wipe out their capability before they can strike, and in this way world peace will be maintained (Shall the Defense Department become the Peace Department at this time?)

Yet, when senators, scholars, ministers, students, and other citizens criticise and dissent against this war on Viet Nam because they feel it is immoral, illegal, not in the US's interest, a threat to world peace, mismanaged, blundering, or anything else, the reply is that this weakens the US's resolve, demoralizes our troops, and gives aid and comfort to the enemy. To keep America strong we are told to accept our government's stand and actively support it, and not to try to determine the validity of, or attempt to change, the basic motivating assumptions and commitments of the United States in this world of continuing revolution.

Orwell seems to have missed his date by 18 years.

'Liliom' Was Good

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

I feel it safe to assume that, on behalf of everyone who attended the Playmakers latest production "Liliom," I can extend warm congratulations for a job well done. Not being a critic of the theater, I shall not single out any one performer for praise—each and every one of them gave an excellent performance in my opinion. For those students who took off for the warm and sunny beaches Friday noon, I think it would be appropriate to make note of the circumstances under which the play was given: Friday night "Lilion" was performed in an ever - increasing drizzle, and Saturday it was as cold as it had been miserable the previous night. Sunday's performance was the only one which proceeded under normal circumstances. "Liliom's superlative quality is a tribute to its director, Kai Jurgenson. In closing I would like to express the hope that more productions will be planned for the Forest Theater. Despite the numerous difficulties encountered in putting on a play outdoors, the end result of the sparkling performance in the woodland setting made a theater experience not soon to be forgotten.

Education Marred By The Draft

(Editor's note — These are excerpts from a statement by the Faculty Committee on Selective Service of Chicago, Ill.)

Educators have often pointed out the negative effects of excessive emphasis on grades. Requests by draft boards for grade information only exacerbates these negative effects. Experimentation with alternatives to grading, which may result in better education, is handicapped by the necessity of supplying grades to the Selective Service Administration.

There are no ultimately just criteria by which to decide who shall and who shall not be conscripted. These decisions are difficult, However, the professor should not be made a party to these decisions since it interferes with the performance of his duties. Furthermore, the seeming precision of rank in class cannot overcome the intrinsically arbitrary decision a cover of pseudo-objectivity when, in the course of so doing we impede the educational enterprise of all college and university students

For the sake of the national welfare there should be as radical a separation of the activities of the Selective service Administration from the educational enterprise as possible. Even in such things as the administration of tests, it would be better if this be done without call upon the colleges and universities, that the two enterprises not be confounded. It is hard to believe that rank in class really predicts the contribution to the national welfare that a student will eventually make. It is, however easier to see how interference by the Selective Service Administration in the educational enterprise has a negative effect

A Matter Of Opinion

By John H. Jennrich

In the May issue of Harper's magazine there is an excellent article titled "College Newspapers in Search of Their Own Voice." The author is Jeff Greenfield, former editor of the Wisconsin Daily Cardinal and currently an editor of the Yale Law Journal.

Greenfield notes that there is a student newspaper on almost all of the two thousand campuses in the United States. The student newspaper, he says, is "potentially the most important and powerful student voice on the campus. For most of the college papers, however, this power is potential only."

The author says there are two distinct schools of thought in the American college press. The first is a passive, timid adjunct of the university's press service. The second is an activist, critical, skeptical newspaper which reports and comments on issues that go beyond the limits of the campus

The vast majority of college newspapers are the passive type. "Either by choice, by indifference, or by fear," Greenfield says, "they have chosen to publish only the inconsequential and the inoffensive in their news and editorial columns."

He says the typical editorial page "will call for support for the Blood Drive or for more student parking." And the editor can fill his paper "with easy - to - cover and easy - to - write stories, and pretend his paper is covering the real news on the campus." But what is missing is the "attempt to inform the campus about important educational and social programs of the college."

Greenfield says part of the blame for this passivity falls on the students themselves. It is easier to follow a pattern than it is to stir up controversy. Furthermore, both class work and newspaper work are enough of a burden without adding to the problem by "getting people angry at you."

"In contrast to the tranquil and mediocre student press," says Greenfield, "a consistent minority of college papers have chosen to remain essentially independent sources of information, comment, and criticism on their campuses." He points out that page one of a typical activist paper would include, in addition to the usual stories, coverage of a major piece of international or national news by wire service (particularly where the college paper also serves as the community morning paper), a news story about an impending curriculum or academic policy change, an interpretive or analytical piece on that policy, and an investigative story on a key campus problem, such as housing shortages, student employment wages or community opposition to campus expansion.

"Editorials," Greenfield continues, "may cover a routine campus dispute, or the war in Viet Nam, or sexual morality, or communist speaker bans, or anything else which comes into the minds of an articulate writer who hasn't learned not to offend. The columns and letters are even more wide-ranging, a reflection of the ferment that is part of any lively campus community."

The author feels that one of the qualities that makes a paper good is the courage of its editors. An example of this is in the field of civil rights where "college newspapers in the South have frequently been far ahead of their commercial counterparts." Greenfield also admires the courage of one paper that challenged the school's "publish or perish" policy.

Greenfield says the effort necessary to produce a good newspaper is valuable. "The students, who work on college papers become accustomed to the feel of responsibility at an early age."

He concludes that "a free and active student press requires . . . a core of students willing to speak out about a large number of topics, some of them involving touchy and emotional issues. It requires a hard - working staff, willing to give up the party - football circuit for a more difficult kind of life. And it requires, perhpas most of all, a school willing to let its students run the risk of making up their own minds, however mistakenly, however awkwardly, however immaturely, and to let them offer those opinions at large."

Greenfield's article is a good one. He emphasizes many of his suggestions for a better college press by examples taken from college newspapers. In fact, he cites 25 different college nespapers for their good deeds. And he mentons another 14, neither criticizing nor praising them.

Unfortunately, the Daily Tar Heel is not once mentioned.

The Maryland Diamondback is. And so is the Mississippian and the Alabama Crimson and White, along with the Columbia Spectator, the Harvard Crimson and the Daily Texan, to name only a few.

Within the past few weeks the Daily Tar Heel and its staff have racked up numerous awards. But this doesn't mean the DTH is the greatest. It still has a long way to go but, fortunately, no one knows that better than Fred Thomas, the present editor.

Former editor Ernie McCrary once said he wasn't much interested in the northern college press. He seemed content to let the DTH be a big frog in a little, provincial pond. We think it's time the DTH took a big jump and started practical, day- to - day competition with the best college newspapers in the country. If the Hollins College and the Charlotte Observer awards really mean anything, the DTH ought to be able to at least make a little splash in the ocean of national collegiate journalism.

We don't mean to suggest that the DTH is all potential and no production. Contrary to the opinion held by the Yack staff, we don't believe the DTH has been entirely "incompetent" for 72 years. We just think there's room for improvement.

Hopefully the current editor, like his fraternity's frog, will be a winner.

OUR AVERAGE GRADUATE OF READING DYNAMICS READS 4.7 TIMES FASTER WITH EQUAL or BETTER COMPREHENSION THAN HIS BEGINNING SPEED

WHAT STUDENTS SAY:

Quotes from "Triangle" Area Students

IN DURHAM . . .

I have thoroughly enjoyed the course and am glad I took it. I improved in speed (from an average of 293 WPM to 3540 WPM) with no drop in comprehension. Reading Dynamics will help in all my schoolwork and in my pleasure reading.

Mark Monson
Jr. High School

I have greatly increased my speed from an average of 158 WPM to 6975 WPM. I intend to use my new reading techniques in school and pleasure reading.

Bob Brame
High School

Reading Dynamics has solved the problem of required reading. I can now finish my assignments much more quickly and much more easily. I now have time to improve my understanding of my textbooks by reading supplementary material, and I have enough time left over for pleasure reading. Reading Dynamics has given me the opportunity to become a better educated individual

Mike Balog
Duke University

IN CHAPEL HILL . . .

Again I want to wholeheartedly endorse your course and method. I began at 400 wpm and finished—reading dynamically—at speeds as high as 3,000 wpm with no loss of comprehenison.

Dick League

It changed my concept of "Reading" from walking very slowly with my eyes on the ground to surveying whole landscapes and panoramas, allowing one to distinguish between "essential" and "non-essential". It makes reading an art employing varying speeds, intensities and inflections. I intend to use Reading Dynamics—For Pleasure: I have finally read one novel in 15 minutes! For Work: I have mountains of material to digest which would seem hopeless without my newly-acquired skill. I feel enriched!

"Everything is going just fine here. My courses are all pretty tough but all very interesting. I'm really going to enjoy this semester. You'll be glad to know that my reading has helped me tremendously! It really is a time saver. I've been getting to bed around 11:00 to 11:30 . . . and it certainly is not because I don't have any homework because I always have plenty of it. That reading, though, has just cut my study time. It really is great! That's one of the most useful presents I have ever received. Thanks a million for it! Lots of love to you all.

- You will see a Reading Dynamics graduate read at amazing speed from a book he has never seen before and then tell in detail what he has read.
- You will see a documented film that includes actual interviews with Washington Congressmen who have taken the course.
- You will learn how we can help you to faster reading, improved comprehension, greater recall.

HOW IS THIS POSSIBLE?

Eighteen years ago Evelyn Wood, a Utah schoolteacher, made a startling discovery that led to the founding of Reading Dynamics. While working toward a master's degree, she handed a term paper to a professor and watched him read the 89 pages at 6,000 words per minute—with outstanding recall and comprehension. Determined to find the secret behind such rapid reading, she spent the next two years tracking down 50 people who could read faster than 1,500 words per minute. She studied their techniques, taught herself to read at these faster rates. Now, after years of experience in public schools and universities, she has made it possible for you to benefit from this great discovery.

IS IT SIMPLY A PROMOTION STUNT?

Over the past eleven years more than 160,000 graduates have been convinced that Reading Dynamics is a proven method. About Reading Dynamics' impact on our nation's legislators, Time Magazine said "Washington has seen nothing like it since the days when Teddy Roosevelt read three books a day and ran the country at the same time."

Conventional rapid reading courses aspire to 450-600 words per minute. Most Reading Dynamics graduates can read between 1,000 and 3,000 words per minute, and many go even higher.

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

We guarantee to increase the reading efficiency of each student AT LEAST 3 times with good comprehension. We will refund the entire tuition to any student who, after completing minimum class and study requirements, does not at least triple his reading efficiency as measured by our beginning and ending tests.

Police Surround Pennsylvania Kidnapper

SHADE GAP, Pa., (AP) — Police closed their trap to within a five - mile radius of the phantom sniper who shot and killed an FBI agent yesterday and then holed up in a cave - like hideout with a pretty 17 - year - old girl he kidnapped last week.

While state police and FBI agents inched toward their prey, the FBI identified the sniper as William Diller Hollenbaugh, a 44-year-old former mental patient who lives in a cabin about eight miles south of this rural central Pennsylvania community.

Agent Terry Ray Anderson, 42, married and the father of four children, was killed by a single shot from a rifle as he and other lawmen pushed the search for Peggy Ann Bradnick.

The FBI charged Hollenbaugh who has served 5 to 10 years on three counts of burglary in Western State penitentiary, with murder. Later, he was committed to the Fairview State Hospital for the criminally insane, spending 13 years there before being released.

State Police Major Frank McKetta said Anderson was killed as he and another FBI agent and three state policemen combed a rocky area near Hollenbaugh's cabin.

"The shots came out of nowhere," said McKetta. "Anderson and two tracking dogs were killed and a third dog wounded."

The FBI charges were filed before U. S. Commssoner David A. Flood of Bellefonte, Pa.

The FBI said Hollenbaugh, a native of Perry County, Pa., "did shoot and kill agent Anderson while in the performance of his official duties." He was described as 5 feet, 6 1-2 inches, weighing 142 pounds with a fair complexion, gray - blue eyes and dark hair. The tip of his right thumb has been amputated and he is missing five teeth.

Anderson apparently was shot while with other lawmen investigating Hollenaugh's cabin after receiving an unofficial report the kidnaped girl was there. An FBI spokesman said agents, led by dogs, went to the cabin and were in the process of bringing up reserves when the shooting started. He said the dogs were the first to be hit, then Anderson.

Immediately after the killing, state police and FBI agents from every station within a 200 - mile radius was rushed to the scene. They surrounded the sniper and the girl who were holed up in what might be described as a cave in the wooded, rock strewn area.

Jack L. Conmy, press secretary to Gov. William W. Scranton, said 250 state policemen are cautiously moving through the brush and woodland. He said another 100 troopers were standing by.

Conmy said the search pattern approximates a circle of five miles in diameter with the center the location where the sniper and the girl last were seen.

"They are very slowly closing in," Conmy advised.

"The troopers have to move quite slowly because, number one, he killed a man and numnumber two, because he has that young girl as a hostage," Conmy said.

"That man knows the area like the back of his hand," the press secretary said.

"Their (Police) instructions are to fire only if fired upon. They are to fire three shots if they spot the gunman and the girl," he added.

Conmy said that earlier a state trooper using binoculars spotted the gunman standing along with a rifle on a bluff. The trooper immediately called for a helicopter and watched the gunman. The sniper then retreated into the woods.

Conmy also earlier had spoken of a cabin in the deep woods he said state police had staked out for two days. He said police were suspicious because the occupant had been missing since the abduction.

There was no indication whether Hollenbauch could be the mysterious Mountain Man who has terrorized this area for almost two years. He was spotted today with the girl, who was alive and apparently well, about half an hour after Anderson was slain. An FBI agent and three state policemen reported his whereabouts.

Major McKetta reported at the time that the "The girl was alive and appeared well."

The gun battle ensued in the woods from which the unknown sniper, armed and wearing a mask, stepped last Wednesday and snatched the teenage girl who was walking home from school with her five brothers and sisters.

The phantom sniper, or mountain man, is someone who for two years has been molesting women. In one case he shot a woman in the arm and foot. He also has fired high - power rifle bullets at residents, cars and trucks near this village of 140 people, which is among the Tuscarora, Shade and Black Mountins.

The tiny Huntingdon County community is situated just six miles north of the Pennsylvania Turnpike, a main artery in the Northeast United States.

Pennsylvania's state capitol, Harrisburg, lies some 60 miles to the east. The Maryland border is some 30 miles to the south.

The shootings erupted after six days of fruitless searching by hundreds of law officials and volunteers. The massive search operation was called off Sunday night, but 35 state policemen and 20 FBI agents remained in the area to carry on a continuing investigation.

A composite drawing of the abductor, based on information supplied by the Bradnick girl's brothers and sisters had been released by police and a 13 - state alarm posted. He carried a rifle and wore an orange cap, gray coat and trousers, a large black leather belt, black high boots, sunglasses and a small mask.

Marcus Downes, the owner of a motel in nearby Fort Littleton, who earlier participated in the search for the girl and her kidnaper, said the area in which they were surround was one not heavily covered before.

"The area is full of rocks where a man could easily hide out," he said.

McKetta stressed that the gunman was extremely dangerous and knew the area. He said police have sealed off a dirt road leading to the scene from Shade Gap. The road is lined with police cars and men. All sightseers were ordered to stay away.

In addition to the ground forces, three single engine planes and a helicopter circled the area.

Ugly is only skin-deep.

It may not be much to look at. But beneath that humble exterior beats an air-cooled engine. It won't boil over and ruin your piston rings. It won't freeze over and ruin your life. It's in the back of the car for better traction in snow and sand. And it will give you about 29 miles to a gallon of gas.

After a while you get to like so much about the VW, you even get to like what it looks like.

You find that there's enough legroom for almost anybody's legs. Enough headroom for almost anybody's head. With a hat on it. Snug-fitting bucket seats. Doors that close so well you can hardly close them. (They're so airtight, it's better to open the window a crack first.)

Those plain, unglamorous wheels are each suspended independently. So when a bump makes one wheel bounce, the bounce doesn't make the other wheel bump. It's things like that you pay the $1585* for, when you buy a VW. The ugliness doesn't add a thing to the cost of the car.

That's the beauty of it.

Softball Tourneys Near End

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

The intramural softball season will draw to a close this week by determining champions in all three divisions.

As of Tuesday, the fraternity tournament was down to the semifinal round with DU Blue II playing Phi Kap Sig and the TEP Tops meeting Phi Delt Blue.

On Monday Phi Kappa Sig beat DU Blue I, 9-6. Third baseman Norm Hoffman paced the Phi Kap attack with two doubles and three runs scored. Bruce Palmer had a double, single and two runs and Doug Wright rapped a pair of singles. Dick Durham had three hits and scored three times for the DU's. Phi Kappa Sig rallied from a 5-2 deficit to tie the ball game, then moved ahead and clinched the win at 9-5.

TEP spotted the Phi Gam Fijis a 5-0 lead, then came back for an 8-5 win. Kleitman's grand glam home run got the TEP's rolling and Gellman's bases loaded single provided the clinching runs. The Phi Gams scored early on a combination of singles and TEP errors, but were shut out after the second inning.

In the residence hall division, the Ehringhaus C Nubs gained the finals with a 15-2 drubbing of the Mangum Mugs. The Nubs will play the winner of the Morrison G-Everett Rogah game.

Joe Fratangelo provided the spark for Ehringhaus with two home runs, while Gary Lail added another. Bill Spain and Tilden Martin each had two doubles in the onslaught.

Morrison G got a superb pitching performance from Joe Mull in a 4-0 victory over the Old West Stubs. Mull gave up only four singles and two walks in seven innings. Hicks supplied all the margin Morrison G needed with a home run.

In the graduate division, the Gamma Nu Ganus gained the finals with a 4-1 triumph over Dental School IV. They will play the winner of the Law II-Blue-Pharmacy Peyote contest.

Gamma Nu tallied three times in the first inning on singles by John Doyle, Sam Woodard, Cary Alsobrook, Jerry Clark, Jim Kelsey and a fielder's choice. Pitcher Bob Lamb gave up a Dental School run in the first inning, then mowed them down the rest of the game on only one hit.

The Pharmacy Peyotes scored five times in the last inning to beat the Church St. Crusaders, 6-4. Baber got on base on an error, then Roycroft, Newman, Laxton and Stalling drew walks to force in two runs. Young doubled in two more runs and D. Young singled in the other. Ford homered for Church St.

Duke Wins ACC Golf Title

SOUTHERN PINES, N. C. (AP) — Wake Forest sophomore Johnny Harris struggled to an 84 yesterday after an opening round 70 but still managed to tie Duke's Fred Ewald at 154 for the individual title in the Atlantic Coast Conference Golf Tournament.

Duke won the team title with four players in the top seven, totaling 787 strokes to runnerup Wake Forest's 795. Defending champion North Carolina was third at 800.

Ewald finished with 78 after an opening 76.

The 154 for Harris and Ewald, who played together, was the highest winning score since the tourney began in 1954. The previous high was 145 by Wake's Jay Sigel in 1963.

This was the seventh time a Wake Forest golfer has won or shared the individual crown since Arnold Palmer won it for the Deacons in 1954.

Tourney officials toughened pin placements and pushed tees back on several holes Tuesday to make the County Club of North Carolina course play harder and longer than its 6,750 yards of Monday.

Duke's Tom Daluck and Dave Robinson of North Carolina followed Harris and Ewald at 156, and Danny Herring of Wake Forest and Duke's Tom Hackett came next at 157.

North Carolina's John Baldwin, the defending individual champ, shot 82-78 to tie four other players at 160.

Harris started with a birdie on the first hole but double-bogeyed two, had bogyes on three, four and five, and another double bogey on six to turn seven over par.

Ewald, meanwhile, birdied five and seven to turn one under. He then three-putted 10, 11, and 13 for bogeys and bogeyed 14 and 15 to slip even with Harris.

Harris double - bogeyed 16 where Ewald got a bogey, then parred 17 while Ewald had a bogey.

On 18, Harris's third shot went over the green and he bogeyed by missing a short putt.

Ewald trapped his second, failed to get out on his first blast, but one-putted for a par and the tie.

Vacation's Just Around the Corner— Need Some Books?

The rest of the world may have all kinds of delightful things to fill your vacation days, but one thing you'll miss (and we blush as we admit it) is the big friendly old Intimate.

Time's running out, and now is the time to stock up on emergency rations of brain fodder.

Might start among our used paperbacks. They're easy to pack, light to carry, and cheap enough that you can be big-hearted and trade 'em off to the natives, after you've read the juice out of them. Prices start at two for a quarter, but chum, they're real lifesavers when you get out where the corn grows tall.

There's plenty of nice light-reading in our 29c shelf. It's mostly book club selections, contributed by members who forgot to send in their "don't-want-it notice, but it's mighty pretty and goes down easy —and we heard one chap last summer who traded his copy off to a biddy in Tanganyika for something out-of-this-world nice. A mango, perhaps?

If you'd like pleasure-reading in your special field, you're likely to find it anywhere from the 68c shelf on up to the ceiling. One thing you can be sure of is that it will be off the beaten track, fun to read, and it'll be priced fairly.

Chum, we know that biddies and bears, Alps and alligators, romance and adventure, and visions of sugar-plums are dancing through your head.

Let 'em dance, but remember, bookshops are scarce out in the wild blue yonder, and now's the time to stock up that intellectual larder!

The maneuvers are essential to the U. S. technique of getting to the moon. The original Gemini 9 rendezvous would duplicate as closely as possible the departure from the moon by a two - man space cab and its link - up with a mothership orbiting around the moon. Although the Gemini 9 maneuvers would be performed around the earth, rather than the moon, the method would be in part perfected.

Officials pointed out that the plans were flexible for Gemini 12 — a possible final Gemini in the program — and could be a sort of fudge factor picking up some of the experiments that might otherwise be dropped because of today's failure.

Stafford, a 35 - year - old Air Force Lieutenant Colonel, and Cernan, a 32 - year - old Navy Lieutenant Commander, did not have long to wait to find their flight had been frsutrated. Just eight minutes after the Atlas roared into life with its red - orange tail of flame, the word came that the flight had been scrubbed.

"We have lost the Agena bird," said Mission Control. "We don't know exactly what happened to it. The Gemini will not fly today."

The astronauts were in their spacecraft barely 50 minutes, entering just about 20 minutes before the 113 - foot Atlas - Agena roared spaceward at three seconds after 10:15 A.M. (EST). They were to speed off in pursuit — propelled by their Titan 2 rocket an hour and 39 minutes later.

But it wasn't in the cards. Two minutes and 10 seconds after the Atlas blast - off, the word came that singals had been lost from the distant rocket.

That loss of signal came at about the time the Atlas booster engine was to have cut off. Tracking data indicated initially that the Agena target ship had begun to tumble.

The atlas lifted off 15 minutes later than scheduled because of trouble in fueling the 26 - foot agena rocket sitting atop it.

Rioting Feared In Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A tense watchfulness pervaded south Los Angeles today in the wake of two violent episodes kindled, police said, by Negro resentment of a white officer's killing of a young Negro father.

Small bands of roving Negro youths attacked two white newsmen and partially looted a liquor store last night after the breakup of a large demonstration protesting alleged police brutality in the May 7 shooting of Leonard Deadwyler, 25.

The newsmen were Karl Fleming, 38, Los Angeles, bureau manager for Newsweek Magazine, reported in good condition after being beaten into unconsciousness with rocks and 4-by-4 timbers, and Newsweek reporter David Moberg, 22, who suffered minor face cuts and bruises.

Police from 77th St. Division, reinforced by 30 officers called up earlier in the day moved quickly into the area —devastated by race rioting last August — and dispersed crowds in about three hours.

A few loud reports were heard. Police first called them gunshots but later said they could have been firecrackers. Several false fire alarms were turned in.

Routine police patrols were resumed at 1:45 A.M..

Metropolitan division reinforcements remained on quick call pending the outcome of tomorrow's inquest into Deadwyler's death.

The reinforcements were called up, said Sgt. Larkin Bernard, because "for the last week we've been feeling the tension building — undoubtedly connected with the Deadwyler death."

The Rev. H. H. Brookins, a Negro and head of Los Angeles' United Civil Rights Council, agreed that Deadwyler's death had stirred deep resentment in the Negro community.

"In a tense atmosphere like you have here," said Brookins, "a death like that of Leonard Deadwyler is almost exactly the worst kind of thing that could have happened. You couldn't ask for a more inflamatory set of circumstances.

"All the ingredients are here to blow open all the pent-up frustration and anger. The community is just simply mad and it's going to continue to build. I felt it last night. There was a much anger and outright unreason as last August.

"Unless something dramatic happens at the Deadwyler inquest to give Negroes the feeling justice will be done, there's going to be trouble. The Negroes expect the verdict to be justifiable homicide. They're prejudging it. I heard several of them at the protest ask if anyone ever heard of a white policeman getting charged for killing a Negro, and nobody had. If the inquest comes out negative to what the Negroes want, then I'm afraid we've had it."

Deadwyler was stopped by a traffic officer, Jerold M. Bova, as he was speeding his pregant wife, Barbara, 25, to a hospital.

Bova said he was reaching for Deadwyler's ignition keys when the car began to move again, causing the gun he held in one hand to discharge accidentally, fatally wounding Deadwyler.

SDS Rally To Protest Draft System

Students for a Democratic Society will sponsor a rally tomorrow in Y Court at noon to protest against what they feel are "inequities" of the draft system.

A booth will be set up and two faculty members will speak. A "Make Love, Not War" jug Band will precede the rally.

Dr. William Flemming of the political science department will address the rally on "The Viet Nam War" in a general talk, and Dr. William W. Shea of the philosophy department will speak on "Active Dissent and Moral Justification of Civil Disobedience."

Copies of the SDS test which asks questions about the Viet Nam War will also be available.

Elliot Kramer, an SDS member, said that Gary Waller and Chuck Schunior will be on hand to debate with students and answer questions.

A flyer which attacks the Viet Nam war will be available. The flyer, a "call for an examination of conscience," is printed by the national SDS organization.

It charges that the test being administered by the selective service (designed to weed out poor students for the draft) is actually a "friendly tug-of-war" between the military and the business community.

"Big business and the military have decided to be fair to each other about sharing us (students). Some of us are not so bright, or perhaps have been lazy scholars. Businessmen don't need them," the flyer states, "They can go be soldiers."

Then the SDS asks, "What about all those guys whose parents didn't have enough money to send them to college . . . When your brothers are over there dying trying to do something you think needs to be done, why are you back here at home trying to pass a test in order to stay out of it?"

The SDS test is being given as a protest to the draft test being given this month and during the summer. Answer sheets will be provided with the 18-question exam.

McNamara Asks 2-Year Service For Americans

MONTREAL, (AP) — U. S. Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNmara proposed yesterday that every young person in the United States be asked to give two years of service to his country, either in the military, Peace Corps or some other voluntary work.

McNamara said this would help remove what he called the inequity in the present Selective Service System.

Associates in Washington declined to say whether this was an official administration proposal and said they were uninformed on the suggestion.

The secretary of defense spoke at a luncheon of the American Society of Newspaper Editors, attended by about 500 U. S. and Canadian editors. Earlier the society heard Sen. Abraham Ribicoff D - Conn., call for the establishment of federal safety standards for automobiles.

McNamara mentioned the conflict in Viet Nam only in a brief reference but he spoke at length on the question of U. S. security and its relationship to security in developing countries.

He suggested a flexible approach toward Red China in an effort to bridge the gap now isolating Peking from most of the rest of the world. Breaching the isolation of the Chinese Communists "reduces the danger of potentially catastrophic misunderstandings and increases the incentive on both sides to resolve disputes by reason rather than by force," he observed.

"There are many ways in which we can build bridges toward nations who would cut themselves off from meaningful contacts with us," he said. "We can do so with properly balanced trade relations, diplomatic contacts, and in some cases even by exchanges of military observers."

McNamara said the idea of government service for all young people had been criticized as inappropriate "while we are engaged in a shooting war."

"But I believe precisely the opposite is the case," he declared. "It is more appropriate now than ever, for it would underscrore what our whole purpose is in Viet Nam

Professor Predicts Ban Trial Doubtful

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

There probably won't be any speaker ban trial, Prof. William Van Alstyle of the Duke Law School said yesterday.

He said a hearing would be held at which attorneys for the plaintiffs and defendants will confront each other, but most likely no trial would take place.

Van Alstyne is helping prepare a brief against the State and the University, involved in the suite because of their enforcement of the speaker ban. Last summer, he testified in the Britt hearings on the ban.

In a final, Van Alstyne said, persons other than the lawyers would participate.

"The point of a trial is largely to get the facts straight," he explained, saying he thought the two sides could agree on the facts in a pretrial hearing to be held May 27 in Greensboro.

In Raleigh, State Attorney General Wade Bruton refused to say whether a trial would be needed. "I have no comment at this time," he declared.

"Most of what happened has not been disputed," Van Alstyne said. "There ought to be no dispute over what took place."

He said that what will be debated in the hearings is the speaker ban's constitutionality. "There will be a combination of written and oral arguments" on this subject, the law professor said.

Concerning another phase of the dispute, Van Alstyne stated he couldn't predict when the UNC American Association of University Professors and the Chapel Hill American Civil Liberties Union will file a "friend of the court" brief supporting the plaintiffs.

He said it might be a month before the brief was filed.

The plaintiffs of the suit, filed March 31, are Communist Herbert Aptheker, Frank Wilkinson (head of a group seeking abolition of the House Un-Ameican Activities Committee) and 12 UNC students.

They ask that the U. S. District Court for the Middle District of North Carolina declare the ban unconstitutional and prevent, by injunction, the defendants from enforcing the ban.

The measure, known as "The gag law," was offered by the defendants as a reason for preventing Aptheker and Wilkinson from speaking on the UNC campus.

The defendants — Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson, University President William Friday and the University Trustees — filed their answer to the plaintiffs' complaint at the last possible moment, hoping the semester would end and the suit would be considered invalid.

Also, Carolina Political Union Chairman Eric Van Loon, former DTH Editor Ernie McCrary, Gary Waller and Stu Matthrews of the Students for Democratic Society steering committee, student John McSween and student Henry Patterson.

The plaintiffs' attorney is McNeil Smith of Greensboro.

The State and the University's answer to the plaintiffs' complaint was prepared by the Raleigh law firm of Joyner and Howison and the Attorney General's staff.

Gemini Flight Rescheduled After Failure For May 31

CAPE KENNEDY, FLA., (AP) — The space agency today officially rescheduled hard - luck Gemini 9 for May 31 and ordered crews on the launch pad to hustle around the clock to accomplish the quick two - week recycle.

Disappointed astronauts Thomas P. Stafford and Eugene A. Cernan — who hoped to be orbiting the globe today and carrying out a spectacular space walk by Cernan — instead flew a T38 jet from Cape Kennedy to NASA's manned spacecraft center in Houston, Tex., to study a changed flight plan. said.

Dr. George E. Mueller, NASA Associate Administrator for manned Space Flight, said the May 31 date "is based on a very tight work schedule."

Instead of spending last night in space, Air Force Lt. Col. Stafford and Navy Cmdr. Cernan ate an Italian dinner and went to a private party.

A motion picture film released today from an Air Force tracking station at Melbourne Beach, Fla., showed the wayward Atlas in its final throes.

The Atlas - Agena combination is shown turning its nose toward earth. Then the booster engines cut off and, seonds later, fell away, as intended. The Atlas continued flving a steady path for another three minutes, the Air Force said, when its Agena second stage separated. Both stages fell into the ocean about 180 miles southeast of the launch pad.

Officials said the Atlas becan having problems 39 miles above the earth and 61 miles downrange.

Air Force officials said one of the three engines at the base of the Atlas swiveled wildly to one side and sent the Atlast - Agena tumbling out of control.

Bayside Singers To Play Tonight

The Bayside Singers, who serve up folk songs a la Peter, Paul and Mary, will appear in the lounge of Graham Memorial at 8 p.. tonight.

The group is composed of Dave McFadden, Sammy Howell, Buck Malcom and Miss Terry Forrest.

McFadden, of Hickory, and Howell, of Ellerbe, and Malcom, of Winston-Salem, are Carolina students. Miss Forrest is a senior at Orange High School in Hillsborough.

They've developed a style that one reviewer called "soft, mellow and sophisticated," saying it "could keep the audience all night."

Burl Ives, the grand old man of professional folk singing, called the Singers "very professional, very talented, very artistic. One of the best I've heard in a long time."

Ives' praise came after the group had been together for only two weeks.

Dave McFadden, number one scholastically in the sophomore class — he has a 4.0 after three semesters — and president of Phi Kappa Sigma's spring pledge class, was introduced to Miss Forrest by a dorm neighbor who heard him strumming his guitar one afternoon.

A friend of McFadden's was rooming in another dorm with Sammy Howell, a music major who was director of folk music programs at Wingate Junior College before transferring.

The three formed themselves into the Bayside Singers and soon added bass player Buck Malcom, a junior music major.

The group attended a Peter, Paul and Mary concert at Raleigh in February and after the show chatted with the trio, whom Miss Forrest had known for two years.

Then, the Bayside Singers were invited to give a private performance before Peter, Paul and Mary in Charlotte. They accepted.

Since then the Bayside Singers have worked up a repetoire of songs — four of which were written by Howell — which are reminiscent of Peter, Paul and Mary albums.

They aren't to big on protest songs.

"Folk protests are a reflection of the times and the situation," Howell said. "We don't dislike them. They just aren't right for us at the moment."

"We're concerned with the musical and emotional aspects of folk music rather than the protest aspect," he said.

UNCLE Game Continues Amidst Death And Horror

A boy in Craige residence hall got a telephone call late Tuesday night and left his room for five minutes. When he returned a large bomb exploded in the corner of his room, but he escaped injury because his killer placed the bomb in the wrong corner.

A coed sat in the smoking room of the library and a stranger walked up, pulled out a bow and arrow, attempted to shoot her, and missed.

These are only two of the countless abortive episodes in yesterday's killed marathon of the one-day U.N.C.L.E. club, sponsored by The Daily Tar Heel.

Killers roamed the campus poisoning ketchup, zeroing in with high powered rifles, shooting point blank with German lugers, and causing telephones to explode in victim's ears.

The University of North Carolina League of Executioners got off to an early start. The first killing came more than 24 hours ago when an unidentified intruder broke into a room in Craige and emptied his blank pistol into the first unlucky victim.

Judges for the contest, which closes at noon today, will accept written reports of killings until 3 p.m. today. Reports must be written by victims and turned in to the DTH offices. They must be under 100 words and contain the time and method of the kill.

Categories in the contest include:

—First Kill.
—Most Bizzare Kill.
—Most Discreet Kill.
—Most Professional Kill.
—Most Elusive Victim.
—Neatest Kill.

First, second, and third prizes will be awarded in the Bizzare" category.

Most important, victims must report their own death. Reports will not be accepted from hunters, unless the victim has killed the hunter. This is legal.

No innocent bystanders may be killed. For those who have not picked up their envelopes in Graham Memorial at the information desk, they will be available until noon today when the contest closes.

No one will be eligible for prizes until a report is turned in. Prizes will be announced in tomorrow's DTH, at the same time winners are chosen.

Concert Cancelled

Phi Mu Alpha regretfully announces that the Raul Spivak Concert which was scheduled for today has been cancelled until next fall due to technical catastrophies. Tickets that have been purchased may be redeemed from any member of the Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia Fraternity, 201 Hill Hall, or may be held for next fall.

Senior Invitations

Seniors who ordered invitations at the regular sales may pick up their invitations at second floor Y-Court on Thursday and Friday. The invitations are in bags in alphebetical order, & yellow receipts should be left in the box provided.

Seniors who placed late orders on Wednesday May. 18. may pick those invitations up on Monday, May 23, at second floor Y-Court, instead of on Friday, May 20, as previously announced.

Eat 'em Up

Slurpin' the juice and spittin' the seeds will be the orders of the day Thursday when the Carolina Women's Council and the Panhellenic Council jointly present their annual watermelon feast for all UNC women.

This year's "banquet" will be held from 3:30 to 5:30 in the backyard of McIver Residence Hall.

Entertainment will be provided by a folk singing group made up of Jim and Dave McFadden of Asheboro and Bill Riggen of Raleigh.

Sitterson Posts Faculty Changes, New Promotions

Spencer, medicine; Richard B. Terry, zoology.

WHAT WILL THEY THINK OF NEXT? — And with "Go Modern" written on the side, this little car has been cruising (maybe that word leaves something to be desired) around campus this past week drumming up Naval Air Reserve recruits.

Story Of The Painters

The N. C. State "intellectuals" have struck again. They left their mark in red paint on the Bell Tower.

Painting on, or otherwise defacing property on another university campus is quite an asinine thing to do. But then most of us at UNC aren't too surprised to find the Cow College boys doing asinine things.

We're just amazed that they did such a poor job. They left their foot-high red letters ("NCSU" and "Wolfpack") on the inside walls in such a position that they are not noticable unless one is inside the tower. Most of our students don't spend too much time there.

Of course, one group that will definitely see the printing there is the string of North Carolina high school and elementary school students that constantly tours this campus. But, we regret to say, if the inscriptions were placed there for recruiting purposes, the sloppy spray-can art work will probably scare off more students than it will attract.

We hope this note will reach the hands of our artistic friends at the Utter U. and if it does, we want them to know we're anxious for them to leave spatters of red in Chapel Hill — their blood next fall in Kenan Stadium.

Open, Sesame

Who has the keys for the locks on the tennis courts gates behind Joyner Hall?

Hundreds of students are hitting it out to the courts for some good recreational sunshine these days. And they're getting more exercise than they bargained for if they happen to lose a ball over the fence.

Of the serveral gates to these courts, only one is left unlocked. Thus, if someone playing at the end fartherest from the gate packs a little too much power in his swing he has to take a five-munite break from his game to journey across all the other courts, out the gate, back to the spot where his ball landed, then retrace his steps back to his court.

It's like going around your elbow to get to your thumb.

Why not open the other gates?

Brick-Laying Time

There is an old custom around here of "trail blazing". That is, students walk wherever they find it convenient, and after a sufficient number of grass-killing trips have been made over any given path, a brick sidewalk is installed.

It is time for such a project for the lower section of Polk Place, directly in front of Wilson Library, to run diagonally from the corner near Dey and Gardner Halls to the lower corner at Bingham Hall.

Students obviously want to take this little short-cut in their cross-campus treks. What started as a few footprints in the morning dew this fall is now a yard-wide race track. Let's get some bricks down before we have a gully wash.

Trashed Out

The fraternity men have complained this year of having a false, unfair public image. They have lamented that bad publicity comes too easily, good publicity with extreme difficulty. These complaints have not been totally unjustified.

And certainly the Greek men got their share of bad publicity state and nation-wide over the Germans Weekend incident.

We'd like to suggest a worthy project that might contribute to a better public image.

West Cameron Ave. and South Columbia St. — from the edge of campus leading off toward the fraternity houses — is dotted every morning with cups and paper wrappers from those students who didn't quite finish breakfast before leaving for class. Other little tid-bits of litter find their way to the ground along these streets throughout the day.

It would be a nice gesture on the part of the men living in the houses in this area to place a few trash cans along the streets in strategic locations. They would certainly be worth more than the cost and effort required to install them.

Remember, every litter bit helps.

Dornbush Spreads Yacks Offal

There will undoubtedly be many persons on campus who would like to get their two cents worth in about the 1966 Yack, but today's publication space should justly be allotted to the guys with the biggest gripe, the staff members of the Daily Tar Heel.

In all this argument about the uncivil personal attacks on page 196 of the Yack, no one as yet has fingered the true culprit.

Robert Dornbush is his name, ladies and gentlemen. Hiding behind the name of the Yackety Yack while his editor took the bulk of the blame, he refused to admit that his libelous pen was producing more than "satire."

Strictly speaking, everything Dornbush wrote could have been labeled as the work of a severe and vituperative critic. It could all have been characterized as ugly, malicious verbage that was in extremely poor taste. That is, all except one clause on page 196.

The line that claims former DTH editor Ernie McCrary sought sanctuary in the infirmary for six weeks is probably the most vicious of the lot. It is not merely a lie, for it contains the added benefits of defaming McCrary's character and charging him with dereliction of duty. It was truly the culmination of a fine job of writing.

If you happen to be a member of the baseball team, or the football team, or a member of the Dook Parade committee or the DTH staff, you will have a fine set of mementos to gaze upon when you open the 1966 Yack twenty years hence.

The time is long overdue for Student Legislature to set up a specific code of restrictions on the Yack and its operations. Only in this manner can the vile offal of persons such as Dornbush be kept from publication.

Students All Say New Yack Is The Worst

Well, I've just finished thumbing through the 1966 Yack — for the last time.

I didn't mind the washed-out pictures. I'm happy my picture was not too offending, no one could see it without a magnifying glass.

Actually, I did enjoy looking at part of the Yackety-Yack. I derived fleeting moments of pleasure and relief as I paused at the many wasteful white blanks on a majority of the pages.

This year's annual is by far the worst I've seen in my four years at Carolina. Sloppy proof-reading, snotty digs at student officers, infantile treatment of campus organizations, poor — no, a complete lack of organization.

To put it simply, if you are a student at Carolina, if your picture appeared, if your name was listed, you were probably insulted in some way.

Not only did the editor neglect his duties regarding ethics and responsibility, he also ignored the laws of libel.

There are also a few things I did not find while looking at my Yack. No mention of faculty members. No mention of our administration. No good writing. Few good pictures. And most of all — no spirit of Carolina.

The book is simply the result of a few wise-acres trying to appear cute — and not succeeding.

A short stay outside the rear of Graham Memorial, where the Yacks are being distributed yielded the following steady stream of comments about this year's sloppy mess.

"They spelled my name wrong."

"Ugh."

"What a horrible cover."

"Let's have a public burning."

"Hey, someone give me a microscope so I can see myself."

"What the hell is this picture supposed to mean?"

"Do you know anyone on the staff? Let's hang 'em in effigy."

"Looks like they've got a few favorite models."

"Must have been printed by rubber stamp."

"Sounds like their writers are on vacation from Pravda."

"I'll bet they chopped me out of the picture on purpose."

"This is the ugliest layout I've ever seen."

"Whoever put this thing out ought to go back to high school."

"Cruddy."

"Are you kidding me?"

"This thing ... s!"

"Nice original cover."

"This thing is sickening."

"If I had known how it was going to turn out I wouldn't have had my picture taken."

I admit I am quite bitter about this year's Yackety-Yack. But instead of complaining any further I plan to burn mine. If anyone else wants to join me, feel free to follow my example.

I'll supply the matches.

Letters To The Editor

Yack, Rothman Draw Flak

Yack Is Garbage

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

Let's be blunt. The '66 Yackety-Yack is garbage in a very nice binding. It contains no section devoted to the University administration or the faculty, yet unless I am woefully mistaken we would be hard pressed to have a University without either. I presume that the pages and pages of pictures which initiate the book are supposed to substitute for the usual editor's "mood piece." They don't.

The sports section lacks taste, imagination, accuracy, thoroughness and polish. Two of the golfers pictured on that team's page graduated at least two years ago. Further, there is no text at all regarding some sports, and the blurb on the baseball page leaves the Yack staff looking suspiciously like the south end of a northbound horse.

In the past two days, I have heard complaints regarding the arrangement, printing, use of color, beauty section, and photography. I endorse all such complaints.

Further, I wonder personally what happened to the Frank Porter Graham awards, which the Yack has the temerity to choose but not to print.

Perhaps the epitome of this wretched volume is its treatment of the DTH (which enjoyed an award-winning year despite the pack of lies and innuendos published on Yack pages for which it paid). This is not only irresponsibility, this is sheer childishness.

The Yack has been living on borrowed time for years, and has been rescued from its deserved fate only by the occasionally worthwhile issues, such as last year's. Perhaps it is time for the Publications Board and Student Legislature to throw the switch and let the Yack feel the jolt of a subscription basis.

If the Yack survived, it would be better off for the experience. If it did not, I for one would not miss it.

Rothman Incorrect

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In his Sunday DTH column about the Victory Village housing issue David Rothman said I "charged that (UNC Business Manager J. A.) Branch was 'interested in economics, not the philosophy of housing.'"

Rothman missed the point. The quote belongs to Branch.

Then Rothman committed his worst error: He said "a visit to Branch's office indicated that — Harris was wrong in his articles about student demand for low cost housing."

Is Rothman serious? If so, he picked a devil of a place to find out information about student housing demand. I suggest he check with the UNC Housing Office.

Next Rothman mentioned "suspicions" about rents collected from married student housing being used for unrelated purposes.

"Suspicions" is not the correct term. I merely stated that various University officials — including Mr. Branch — were not too free and were often contradictory with statistics. That anyone was guilty of "greed or incompetence" (Rothman's terms) is a charge I never made.

On the contrary, I found the administrators — primarily Mr. Branch, with whom I had the most contact — to be a courteous, seemingly capable group of men.

I wish that Rothman, instead of writing a superficial article, would persuade Branch to let him see all the monetary figures relating to Victory Village. Maybe Rothman, the perceptive reporter he is, can get them. I never could.

Rothman states that 'various statistics and statements (of University officials) so greatly differ." Yet he accepts them. Why? I never did.

YAF Head Attacks Rothman

By PAUL KING

David Rothman's column Tuesday was a kind of mental orgasm, manifesting itself in massive spurts of impotent and unsubstantiated accusations, followed by quivering passages of innuendo, guilt by association, and highly questionable context - dropping. It was a blatant smear, designed to prevent any serious discussion of today's issues. It was characterized by ad hominem attacks on individuals and organizations, by attempts to scare away prospective members from YAF, by associating YAF with unpopular groups such as the SDS-SPU and by dark hints of irresponsibility and even treason. As for "errors of logic, reason, and good sense that plague most conservatives," I suggest that anyone trying to engage Rothman in serious discussion will conclude that such errors are not in short supply in the "liberal" camp.

As for the implied irresponsiblity of YAF, I offer in evidence the fact that YAF has 32 Congressmen and 4 Senators on its national advisory board, plus numbers of prominent economists, professors, and journalists. I also offer our past record, which refutes Rothman's charges quite effectively.

I offer our declaration of principles as comment on the extremist charge. I do not believe these are extremist views; but if they are, then YAF shares them with a distinguished group of freedom-loving men throughout history:

THE SHARON STATEMENT

"Adopted in Conference at Sharon, Connecticut, September 9-11, 1960.

In this time of moral and political crisis, it is the responsiblity of the youth of America to affirm certain eternal truths.

We as young conservatives believe:

That foremost among the transcendent values is the individual's use of his God-given free will, whence derives his right to be free from the restrictions of arbitrary force.

That liberty is indivisible, and that political freedom cannot long exist without economic freedom.

That the purposes of government are to protect these freedoms through the preservation of internal order, the provision of national defense, and the administration of justice.

That when government ventures beyond these rightful functions, it accumulates power which tends to diminish order and liberty.

That the Constitution of the United States is the best arrangement yet devised for empowering government to fulfill its proper role, while restraining it from the concentration and abuse of power.

That the genius of the Constitution — the division of powers — is summed up in the clause which reserves primacy to the several states, or to the people, in those spheres not specifically delegated to the Federal Government.

That the market economy, allocating resources by the free play of supply and demand, is the single economic system compatible with the requirements of personal freedom and constitutional government, and that it is at the same time the most productive supplier of human needs.

That when government interferes with the work of the market economy, it tends to reduce the moral and physical strength of the nation; that when it takes from one man to bestow on another, it diminishes the incentive of the first, the integrity of the second, and the moral autonomy of both.

That we will be free only so long as the national sovereignty of the United States is secure; that history shows periods of freedom are rare and can exist only when free ctizens concertedly defend their rights against all enemies.

That the forces of international Communism are, at present, the greatest single threat to these liberties.

That the United States should stress victory over, rather than coexistence with, this menace.

That American foriegn policy must be judged by this criterion: does it serve the just interests of the United States?"

I rest my case — for the moment

New Editor Sees Great Influence In Law Review

By JUDY BOLCH

The new editor of the North Carolina Law Review sees his publication as much more than a mere exercise in legal thought.

John Troy Smith, who will assume his post next fall, believes that law reviews are "Probably the only academically - oriented periodicals which have this much influence over their field" because of their informational and advisory functions to the state's legal leaders.

The N. C. Law Review is a quarterly which features in-depth studies and shorter notes on current legal issues. The long articles are prepared by faculty members and the notes by students selected to be on the staff.

Smith, who is married to the former Sally Elmore of Charlotte, was chosen for the editorship because of his academic standing and writing and editing ability. He will be a third - year law student next year.

Deranged Pennsylvania Kidnap-Killer Shot Fatally As Girl Escapes Unharmed

SHADE GAP, Pa. (AP) - A deranged kidnap - killer who had slain an FBI agent and defied a posse 250 strong, was shot down yesterday in a running gun battle with police. He died trying to break through a police cordon using his pretty teen - age captive as a hostage.

Left dying in a farmyard by a blast from either a rifle or shotgun was William Diller Hollenbaugh, 44, who earlier in the week long hunt shot and killed an FBI agent.

Who fired the fatal bullet apparently is a matter for conjecture. Varying reports from the rural scene have credited state police or a 15-year-old farm boy with pulling the trigger on the fatal blast.

Dr. Russell C. McLucas, Fulton (Pa.) County coroner, said Hollenbaugh was hit by only one bullet and "We feel sure it was a rifle slug. There were no other wounds."

McLucas said the hole in Hollenbaugh's shoulder and neck measured about one - quarter inch, which would make it doubtful that the .16 gauge shotgun loaded with a heavy projectile ball fired at Hollenbaugh by 15 - year - old Larry Rubeck ended the mad kidnaper's week of violence.

Jack L. Conmy, press secretary for Gov. William W. Scranton, said:

"It is their (state police) belief that one of two state policemen, opening up when Hollenbaugh was in the open, shot him.

"They concede that Larry was firing too.

"All they know is that everyone fired and the guy dropped."

"I fired when he was approximately 10 feet from the house," Larry calmly told newsmen.

The boy's gun was loaded with a heavy solid projectile known to Pennsylvania mountain folk as a "pumpkin ball," used for killing deer. The slug tore through Hollenbaugh's shoulder and neck.

Larry and his brother, David, 6, had interrupted their milking in the barn, run to the house and grabbed up guns when Hollenbaugh's commandeered getaway car stopped in the yard of their home.

"We waited until we saw him approaching the window and then I fired," was Larry's matter - of - fact way of putting it.

Peggy Ann was taken to a hospital, where doctors said she was exhausted but uninjured apart from scratches and blistered feet suffered while walking for days through the wooded area with her captor.

A deputy sheriff shot in the abdomen by Hollenbaugh when he seized the getaway car was said to be in satisfactory condition after surgery.

The farmyard gun battle, involving young Rubeck, Hollenbaugh and a detail of state troopers, climaxed a week of violence by the one-time convict and former inmate of an asylum for the criminally insane.

The beginning of the end for Hollenbaugh came when he fired from ambush Tuesday at an FBI search party, killing agent Terry Ray Anderson, 42, father of four and a 10-year veteran of the federal agency. Hollenbaugh also killed two police dogs and wounded another.

This brought 250 state troopers, 80 FBI agents from as far as Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington, and other volunteers into the hunt. The area in which Hollenbaugh and the girl were believed hiding was encircled and the lawmen waited for dawn to close their trap.

Conmy said Hollenbaugh, who was charged officially yesterday with the slaying of agent Anderson, came under suspicion when FBI agents learned he had a burglary record and had served 13 - years in the Fairview state hospital for the criminally insane. He was released from the hospital in 1959.

Police long had suspected that Hollenbach was a mysterious sniper known as the mountain man who fired shots at five persons in the past two years. Two were wounded, one man so seriously that a leg had to be amputated.

Moscow Elopements Now Impossible

MOSCOW, (UPI) — Elopements and hasty marriages are virtually impossible in Moscow under a practice which provides a cooling - off period before a couple can be wedded legally.

Gone are the days when boy and girl could rush into a marriage bureau, sign their names on a register, and be pronounced man and wife.

In the early years of the Soviet regime they could get a divorce just as easily. Only one of the spouses had to show up at the bureau, sign his or her name on another page of the register and send the other spouse a notice of dissolution of marriage. Those were called "post - card" divorces.

Now it takes between six and eight weeks after application for a license for a marriage ceremony to be performed legally.

The reason for this, an official of Moscow's "wedding palace" said, was to prevent ill - considered marriages.

"And proof that a waiting period is necessary," the official added, "is provided by the fact that about 10 per cent of those who apply for marriage ceremony do not show up on the appointed day."

There are no formal engagement periods in the Soviet Union, although some newspapers have advocated the institution recently. But the waiting period consitutes a form of "forced engagement."

The law provides only for a fortnight's delay between declaration of intent and execution of the marriage. But apparently under private instructions from the authorities officials at the marriage bureaus manage to put the ceremonies off for almost two months.

Their argument is "too many applications" and "not enough wedding palaces."

Actually there are two enormous marble walled wedding palaces in Moscow and one less pretentious "Marriage bureau" in each of the city's 17 municipal districts.

But the Soviet authorities now consider marriage a serious and solemn institution and not a mass production conveyor-belt affair.

Vacation's Just Around the Corner— Need Some Books?

The rest of the world may have all kinds of delightful things to fill your vacation days, but one thing you'll miss (and we blush as we admit it) is the big friendly old Intimate.

Time's running out, and now is the time to stock up on emergency rations of brain fodder.

Might start among our used paperbacks. They're easy to pack, light to carry, and cheap enough that you can be big-hearted and trade 'em off to the natives, after you've read the juice out of them. Prices start at two for a quarter, but chum, they're real lifesavers when you get out where the corn grows tall.

There's plenty of nice light-reading in our 29c shelf. It's mostly book club selections, contributed by members who forgot to send in their "don't-want-it notice, but it's mighty pretty and goes down easy —and we heard one chap last summer who traded his copy off to a biddy in Tanganyika for something out-of-this-world nice. A mango, perhaps?

If you'd like pleasure-reading in your special field, you're likely to find it anywhere from the 68c shelf on up to the ceiling. One thing you can be sure of is that it will be off the beaten track, fun to read, and it'll be priced fairly.

Chum, we know that biddies and bears, Alps and alligators, romance and adventure, and visions of sugar-plums are dancing through your head.

Let 'em dance, but remember, bookshops are scarce out in the wild blue yonder, and now's the time to stock up that intellectual larder!

Morrison G Gains Finals

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

Morrison G, TEP, DU Blue II and Law II Blue all gained the finals of their respective divisions in intramural softball on Tuesday.

Morrison G earned the right to meet the Ehringhaus C Numbs with a 9-1 thumping of the Everett Rogah. Morrison scored four times in the first inning, with Landry's double the big hit. First baseman Bull had three hits and scored three runs and shortstop Ross had three hits and two runs.

Pitcher Joe Mull gave up only two hits until the last inning, when a double by Biddle and single by Denny drove in the only Rogah run.

TEP defeated Phi Delt Blue, 4-1, and won a spot in the fraternity finals against DU Blue II. Breslow led the TEP attack with three hits, including a triple. Jay Schwartz had a double and drew three walks. George Wainwright doubled and scored the only Phi Delt run. TEP pitcher Bill Zuckerman scattered seven Phi Delt hits to gain the win.

DU Blue II whipped Phi Kappa Sig, 8-2, DU struck for three runs in the first finning. Phi Kap Sig cut the lead to 3-2, but the DU's wrapped it up with five runs in the sxith.

Randy Myer had the big blow in the inning, a bases loaded double. Dennis singled in two more and it was all over for the Phi Kap Sigs. Burgess gave Phi Kap Sig only five hits.

Law II Blue erupted for seven runs in the fourth inning to blast the Pharmacy Peyotes, 7-1. Welling, Hulse and Ivey singled and Morgan tripled for three runs. Babb doubled, Outlaw walked and Barr doubled for three more, and Welling doubled in the final run.

It was a frustrating day for Pharmacy. They loaded the bases on three singles and also had a walk in the first inning but failed to score. They scored a run in the second. In the third they left two men on base and in the fifth had three more singles and a walk and no runs. Law II plays Gamma Nu for the graduate title.

Richard Petty Wins Pole For Grand National Race

CHARLOTTE (AP) — Big Richard Petty edged two other drivers by only seconds yesterday in winning the important pole position for Sunday's 600 mile, $112,000 Grand National stock car race.

Petty's four - lap average over the 1 1-2 mile Charlotte Motor Speedway was a sparkling 148.637 miles per hour, almost two miles an hour off his track record but considered excellent under the track conditions. A light rain fell on the track Tuesday night.

The 6-foot-3, 215-pound Plymouth ace had a fast lap of 149.377 mph, also off his one-lap standard. In 1964, he won the pole for this richest and longest of all stock car races at 150.711 mph, and had a top lap then of 151.207.

Jim Paschal, another Plymouth driver, had one bad lap in his four circuits of the track and had to settle for the outside front row spot. He qualified at 148.504. Earl Balmer, who took over an independent 1965 Dodge only 24 hours ago, qualified it third at 148.382.

Clay Says Cooper Tough, Will Provide Good Fight

LONDON (AP) — Cassius Clay wound up his main training program yesterday and said he expects Britain's Henry Cooper to give him a hard time.

Clay, who defends his heavyweight crown against Cooper at London's Arsenal Stadium Saturday night, said:

"George Chuvalo was heavier than me and I could see him and hit him when I fought him in March.

"But Cooper is light and dangerous. He can move fast and that left hook of his is a wicked blow."

Cooper's left hook put Clay down when they met in London in 1963—and the undefeated Clay has never forgotten it.

The champion finished his boxing preparations by sparring three rounds with Jimmy Ellis.

Since he defended his title against Chuvalo in Toronto March 29, Clay has boxed 73 rounds and run about 100 miles in roadwork. That's about half his normal ration before a title fight.

Clay's manager Angelo Dundee explained: "This fight will be his third title contest in six months."

Muhammed Ali — as Clay is named on the fight posters — told newsmen he expects to defend his title twice more this year. He said his next opponent could be Karl Mildenberger of West Germany.

"I think I have six years ahead of me to hold the title, and you can always find challengers," Clay said.

IM Managers Needed Badly

The intramural office is still looking for managers in the following residence halls for next year:

Carr, Connor, all of Craige, all of Ehringhaus, Morrison Houses A, B, D, E, F, H and I, Old West, Old East and Ruffin.

Intramural managers are paid the equivalent of a year's room rent. Anyone from the residence halls listed who wishes to apply for the job may come by the intramural office in 203 Woollen between 1 and 6 p.m. the rest of the week.

Carolina Frosh Take First In State Track Competition

Carolina scored 50 1-2 points to beat North Carolina College at 46 1-2 and Greensboro A & T with 44 1-2.

The Tar Babies placed one-two-three in the shotput. Jim Richey won the event with a toss of 49 feet, 2 1-2 inches. Leif Svensson was second with 47 feet 7 inches and Tom Farmer was third an inch behind.

Svensson heaved the discus 172 feet, 8 1-2 inches to capture that event by more than 25 feet.

Jim Hotelling won the two-mile run in 9:22.8, inflicting the season's first defeat for Duke's Ed Stenberg.

Stenberg took the mile run, with UNC's Truett Goodwin second. Williams of Carolina was fourth and Joe Lasich was fifth. Lasich was fourth in the two-mile and Tom Greer of Carolina finished fifth.

In the high jump Lassiter of UNC was tied for second with Wilkerson of State at 6 feet, 4 inches. Ron Lowry placed third in the 440 intermediate with a 1:56.4. Richard Ludington threw the javelin 172 feet, 10 inches to place third. Al Kornegay was fifth in the triple jump at 42 feet, 2 1-2 inches.

The meet was sponsored by Durham television station WTVD.

Carolina will have 73 new Morehead scholars next year making a total enrollment of 215 undergraduate Morehead scholars who receive $1,750 a year for their studies at Carolina.

Over $2,775,000 has been awarded to the 549 Morehead scholars that have been selected during the history of the awards.

The amount of next year's award is an increase of $300 over that of last year and is twice as large as any previous increase in the 14 years that the awards have been given to undergraduate students.

The increase in the amount of the award was decided by the Morehead Foundation trustees because of the rising costs of living.

Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson said, "The Morehead program is one of the most significant influences in the modern history of the University, because it has brought to the University outstanding graduates of North Carolina public schools and outstanding private schools both inside the state and throughout the country."

Roy Armstrong, executive secretary of the Morehead Foundation, said that 112 boys are interviewed by the 15-member central committee after being selected by their district committees. After the central committee extends the awards to most of the boys, the recommendations are sent to the Foundation Trustees for final approval.

The 112 boys are made up of 60 selected from high schools in the state and 52 selected from private schools along the East coast and the Midwest.

Since the first undergraduate awards were gvein out in 1953 to ten scholars, 73 North Carolina counties and 135 different schools have had Morehead scholars.

Sitterson said, "As a result of the Morehead program the interest in the University throughout the country has been greatly increased. Morehead scholars themselves have made important contributions to all areas of student life-activities, scholarship and athletics.

This year there are 19 Morehead scholars in Phi Beta Kappa, 21 in the Grail, 18 in the Order of the Old Well, nine in the Golden Fleece and 20 in the Monogram Club.

Next year there will also be three Morehead fellowships given in law, three in medicine and three in graduate work. The law fellowships are for three years at $2,500 a year, the medicine fellowships are for four years at the same amount and the graduate fellowships are for four years at $4,000 a year.

In addition the Foundation pays direct to the University each fellow's tuition and fees.

Old Well Taps 59

Yesterday at dusk, fifty-nine students convened at the Old Well to be inducted into the Order of the Old Well.

The new members are: Travis Abbott, Jon Anderson, Jeff Beaver, Anne Belcher, Jim Brame, David Broadhurst, Sandra Burden, George Butler, Kathy Cannon, Myles Eastwood, Judy Fletcher, and Ed Freakly.

Also Miles Foy, Susan Gretz, John Harmon, Steve Hildenbrand, Steve Hoar, Sandy Hobgood, Steve Hockfield, Bob Hunter, George Ingram, John Ingram, Mary Susan Kirk, David Knesel, Ray Linville, and Trip MacPherson.

Also Byron McCoy, Bill McFadden, Jim Medford, Leith Merrow, Eunice Milton, Dick Mitchell, John Munday, Sherry O'Donnell, Teddy O'Toole, Simmons Patterson, Bob Powell, Grey Reeves, Bill Robinson, and Nelson Schwab.

Also Bill Schmidt, Lanny Shuff, Jim Smith, Dwight Thomas, Samantha Townsend, Donald Ubell, Eric Van Loon, George Venters, Lane Verlenden, John Wall, Sylvia Wall, Camilla Walters, Bill Webb, Harry Weiler, Tom White, David Wilborn, Bob Wilson, Elder Witt, and Sam Woodard.

The Order of the Old Well was founded in 1949 to recognize students for exceptional service to the University. Membership is based on an equitable point system representing activities in all spheres of campus life.

Officers for the year have been Armistead Maupin, President; Frank Martin, Vice-President; and Ellen Allen, Secretary-Treasurer.

Brit Gordon, Neil Thomas, and Kathy Cauble have served on the Executive Committee.

Jefferson Award Goes To Wiley

William Leon Wiley, Kenan Professor of French is recipient of this year's Thomas Jefferson Award for service to the academic community. Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson will present him with a plaque and check for $400 today.

Established in 1961 by the Robert Earll McConnell Foundation, the Jefferson Award is presented annually to that member of the "academic community" who most closely approximates in his teaching and personal life the philosophy and conduct of Jefferson.

The Jefferson Award cites Prof. Wiley as a "scholar whose commitment identifies him, not exclusively with any 'division' or 'school,' but with the University as an academic community concerned in the broadest and most inclusive ways with the pursuit of human happiness, both intellectual and practical."

Budget Passed By Legislature With Suplus

By LYTT STAMPS
DTH Staff Writer

A budget with a $2,000 unappropriated balance was approved by Student Legislature in a special Wednesday night session.

The surplus came after $6,000 was cut from the GM budget requests and $1,000 from the Yackety Yack.

The Yack survived without additional cuts only because the printing contract for next year's edition has already been approved by the Publications Board.

Unsuccessful attempts were made to cut the salary of the Yack editor, managing editor and layout editor.

Steve Salmony (UP) said he was "disgusted by the present Yack, but cutting the personnels' salaries would not improve the Yack."

Eric Van Loon answered, "We don't owe anyone a salary."

SP floor leader Steve Hockfield spoke out against the practice of the Pub Board in approving the printing contract before getting appropriations from Student Legislature.

"The Legislature has been delegated the power to set the approrpriations for the Yack," he said, "but in actuality, it has no such power to adjust appropriations since it must accept the 'contracted' prices as set by the Pub Board."

He suggested the Legislature consider putting the Yack on a subscription basis. He said definite changes must be made so that the Legislature "will no longer find itself subservient to and coerced by a body which it has established."

A number of resignations were announced, all members of the SP caucus. They were Haywood Smith (MDI), Ben White (MDX) and Eric Van Loon (MDXII). Hockfield resigned his seat in MDII to fill the seat vacated by Van Loon.

Student Body President Bob Powell presented the Jim Tatum Memorial Award to Danny Talbott. The award was established to honor annually an athlete who exhibits leadership, character and athletic ability.

Four Seniors, Five Faculty Men Cited For Outstanding Work Here

By STEVE BENNETT
DTH Staff Writer

Four seniors received awards yesterday from Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson for their outstanding contributions to the University.

Myrtle Kathleen (Kathy) Cauble and William Neil Thomas were given the A. S. Sullivan Award, which is given annually to the man and woman of the graduating class "who have best demonstrated an attitude of unselfish interest in the welfare of their fellow man.

John C. Ingram received the John J. Parker Jr. Award, which is given annually to "the member of the graduating class who has demonstrated most clearly the highest qualities of leadership in perpetuating the spirit of honor and the process of student self - government."

Ernest S. MCrary was presented the Ernest H. Abernathy Award, which is presented annually to the "student who is adjudged by a committee to have done the most distinctive work during the current year in the field of publications.

Miss Cauble is a Valkyrie, from Hickory, a member of the Order of the Old Well and was recepient of the Jane C. Gray Award last year for the most outstanding junior woman. She has also served as co - ordinator of Women's Orientation, as a member of the Symposium Committee and on the UNC Blood Drive.

Thomas, a Morehead scholar from Lookout Mtn., Tenn., has been Press Secretary of the Student Government, Chairman of the University Party and has served on the Pub Board. He also is a member of the Grail and the Order of the Old Well.

Ingram served this year as attorney general of the student body and also on the president's executive council. He is a member of the Society of Janus and the Order of the Old Well.

McCrary has been editor of The Daily Tar Heel this year and has served on the Consolidated University Student Council. He is also a member the UNC Press Club.

Four faculty members were named yesterday to receive the annual Tanner Award for "Excellence in teaching" while a fifth was tapped for the Nicolas Salgo Distinguished Teacher Award, given this year for the first time.

Presentation of the awards was by Chancellor J. Carlyle Sitterson at a meeting of the UNC faculty.

Winners of the coveted Tanner Award were Albrecht Benno Strauss, English; John Martin Schnorrenberg, art; Kenneth Joseph Reckford, clascis; and Donald Charles Jicha, chemistry.

Each of the four was presented with a check for $1,000.

The Tanner Awards for "excellent and inspirational teaching" especially of freshmen and sophomores were established in 1955 by an endowment of the Tanner family of Rutherfordton. The awards are in memory of Lola Spencer and Simpson Bobo Tanner, both UNC alumni.

CHANCELLOR SITTERSON presents outstanding student awards to John Ingram and Neil Thomas (first row) and Kathy Cauble and Ernie McCrary.

O. B. Hardison Jr., English, received the Nicolas Salgo Distinguished Teacher Award. Established earlier this year, the $1,500 award is made "in recognition of the recipient's teaching excellence as evidenced by his classroom effectiveness and ability to motivate and inspire students, and for his contribution to their intellectual development."

Established by the Salgo - Noren Foundation, the award is being given at six institutions this year to outstanding teachers of juniors and seniors. Slago is a naturalized citizen who came to this country in 1948 from Hungary and since then has been a successful businessman in New York.

Balloting was completed for the first Nicolas Salgo Distinguished Teacher Award before "Time magazine selected Professor Hardison as "one of the nation's 10 great teachers." With his picture on the May 6 issue of "Time," Hardison was featured along with nine other "great teachers" in the United States.

Hardison joined the UNC faculty in 1957 as an assistant professor of English. In addition to articles, reviews and poems, Hardison is author of seven books in the fields of drama, poetry, rhetoric and literary criticism. He received both the A. B. and M. A. degrees from UNC and the Ph.D. from the University of Wisonsin. Before he joined the faculty here he was an instructor at the University of Tennessee and Princeton University.

Tanner Award winner Prof. Strauss is a native of Berlin, Germany. He joined the UNC faculty in 1960 and is a graduate of Oberlin College, Tulane University and Harvard University. He received the Ph.D. degree from Harvard in 1956. Strauss is a specialist in English literature of the 18th century, particularly the 18th century novel. Before he came to UNC he taught at Tulane University, Brandeis University, Harvard University and Yale University.

Prof. Schnorrenberg came to UNC in 1959 from Columbia University. A native of New York City, he received the Ph.D. degree in 1964 from Princeton University where he had earlier received the M.F.A. degree in 1957. UNC awarded him the A.B. and M.A. degrees. His teaching specialties are in the fields of medieval art and architecture, Renaissance sculpture and art of the northern Renaissance.

Prof. Reckford, a native New Yorker, is a graduate of Harvard University where he taught before he came to UNC in 1960. He was graduated from Harvard, summa cum

Grand Prize For Bizzare Murder Given To Coed For Death Letter

By ANDY MYERS
DTH Staff Writer

The grand prize for the most bizzare killing in The Daily Tar Heel U.N.C.L.E. game was awarded yesterday to Jo Ann Lentz for killing Freeman Murray Phillips by mail.

Miss Lentz finished her victim off at midnight Wednesday in the following manner:

A death letter was written to Phillips by Miss Lentz. When she came to his room to deliver the letter she gave it to a boy who turned out to be Phillips' roommates' murderer.

This go - between then elected to use Miss Lentz's letter in his plot to kill Phillips' roommate. Since the roommate was expecting to meet Miss Lentz to deliver the letter to Phillips, the roommate walked out and was shot by his murderer point - blank.

Phillips followed his roommate out, so Miss Lentz told Phillips that it was really his roommate they were after. Foiled in a second attempt to kill Phillips later that night Miss Lentz made sure the letter was delivered by Phillips' dead roommate.

Unsuspecting what was in the letter, Phillips' "curiosity got the best of me," he said. and he opened the letter, which was actually meant for him in the first place.

When he broke the seal at midnight he learned that Miss Lentz was his killer. The letter, written as if it were from a girl he used to date said the girl was pregnant and they must get married as soon as possible.

Phillips immediately died of a heart attack.

Second place in the "Bizzare" category went to Angie Foss for killing Larry Roadman. "I was hypnotized into a relaxed state by my huntress," Roadman said. "At 10:03 I left my dorm to get some food. I was met at the door by my huntress who handed me a flower and a piece of paper wrapped around it . . . she fled. . . I died of cyanide poisoning released from the petals and KLN on the thorns."

Third place went to Edward Hunt, who killed Ken Murphy like this: "While sleeping, my hunter entered and with an air injection syringe gun injected concentrated sulfuric acid into my brain," Murphy wrote.

The first killing took place at 12:20 a.m. Wednesday morning when James Dale lured Roger Lewis from his room with a phone call ruse. Lewis was shot in the head with a pistol.

Winner for the Most Professional Kill was Charles Taylor. This award took into account Taylor's cold - hearted liquidation of Myles Ludwig in the presence of his wife and child.

The weapon was a 175 grain 7 mm Remington Magnum. "This was a clean kill at approximately 50 yards," Taylor said. "Having cased his abode early this a.m. I rode into Chapel Hill to find Mr. Ludwig. I met him, made 'Bat Turn' in my 4-door sports model Plymouth Batmobile and assassinated him as he approached his home with wife and daughter.

"It grieves the hunter to take his victim with child in hand but then too the proverbial 'jungle laws' prevail. P.S. The weapon is effective on practically all North American 'big game.'"

The Neatest Kill went to David Miller for shooting Ed McCrimmon in the heart with an ice dart containing an overdose of digitalis. The heart became over activated and McCrimmon died of a heart attack. "The ice dart melted, leaving no trace of the instrument of murder," McCrimmon said.

Finally, for the most elusive victim, the DTH awarded the prize to Miss Carol Blayney, who outwitted Charles Taylor.

"Taylor had assumed his disguise — cape — top hat — wig — and fangs," Taylor writes. "Fangs were dipped in deadly coral snake venom (naturally an anti - venom serum was used by the hunter). His assistant, one Clarence Clark was to deliver a booby

Until Next Year

Today ends the publication year for The Daily Tar Heel. With the day of final examinations moving ever closer, DTH staffers, instead of slaving away on second floor GM, will be spending the next few afternoons at the Grill, Harry's, the Tempo, the Shack and other centers of intellectual interest.

It's been an eventful year at UNC, and thus an eventful year for the DTH. But most of the events were recorded by the former editor and his staff. Our stand this spring has been a short one — slightly more than one month.

Our real work will be waiting for us next September. We're excited about what we think the DTH can be next year. We hope our readers are too. The rebuilding of a staff since we came in this spring has been a continuous process of shifting pegs from slot to slot.

Of course, the greatest problem has been in replacing graduating staff members. We hate to see them go, but we think we have some equally qualified replacements. But we will need more help. We hope we'll have enough anxious laborers next year to increase our depth in news writing, proof reading, copy editing, proof reading, feature writing and proof reading.

We'd like to give you a capsule idea of how the six pages will be used next year:

Pages one and six will continue to be devoted to major campus news items. Page two will be for editorial opinion. Page five, sports. Pages three and four will have a varied scope to fill the need for TV schedule; state, national and inter-national roundup; fraternity, sorority and residence college news; increased sports coverage; women's news; departmental news briefs; and general features.

Also, we're looking forward to sponsoring several contests which we think will be a lot of fun for every one. We'll start with a "Pick the Winner" contest weekly during football season. Later in the year we want to stage another "Spot the Spot" contest, a "Miss Daily Tar Heel" contest, a "Kite Flying" contest and possibly a "Beard Growing" contest.

We're going to do our best to stay on top of all the issues, and we hope we'll hear from our readers often.

In parting we want to extend a hearty note of gratitude to those in Student Government, the administration, faculty and student body who have helped us and taken our jabs this year. And a special thanks goes to our Chapel Hill merchants who made this year's DTH a financial possibility by supplying a record $30,000 worth of local advertising.

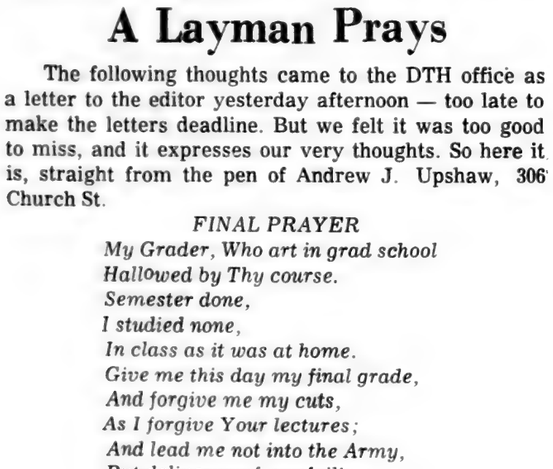
Best of luck on exams for everyone. Have a good summer. See you next fall.

A Layman Prays

The following thoughts came to the DTH office as a letter to the editor yesterday afternoon — too late to make the letters deadline. But we felt it was too good to miss, and it expresses our very thoughts. So here it is, straight from the pen of Andrew J. Upshaw, 306 Church St.

FINAL PRAYER

My Grader, Who art in grad school
Hallowed by Thy course.
Semester done,
I studied none,
In class as it was at home.
Give me this day my final grade,
And forgive me my cuts,
As I forgive Your lectures;
And lead me not into the Army,
But deliver me from failing.
For Thine are the quizzes,
And the final,
And the QP's;
For Hanes Hall, to record.



"Yeah, somethin's burnin' my eyes too."

Quick Solution Needed For Viet Nam

The panel discussion on Viet Nam held Tuesday night in Memorial Hall was possibly the most significant program the Carolina Forum has presented this year. What actually made the discussion so informative was not the endless argumentation over the 1954 Geneva Conference or the feasibility of the 1956 elections, but the comments made near the program's end about America's future in Viet Nam.

Allard Lowenstein pointed out an interesting truth about this involvement which many persons have a tendency to forget: There is no such thing as a complete military victory in Viet Nam.

No matter if the United States were to saturate the country between Peping and Moscow in favor of the former.

In the final showing of near-unanimity, Tuesday's panel cast light on the essential difference between the government's advisors and the government's critics. As Henry Kissinger put it, the government is currently groping for a change in its foreign policy and this change will take time. He pleaded for understanding in this matter, but it is doubtful that he will find too much of it. Clearly, if we do not act quickly, the consequences of the unfortunate Viet Nam involvement will multiply at lightning speed.

A de-escalation is the first step towards easing the situation and buying time to bargain. If bargaining produces a government that is not extremely favorable towards the United States or even the rights of its own people, we still would have avoided a conflict that could only destroy Viet Nam and with troops, communism would live on in one form or another and its internal power would still be felt. Our government must fully realize that a political solution, even one unfavorable to the United States, can offer the best solution for the Viet Nam difficulties.

This conclusion is based on several ineluctable facts.

Demonstrations against Marshall Ky's government are mounting to the point that he may be toppled in the near future. In the course of these events, the United States and her forces have played the role as a major factor in this internal situation. Justly or not, we have been portrayed by some Buddhist leaders as a force of reaction protecting the government from the demands of the people.

Witness how this situation is exacerbated by such incidents as the recent attack on a US helicopter carrying a Vietnamese general who supports the Ky government. A group of soldiers, who were Buddhist loyalists, fired several pistol shots at the helicopter, and they were immediately cut down by an American-manned machine gun mounted inside the craft.

During the last confrontation between the Buddhists and the Ky government, the American marine command at Da Nang was placed in the dubious position of having to order a Vietnamese general loyal to the Buddhists to remove mortar emplacements he had ordered set up surrounding the Da Nang air base. In the course of negotiation, a marine colonel had to tell the general that if the threatening emplacements were not removed, the marines would be forced to "destroy" the South Vietnamese troops. The mortars were removed.

Such incidents as this clearly illustrate that the US has become a principal faction in the fractionalized and irreconcilable political scene of South Viet Nam. It is ironic that we should in the course of these actions threaten to kill and actually kill the very people who are supposed to be our allies.

As American presence in this land continues, we may expect to see more and more signs of anti-Americanism and anti-Westernism in general. We are, after all, a foreign power that has taken over the soil of an alien people. Their resentment is bound to grow larger with time.

Another thing we must realize is that the establishment of a stable democracy in South Viet Nam is a nearly impossible in this decade. Viet Nam and Southeast Asia in general are traditionally used to authoritarian rule, and it would require a large intensified effort at the grass-roots level before the minimal degree of political sophistication necessary to support a democracy could be attained.

When the weight of these factors are put together, it is easy to see that the US must exercise its full power diplomatically to seek a negotiated settlement, and this is something we really haven't been doing. Concessions to the National Liberation Front and the North Vietnamese will have to be made before any kind of a coalition government can be set up. the United States must be regard this as some sort of a defeat. It is merely the best solution and the quickest means of extricating ourselves from these internal political difficulties of a distant nation.

Arthur Larson warned his audience Tuesday night that time is running out for the United States in Viet Nam. Faced with internal hostilities and disorders in the South, we have reacted by escalading the war and increasing our frequently ineffectual bombings in the North. There are increasing indications that the Red Chinese leadership is preparing its people and the world for direct Chinese involvement in the war. US air action in North Viet Nam is providing the grist for the Chinese mill. If this Chinese involvement becomes a reality, the results would be unfortunate for the United States and for both Viet Nams. Under such a situation Ho Chi Minh would be compelled to drop his non-alaignment boil over into the rest of Southeast Asia. Stablization even at the risk of losing some of the people's rights in Veit Nam, would be preferable in this situation. Larson expressed this opinion quite openly at the reception after the discussion.

It would be well for our government to take his views under advisement.

Above and beyond this situation, however, is the question of the entire US concept of involvement in general. Larson has pointed out that we can no longer involve ourselves in these ugly little holy wars for the cause of democracy, particularly if they are waged in areas not strategically important to US security and if they require US involvement in a nation's internal affairs.

Implicit in this is the realization that communism ranges from the black to the grey, that it often offers no real threat to American security and that totalitarianism of varying degrees can provide the only stable form of government for some nations of the world.

"Greetings!"

Parting Shots Leveled For DTH, Yack

Rothman Smeared YAF

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

How does one answer a column like David Rothman's attack on YAF? Young Americans for Freedom, Inc., welcomes intelligent discussion and in the past has invited SDS members to public debate. But no one can effectively answer a smear.

David Rothman was developed a new type of smear which I shall term 'Rothmanism.' All one does to make a Rothmanism is try to link some person or organization with the SPU, already an object of scorn by most Carolina students. And to add to this he can smear the Carolina Conservative Club, and then try to spread this smear over on YAF.

Rothman's attack is also an insult to the vast majority of the professors of this University. Anyone who has denounced the scare and smear tactics of 'McCarthyism' must also denounce Rothmanism, for they are the same thing. Rothman's article was an attack on everyone's intelligence and sense of fair play.

To make the record straight, no member of YAF can advocate the violent overthrow of the government, as Rothman implied they do. Any person who advocates this position is barred from membership in YAF by its by-laws. If Rothman were pressed on this point, he would probably claim that he meant a peaceful overthrow of the government. Of course, this is what the Republican and Democratic Parties attempt at every election.

Rothman states also that YAF "should not be permitted to obtain national power." Does he propose a power-ban law? Will he let us speak but prohibit us from any position of power? This undemocratic thought is repugnant to everyone.

Any time that David Rothman or anyone else wishes to engage himself in a scholarly debate over YAF's principles, I or any member of YAF will be glad to respond. But YAF will never engage in smears or scares or hatred or lies like Rothman has done.

Spearman's Views Good

Editor, Daily Tar Heel:

As printed, Robert Spearman's article on Oxford gave a good, if brief, picture of that complex institution and its conservative ways. However, I should like to redress one impression, the implication that the social sciences degree course, politics, philosophy and economics, is not considered respectable at Oxford, and that the level of economic study is shallow.

While perhaps being less comprehensive in his course work than he might be at U.N.C., the student 'majoring' in economics might typically meet his tutor 40 times over three years to read and discuss set essay topics in formal one-hour tutorials. (In addition he would have around 30 essays and tutorials each in politics and philosophy.) He would rarely have more than two topics per week (say, one economics, one politics) and he would be unlikely to have more than five hours of lectures per week for the 21 weeks of active academic year, so that he could devote time to reading deeply on each topic. The Oxford course is no soft option.

Naturally, it is gratifying to read more praise for the classics degree. But Spearman might raise a cheer also for the Chemistry School, probably the best in the country, and one to which Merton College has contributed much.

Stith Irresponsible

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

In response to Pat Stith's letter of April 18 condemning those who, in this words, have "claimed they graced the Tar Heel's pages at one time or another," I should like to comment on this obviously-irresponsible charge.

I should like to call to Stith's attention the fact that there are more departments in a newspaper operation than the news and editorial staff. Furthermore, there are those who, even though Stith doesn't "remember" them, who have served the Daily Tar Heel in other capacities during their four year stay at this institution.

Just to set the record straight, then, let me assure Stith that I did, as a sophomore, work in the circulation department of this paper. It takes a lot of people you "just don't remember," people who have worked long, hard hours to get the Tar Heel to the people of this state.

There are the "pretenders" who claimed to have worked for the Tar Heel. Mr Stith, the ones you don't seem to remember.

I doubt very much if we'll remember you, either.

(Editor's note—Stith, if you read his letter closely, referred only to those persons who claimed they worked on the DTH their senior year.)

Computers Should Be Used In Selection Of Roommate

By DAVID ROTHMAN

Computer dates via Operation Match are fine, but what happens after the evening's over?

If you're like many UNC students, you return to your dorm to find a roommate with whom you're totally incompatible.

And, though you may eventually marry your date, you are at least for the moment spending a lot more time with the roommie.

He likes rock 'n' roll, you say; you like Broadway.

He's a hell-raiser; you're not.

Etc.

The answer to your problems, then might be a computerized roommate selection process like the one that may soon be started at the University of Mississippi.

There, the Men's Housing Office hopes to devise a compatibility test that could enable future freshmen to select roommates by computer

If the Mississippi experiment is successful, UNC should give a great deal of thought to beginning a similar system.

According to scientific studies, personal adjustment problems rival, if they don't surpass, academic troubles as a reason behind college dropouts

And, even should conflicts between roommates not be bad enough to cause one leave school, they undoubtedly pull down grades.

All too often, one roommate has to flee to the library because the other insists on throwing a party or getting drunk (seems that people get drunk around here a lot more than you'd think if you just looked at the student judiciary records).

Computers quite likely are the answer to these and other problems, for as an originator of the Mississippi project says:

"We do not claim that the computer can match every one with a perfect roommate but it can select people who are mutually bearable, and eliminate situations where greatly incompatable personalities are thrown together."

That statement makes sense; a computerized roommate selection service wouldn't be infallible (and people should be allowed to select roommates on their own if they prefer), but it's certainly seems better than the present random matching

Lauterer Exhibit Praised As 'Photographic Song'

By JOE DEPRIEST

Sunsets and basset hounds; old houses and pretty girls; football players and tree limbs: these are some of the subjects that make up an exhibit of photographs by Jock Lauterer now on display in Howell Hall.

Lauterer has chosen what he considers his best work: ranging from photographs of Chapel Hill's 1964 Civil Rights marches to shots he made during a recent trip to the Shenandoah Valley.

The exhibit is a photographic song to everyday life. Lauterer's work is straightforward and unpretentious. Whether he takes an action shot at a soccer game or a shot of land meeting sky the photograph bears an unmistakable touch of love.

"A photograph is a thought . . . . it must communicate," Lauterer says. What one of his photographs communicates to one person may say something entirely opposite to another and it may even say nothing.

"I anybody looks at one of my photographs and likes it . . . OK. But they are for me. You've got to be very selfish about it when you shoot for yourself," Lauterer says. "You must work for yourself before you work for other people."

The majority of Lauterer's photographs are of "things": sky, trees, buildings, dogs and cats. Lauterer says that he is working "more and more now with people" but that having to pose shots frustrates him. Photographing people is fine with him so long as the shots are candid. Included in this exhibition is one of Lauterer's first candid shots—made in Greenwich Village in 1963: a woman holding a sad-faced basset hound. Basset hounds seem to appeal to Lauterer. "They're more expressive," he says.

"The greatest thing a human soul ever does in this world is to see something, and tell what it saw in a plain way. . . to see clearly is poetry, prophecy and religion all in one." John Ruskin's comment on painters, written in 1856, could just as well apply here to Lauterer's photography.

Photography, Lauterer feels, is not a matter of being in the right place at the right time but seeing clearly what is always around you.

Occasionally Lauterer feels the urge to get out and see new things. This urge usually hits him in the spring and when it does he is bound for the mountains. This year he spent his Easter vacation bumming around the Shenandoah Valley on his bike. "All of a sudden I began seeing," he says. This summer Lauterer will have the opportunity to see new things with his camera when he accompanies the UNC Glee club on its European tour.

The late American novelist James Agee had some comments on the Art of Seeing in an introduction to a collection of Helen Leavitt's photographs. Agee wrote: "The camera is just a machine, which recrods with impressive and as a rule cruel faithfulness what is in the eye, mind, spirit and skill of its operator to make it record . . . by the artist's crative intelligence a new kind of reality is created: aesthetic reality".

There are wonderful things in the eye, mind, spirit and skill of ock Lauterer.

One doesn't consider theories of aesthetics while examining Lauterer's photographs. Beauty speaks for itself. Words are impotent to convey the evocative power of a photograph of raindrops on a lake or a little tree silhouetted against a white sky.

The photographs in Howell Hall are "poetry, prophecy and religion all in one" — the work of an original and imaginative mind.

Postmasters Aid In Quake Study

By WILL BERNARDIN

One thing handy about a postmaster — you can always reach him by mail.

And this 'reachability' makes the North Carolina postmaster one of the biggest assets to earthquake study in the state.

Although North Carolina is not exactly an earthquake state, like California or Alaska, it does have the second largest fault zone in the country, the Brevard fault; and roughly speaking, fault zones equal earthquakes.

This fault zone runs from Alabama to Virginia and once in a while still pipes up and grumbles out a song, scaring cows, breaking windows and making a larger than normal squiggle on the University's

But the jiggly line doesn't tell the UNC geologists where the quake was, merely that it was. Reports do come in from other seismograp stations telling approximately where it shook, but they don't really pinpoint the place. Geologists need to know within about 10 miles.

And this is where the postmaster comes in.

Phil Justus, assistant to the director of the seismograph station at UNC (an interesting position since there is no director at present) says of the program to locate quake centers, "Postmasters of small towns get most of the local dope. So when we don't know where the center is, we just contact them and usually they can give us the information we need.

"If he himself hasn't felt any quake - like movement, he sees plenty of people each day and can ask them what they felt."

Policemen, firemen, gas station operators and others may receive these letters or cars too, but the local postmaster is ually easier to reach—his address doesn't change. If a letter is addressed to "Postmaster" in any city, it will get to him—even if he changed addresses.

These rural geological spokesmen reply in various and strange ways—some of them never felt a thing; some thought the atomic war had started.

But it's interesting how accurately the strength of an earthquake can be gauged by the sometimes unusual, but always sincere, answers.

One comment was, 'I thought at first a small animal was running across the attic.'

Another, "It sounded as if there had been a terrific explosion. I was positive one or two large trailer trucks had wrecked in our driveway."

No doubt about which person was closest to the heart of the shake from those coments.

The field research on North Carolina's earthquakes is now being conducted by Dr. J. Robert Butler and Dr. David E. Dunn.

A Matter Of Opinion

Bill Geer gave his Last Lecture Wednesday night.

He filled Morrison lounge to capacity, which means there were about 40 people who heard him. Because the professor who claimed he had nothing profound to say, who was just "sharing some thoughts with some friends," had in reality a great deal to say to his audience.

He spoke about individualism, education and the state and the nation. His overriding theme and his advice to everyone is "Don't Be Afraid of Change." He said he was constantly appalled "that some people fear change more than anything in the world. Only those individuals in society who can adapt to the changing scene can lead useful lives, for themselves and for society."

Geer, who teaches modern civilization, spoke with genuine emotion when he said, "We have today the capaxity to obliterate humanity, and we may very well do it.

Geer questioned the South's maintenance of a rural attitude, an attitude of vigorous individualism stemming from the old frontier days.

"I am a firm believer in individualism," Geer said. "Nevertheless, individualism in a twentieth century industrial society of large population has to adapt itself to the conditions of today." He specifically opposed the South's attitude against organized labor as a part of its modern industrial life.

Geer said that a good university must have many minds to provide a variety of ideas. "We should not shut off the world," he said. "How can we possibly justify being provincial and local in our outlook?"

Geer said there are many outworn cliches of education, one of them being the sacredness of a classical, literary education. You should "educate yourselves for the future, not for the present or the past," he said.

"The world moves very fast," Geer said, "and if I were you, in my education I'd move with it."

Turning to the concept of the state and nation, Geer said the idea of states rights is not valid. "The federal government has generally been reluctant to take powers and responsibilities from the states," he said. "But generally speaking, when it does, the national government has been more efficient than the state units. Therefore, Americans, being practical people, have turned more and more to the central government for aid."

Geer said, "The federal government of the United States is what Abraham Lincoln called it—(the last, best hope of man.'"

On the international scene, Geer said the idea of going to war is outmoded. "It's unthinkable that we have a major war," he said, "and it's dangerous to play with so-called minor wars. It's a horrible thing to confront an automobile wreck. How lightly do you deal with the thought of war in a nuclear age?" he asked. "Isn't it as outmoded as the Greek gods or the idea that the world is flat?"

Geer concluded that he is convinced that "man is good at heart and wishes for himself and others in the world only the greatest good and a better life."

THE GIFT OF THE CLASS OF 1966 to the University is this memorial to Thomas Wolfe, UNC '20. The memorial depicts a sculptured angel and will be placed in front of the library.

Senior Gift Wins Accepted Design

The Buildings and Grounds Committee of the University approved Tuesday the plans for the gift of the Class of 1966. The gift is a memorial to Thomas Wolfe, 1920 graduate of the University and author of "Look Homeward Angel."

The memorial is a sculptured angel, about five feet long, set in bronze. It will be set in the grass area directly in front of the library, tilted slightly upward. People leaving the library will be able to catch sight of the angel as they descend the steps. There will be some shurbbery added to provide a sort of niche for the angel.

The sculptor who submitted the accepted model is R. W. Kinaird of the U.N.C. Art Department.

John Harmon, senior class president, said that the full cost of the project will be approximately $1700 (seventeen hundred dollars). About $1500 of this will come from the class funds — money raised from the sale of Homecoming Mums and Cokes at Jubilee. Harmon hopes that the rest can be obtained through private donations.

The lettering on the model is not complete. The full inscription on the final angel will read "0 lost, and by the wind grieved, ghost come back again Thomas Wolfe - Class of 1920 — Presented by the Class of 1966."

The class officers commented that they did not wish to give the conventional class gift, such as bench or an air conditioner in an office. They hope to have a presentation ceremony next fall on University Day after the installation of the anael this summer.

Vice - president of the Class of 1966, Armistead Maupin, feels that the angel "captures the spirit of nostalgic grandeur that characterizes Wolfe's work.

The bronze angel is the only memorial ever erected to Wolfe at his Alma Mater and we felt it was time to tell him he could come home again."

While at the University Wolfe served as editor of The Daily Tar Heel and was an outstanding Playmaker. His home was in Asheville, N. C., and the sculptured angel will be facing west towards that city.

Volcanoes In Local Area's Distant Past

HILLSBOROUGH — E. P. Allen and W. F. Wilson, members of the geologic staff of the N. C. Department of Conservation and Development's division of mineral resources, think they have found proof that a volcano or volcanoes erupted and deposited molten lava over a wide area in central Orange County and are responsible for a famed mineral spring.

That lava, which they say flowed during the Paleozoic ear, about 400 million years ago (as geologists reckon time is now being classified as amygdaloidal basalt and Allen and Wilson believe it might be of economic value if used for roofing and roadbuilding.

This discovery of lava - type rock was made by the geologists while engaged in a geologic - mapping and mineral-resources study of Orange County.

Altered amygdaloidal basalt flows have been located in at least seven bodies in the central section of the county. Three flows are located just east and south of Efland. Three bodies crop out on the east and south sides of Hillsborough and a seventh body occurs just west of New Hope Church.

Their mapping operations resulted in the discovery that on hillsides, springs are rather common just above outcrops of the massive basalt.

The best known of these springs is the old Occoneechee mineral spring.

Glee Club Names Officers

The UNC Men's Glee Club, which leaves for Europe on June 15, has announced new officers for the coming year.

Paul Wyche, a rising senior from Hallsboro, was elected president.

Vice president is Bob Dilks, a rising senior. He will serve as chairman of the music and ic committee selects the music which the club sings.

Ted Hayes was elected secretary, and Dick McPhatter was elected treasurer.

Bill Reel and Gary Scott will be librarians.

Public relations director will be Lee Faulker. Earl Hadden will be concert tour manager.

Alvin Tyndall will remain as tour director until the European tour is finished on July 18.

The club is still $3,000 short of the necessary funds for the European tour. Hadden said contributions may be sent to Hill Hall.

Checks should be made payable to the University of North Carolina for the Men's Glee Club.

UNC Professor Kenan To Review Grad Exams

C. Hugh Holman, Kenan Professor of English at the UNC has been elected to the newly created Graduate Record Examination Board, which is charged with the responsibility for reviewing the GRE program, planning research studies for its improvement and development, and advising the Educational Testing Service on the operation of the program.

The Graduate Record Examination is the most widely used and most important single test for admission to graduate study in the United States. The new Board of sixteen members has control of the program.

The newly created board is sponsored by the Association of Graduate Schools and by Schools, each of which appointed four members to the board. These appointed members in turn elected an additional eight members. It is as such an elected member that Professor Holman takes his place on the Board.

While he was dean of the Graduate School at Chapel Hill, Professor Holman participated in some studies of the effectiveness of the Graduate Record Examination and served on a committee of the Council of Graduate School to study admissions. Presumably it is this experience and his earlier experience as a chairman of a large graduate department in the University which led to his election by a group of his former graduate deanship colleagues.

Umbrellas?

At 3 p.m. yesterday a curious group of enthusiastic students gathered in front of Battle - Vance - Pettigrew dorm to take part in the filming of "The Invasion of the Umbrella Man."

Producer, director and cameraman, David C. Knesel was the man in charge. He was filming a short movie to complete the requirements for his RTVMP major.

Bystanders looked on in disbelief as half a dozen men wearing heavy overcoats and waving umbreallas wildly in the air chased another "normal" man around McCorkle Place. Only when they saw that the little man waving his arms had a movie camera in one hand were they able to figure out what was going on.

Knesel said afterwards that the movie had conformity as its theme. "All these men with umbreallas and overcoats chase him around on a nice sunny day until he finally gets his umbrella and overcoat and joins them."

"The filming was just great," Knesel said, "I only hope the film comes out O.K."

Scott College Aids Drive For Rheumatic Diseases

Over 100 students from Scott Residence College, (Parker, Teague and Avery) and its sister residence halls, Alderman and McIver, are participating this week in the May fund-raising drive for The N. C. Arthritis Foundation.

The students mailed letters yesterday to the faculty asking for contributions of $1 each.

Saturday has been designated as "tag day" and the students will be in Y Court and up town all day giving out the tags for contributions.

Mrs. Kerr Scott, wife of the man for whom the residence college was named, is the honorary chairman of the N. C. Arthritis Foundation.

The students hope to raise $500 this week.

Bob Farris, Governor of Scott Residence College, said that he is hoping for a good response from the campus to fight arthritis, the nation's number one crippler

Over Half Americans Have Nasty Insomniac Tendencies

Do you have trouble sleeping?

If so, you are among the 52 per cent of Americans who, according to a survey, have occasional or frequent difficulty achieving the bliss of slumber through the night.

The true chronic insomniac is irritable and restless, tense throughout the day. He uses up more energy than he should when he sits, stands, eats and talks. Fretting too much, his emotions on edge, by the day's end he's exhausted but his mind will not let him fall asleep or pass a restful night.

Dr. Francis C. Wood, Chief of the Department of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, observes that many people have trouble falling asleep at night. His solution: an aspirin tablet.

Please don't zlupf Sprite. It makes plenty of noise all by itself.

Sprite, you recall, is the soft drink that's so tart and tingling, we just couldn't keep it quiet.

Flip its lid and it really flips. Bubbling, fizzing, gurgling, hissing and carrying on all over the place.

An almost excessively lively drink.

Hence, to zlupf is to err.

What is zlupfing?

Zlupfing is to drinking what smacking one's lips is to eating.

It's the staccato buzz you make when draining the last few deliciously tangy drops of Sprite from the bottle with a straw.

Zzzzzlllupf!

It's completely uncalled for. Frowned upon in polite society. And not appreciated on campus either.

But. If zlupfing Sprite is absolutely essential to your enjoyment; if a good healthy zlupf is your idea of heaven, well...all right.

But have a heart. With a drink as noisy as Sprite, a little zlupf goes a long, long way.

SPRITE. SO TART AND TINGLING, WE JUST COULDN'T KEEP IT QUIET.

Motion Picture Musical Takes Praise Locally

Acclaimed as a major breakthrough in musical theater, Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," has been translated to the motion picture medium. The film starts Wednesday at the Rialto in Durham.

Directed by Philip Savine, Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" was made for the screen at Pinewood Studios, London, with Tony Tanner and Millicent Martin starred and the Croft Twins, Leila and Valerie, and small - boy Neil Hawley featured.

Anthony Newley and Leslie Bricusse created "Stop the World — I Want to Get Off," writing the original book, music and lyrics. Almost 90 per cent of the show was prepared, over a six - week period.

Universal in theme, "Stop the World" depicts the triumphs and tribulations of an amoral, though endearing, opportunist called Littlechap. The fantasy character is evoked by a miming clown in a deserted arena. Gradually, the rest of the troupe join in bringing Littlechap's world to life.

Tanner For Newley

Newley both directed the show and starred as Littlechap on the stage. Midway through the London run, a young performer — Tony Tanner — stepped into Newley's role, when the latter left to open the show on Broadway. Tanner challenged even Newley's supremacy in the part. In the motion picture production, Tanner again plays Littlechap, while Miss Martin takes the multiple parts of his long-suffering wife Evie, and his international girl - friends. Tanner is a seasonsed musical revue artist. Two of his prior London hits were "One to Another", and "Look Who's Here."

Miss Martin made her first great impace in England on the satirical television program, "That Was the Week That Was."

POPULARITY ISN'T EVERYTHING—or, at least it sometimes leaves something to be desired. But then again, fans like these seem to crawl out from under the bushes. Ah well, guess whose world it is . . .

Tricky Contests Get You? Try These Hints For Help

About 5,000 contests, with prizes totaling approximately $60 million in money and merchandise, are sponsored each year. Can you win a pile of cash? . . . a car?. . . the vacation of a lifetime? Of course. People no brighter than you win every day. Here are six tips that may help you get your share of the loot.

1. Get in on the activities. While you may venture two bits in the World Series pool at work every fall without batting an eyelash, chances are you leave competing for the big hauls to others. Many prizes go begging, because the number of people who enter contests is often lower than you may have realized.

2. Make sure you're eligible. In most contests, regardless of their nature, the employees of the companies sponsoring them, their relatives, or the families of the people connected in any way with the big event, may not qualify for prizes. Certain contests may be open only to people who meet specific qualifications.

3. Play by the rules. You've beaten the odds. They've pulled your card from the thousands in the box! But the judge cries "Foul!," because you didn't follow instructions. Some contests rules are as easy as signing your name. By following that simple rule, you may be able to "wrangle" a 1931 Rolls Royce Roadster, or one of other valuable prizes, in local and national drawings, sponsored by the makers of Wrangler jeans. To get in on the "Wrich Kids Wrally Sweepstakes," just to to any Wrangler dealer for an entry form. Rule for the drawing are listed on the entry form which should be postmarked no later than June 1. 1966.

4. You can improve your chances by entering a contest as many times as the rules permit. Remember that the odds in your favor go up or down in proportion to the number of entries out of the total that have your name and address on them. In the "Wrich Kids Wrally Sweepstakes," for example, there's no limit to how often you can enter between now and national drawing time.

5. Keep plugging away. One woman, Mrs. Nita Parks of Pasadena, has won hundreds of prizes, but she mailed in 300 entries before she won her first prize — a net shopping bag. When entering contests that call for writing a jingle or completing a line, she often uses the product for some time beforehand, waits days or weeks before the big inspiration hits and sometimes works ten hours a day on a single entry.

6. Take the personal approach. Use "I" and "My" in your entry when you enter a contest that requires some writing on your part. Judgers of contests often prefer warm, informal language to chilly praseology. This sentence once won a dog - food contest for Mrs. Parks: "Skillfully blended, rigidly inspected, champion - recommended, it make my poodle eat hearty, eat peppy, look sharp, and smell so healthy, we're both so happy."

Whether you want to win a wad of dough, have your way paid to Europe, wrangle a Rolls Royce Roadster or gladly settle for a year's supply of dog food, you may be able to reap rewards — or, as the contest people might prefer to spell it, wreap wrewards — by wreading and wremembering (oops — reading and remembering) these winning tips. Reminiscences In An Old Drawer

By CAROL GALLANT
DTH Staff Writer

Well gang, it's been fun — college, The Daily Tar Heel, the whole bit. I'm playing to the hilt the part of the brave, smiling senior going forth to face the world. Help! I don't want to go!

At any rate, there are a lot of little odds and ends to clear up before the last walk. One of the odds includes the old faithful desk at the Tarheel. After some 3 years I guess it should be, same typewriter too.

Cleaning out a desk is an interesting way to pass a rainy Saturday afternoon, and naturally the asssortment of paper uncovered leads to all sorts of reflections, mainly melencholy, largely trite and inconsequential to anyone else, but at any rate . . .

Here's a snappy little article on "Of Mythology and Girls" that I felt sure no one would read. From the debate that followed on Northern girls versus Southern girls I did. The bane of a writer's existence, "No one understands me!"

Three calendars, 1953, '59, and '62, an interesting little magazine on North Carolina Bankers, and campus calendar events that never appeared anywhere but the desk drawer. "I've made lots of friends. "Where is that dumb blond that forgot to run my campus calendar event!"

There are a number of leftover press releases on Roger Miller. Ah, meories of a chug-a-lug contest. There is also a tattered little note telling me that, being a girl, I won't be able to sit in Press Row at a basketball game to give the "feminine viewpoint." There is still much work to done in the area of women's rights!

Here's the $5.000 bracelet I swiped from the traveling jewelry exhibitor. Sure. I would still be working for the DTH with that kind of pocket money.

There are a number of little notes from staff members "gently" reminding me of an error, an overlooked assignment. "What have you learned at the Tarheel, Carol?" A lot of new words.

I've also learned that people are funny (Sorry Linkletter, but you don't have a monopoly on the thought), In fact, they are a riot. Sitting in the Tarheel office watching the world go by I've had a number of good laughs I received the staff award for meritorious service to the "Hey, How you!" crowd. Of course, I imagine "the world" chuckled some too at the office staff.

People like their name in print, but "spell it right next time, buddy."

Students cut the campus paper to shreds. It's unsophisticated to priase it or say that sometimes the food in Lenoir is alright. But they always have a copy of it stuck in their face in class or at meals. Its a nice feeling. You say you save it only to wrap fish in or hide from the professor?

Returning to the desk drawer I find a set of keys, a number of unanswered letters, and vital information for an article on potato planting in Idaho.

There's also an editor standing behind my desk pleading for a story. A story? Well, Carol, you have talent for writing when there is absolutely nothing to say." I guess I've proved him right once again.

Good luck next year DTH secretary and girl Friday, whoever you are. May your courage grow with each typo, your ears toughen with each argument in the office, and may all your assignments be little ones.

The no-drag shaver.

You might not shift to 3rd until you're 17.

Usually 17 is the time peach fuzz turns into hard bristle. Then you've got trouble, unless you have a shaver that can grow up with you. Like the new REMINGTON® 200 Selectro Shaver with the dial. Alias no-drag. We gave it an alias because you can shift all over your face and adjust to your particular beard. Any variety from fuzz to scrub brush. Turn the dial to 1st. You can take off uphill on your neck. No drag. In 2nd you can go through a couple of days' growth. No pull. In 3rd you can take on anything without leaving skid marks. Shift to 4th and you're in and out of corners. You drift over tender spots like your upper lip. 5th is the finishing line. Straight sideburns. In 6th you clean out the whiskers. The Selectro Shaver is up there in the Ferrari class, but we've managed to make it cost less than a lot of regular shavers. We're not out to take you for a ride. We also make a complete line of cordless shavers, in case you're interested.

The rest of the world may have all kinds of delightful things to fill your vacation days, but one thing you'll miss (and we blush as we admit it) is the big friendly old Intimate.

Time's running out, and now is the time to stock up on emergency rations of brain fodder.

Might start among our used paperbacks. They're easy to pack, light to carry, and cheap enough that you can be big-hearted and trade 'em off to the natives, after you've read the juice out of them. Prices start at two for a quarter, but chum, they're real lifesavers when you get out where the corn grows tall.

There's plenty of nice light-reading in our 29c shelf. It's mostly book club selections, contributed by members who forgot to send in their "don't-want-it notice, but it's mighty pretty and goes down easy —and we heard one chap last summer who traded his copy off to a biddy in Tanganyika for something out-of-this-world nice. A mango, perhaps?

If you'd like pleasure-reading in your special field, you're likely to find it anywhere from the 68c shelf on up to the ceiling. One thing you can be sure of is that it will be off the beaten track, fun to read, and it'll be priced fairly.

Chum, we know that biddies and bears, Alps and alligators, romance and adventure, and visions of sugar-plums are dancing through your head.

Let 'em dance, but remember, bookshops are scarce out in the wild blue yonder, and now's the time to stock up that intellectual larder!

More Letters To Editor

Stith Errs

Editor, The Daily Tar Heel:

It's too bad the members of the Daily Tar Heel staff cannot find better copy to fill the space in these last few issues than slanderous, libelous letters about former friends and Journalism School classmates. At least Pat Stith, former DTH Managing Editor has certainly indicated this in his Wednesday, May 18, 1966, letter to the editor.

In it he proceeded to thumb through the Yack and pick out a number of seniors to attack just because they "claimed" to work on the Daily Tar Heel. The only trouble is, he did not bother to follow the ethics of journalism and investigate his facts. Instead, he printed them hastily without finding out if they were really true.

Perhaps he is right about some of these so called "pretenders." I have my doubts. I know of few people who would claim to have worked on this newpaper had they not really spent hours of thankless effort contributing to it.

For Mr. Stith's information, three years of my Carolina college years have been spent working and contributing to the DTH. I guess he just did not bother to read the names of the people on the payroll, study the paper in its entirety, notice the names in the masthead, or see me frequent the office with stories from the News Bureau and other sources which I had written.

As for my contribution this year — I don't suppose Mr. Stith remembers any of the stories that came from the News Bureau with my byline on them, the stories about the motorcycle incidents on campus, for instance, on which the DTH so conveniently broke the state release date on, or the stories they so neatly removed my byline from in order to make them appear to be written by permanent DTH staffers.

I'm sorry associate editor Barry Jacobs has such a poor memory too. I've only talked with on numerous occasions about stories and business with which he was directly concerned during my visits to the DTH office.

I would suggest Mr. Stith check his facts thoroughly the next time he tries to decide who knows me and who doesn't. Most of the people he mentioned who do not, happen to be very close friends of mine or I at least consider them so.

Perhaps in the future Mr. Stith will think before he writes rather than being so hasty in publicizing information about which he really knows nothing.

Chem Fires

Editor:

With reference to your editorial of May 18 and for the benefit of an informed general public, there are forty fire extinguishers in Venable Hall of the dry powder type, designed particularly for chemical fires. These are sealed pressure canister fire extinguishers that contain pressure indicators. In addition to these forty, there are six powder extinguishers that have proper pressure guage attachments.

All of these fire extinguishers can be checked at a glance and are checked daily by our janitors. While these forty-six fire extinguishers alone would be sufficient for this laboratory, we have in addition twenty - eight of the carbon dioxide type extinguishers throughout the building. These are checked by weight on the average of once a month by our janitors. The specifications on these extinguishers call for inspection every six months.

In the "quick tour" of Venable Hall mentioned in your editorial, you noted a November of 1963 date as the last date that appears on the inspection tags. I should point out that November 15 of 1963 was the last date on which our fire extinguishers were checked by an outside group. It was then that the Chemistry Department decided that the outside inspection of our fire extinguishers was not adequate, and since that time we have assumed the responsibility of inspection according to the above mentioned schedules. This in-house standing inspection program has not required the use of inspection tags.

Due to the variety of flammable materials used in a chemistry program, it is inevitable that there will be some fires. We may average from two to ten small lab fires per month, but in the last twenty-seven years we have called the Fire Department only once, and that was because of the freakish nature of that particular fire.

NURSES DORM HONORED

The Nurses Dorm received the Carolina Woman's Council trophy for the most active woman's dorm for the 1965-66 year, yesterday. Dorms were judged on the basis of activities, projects and functions during the year. Dorm President Carole Norman accepted the trophy on behalf of the Nurses' dorm.

Honors Program Expands Upward

The Faculty Committee on Honors decided last week to introduce a new program of independent study for next year into the Honors Program and the university community in general. The program will be called Junior Honors Independent Study, Honors 37 and 38.

The program is more than an expanded Honors program, Dr. David Lapkin, head of the Honors Committee, points out. "We hope it will be the beginning of a more general program of independent study for the junior year and that it will become an integral part of the University's program. It will be included in the catelogue. Now a program of independent study will be available to all gifted students."

The program is designed for academically gifted students who would do independent study with some inter-disciplinary focus. It would be undertaken under the direction of a faculty member the student would choose to work with, and would carry three semester hours credit.

Basically, according to Dr. Lapkin, most of the students for the program will be drawn from those that have successfully completed the Sophomore Honors program. Students should probably have a 3.5 average, but Dr. Lapkin stresses that this is not an inflexible rule.

There are three basic steps to be taken to get into the program. The interested student should first go to a faculty member under whose direction he wishes to pursue his study. The faculty member should write a letter to the Faculty Council on Honors indicting his willingness to work with the student.

Next the student should secure from faculty members he has done written work for, a brief statement to the effect that they feel the student is capable of doing independent work.

Finally, if the student is approved tentatively on the basis of these statements and the advisor report, he will work up a detailed perspectus of his intentions. If this is approved he will be accepted into the program.

Hope Drive Has Deadline Moved Off

By DAVID ROTHMAN
DTH Staff Writer

You can still contribute to Project Hope.

Tom Brantley, director of the local fund raising project for the floating hospital, announced yesterday that the deadline has been extended to May 24.

This was done "at the request of several of the dorm fund raising chairmen who have been pressed for time as a result of exams," he said.

Brantley, who predicts that "around $800" will be raised said he's unable to release individual dorm collection figures since the fund-raising contest is still going on.

But he said Spencer, Parker and Morrison are presently the leaders in the dorm division, with the Phi Mu sorority leading the fraternity - sorority division.

Money can be turned in to the basement of Smith dormitory any time day or night, Brantley said.

Explaining why Project Hope was born even though there are government foreign aid programs with similar purposes, Brantley quoted this statement:

"Foreign aid originating from the American government is received with a certain amount of distrust and resentment as a supposed extension of American imperialism through the dollar . . .

"The granting of foreign aid through a neutral body has been suggested to offset the distrust and resentment behind our granting of foreign aid.

"This policy has led to the founding of such bodies as the Alliance for Progress and Project Hope."

Project Hope was started in the 1950s as part of President Eisenhower's People to People aid program.

Besides curing persons in underdeveloped countries, Project Hope instructs native doctors in modern medical techniques.

All prizes are German lugers (Wee-Gee water gun style) which may be picked up at the Graham Memorial information desk after noon today.

The DTH feels that an honorable mention ust go to Kelly Hunter for killing Sharon Harmon. Early yesterday morning Miss Harmon was awakened by her alarm clock. The hall phone rang a few minutes later and her roommate was called out.

"A blond entered," Miss Harmon said. "A stranger. I felt no hate — only pity. She entered — walked up to my bedside. I looked up questioningly. The answer was a bomb — gently dropped on my stomach. I was dead. Plot: early morning daze, removal of roommate, and death. One. Two. Three."

Last rites were held for Miss Harmon yesterday at 6 p.m. in Harry's "for the mourned death of a pacifist."

Exam Flicks

"Captain Video and his video rangers" will hit the silver screen of Carroll Hall Friday and Saturday night of exams at 7 and 9:30. No admission charge.

On Friday night episodes 1-8 will be shown. Saturday night brings 9-15. A large crowd, seeking to let off steam, is expected.

Captain Video starred on television in the 1950's. These episodes come from the motion picture version of the "Video" series. At Rutgers last year, the "Captain Video" showings drew an overflow crowd each time they were shown.

The GM Films Committee is the sponsor of the flicks.

Rusty Adkins Tops ACC Hitters

GREENSBORO (AP) — Rusty Adkins, junior infielder for Clemson who won the 1965 Atlantic Coast Conference batting crown with a .444 average, is turning a late season spurt into a serious bid for a repeat championship.

Adkins, with a .375 average through 22 games, has inched his way to the top in what is the closest race in ACC history in the batting title.

The battle is so tight, the man in sixth place currently could rise to the top in a single game and this means the contest may go to the final out of the season before a decision is rendered.

The nearest thing to a certainty at this stage is that either a Clemson or North Carolina man should win the crown. The first eight men in the latest ACC Service Bureau averages perform for either the champion Tar Heels or the Tigers. However, Dan Kerns of Maryland is batting .350 and is still mathematically in the running.

Adkins, who has hit safely in 39 consecutive games stretching into last season, is trailed by three men hitting .370 or better. Teammate Keith Waters is second at .372. Charles Carr of North Carolina is third at .371 and Tar Heel Danny Talbott fourth at .370.

Averages for the ACC are running well ahead of 1965 when only ten players batted .300 or better for the full season. With the 1966 campaign almost over, 80 players are inside the .300 circle, with ten of them at .350 or better. Last season only three managed to go over .350.

Clemson players dominate the extra base races, with George Sutton, a .350 hitter, showing the way in home runs with 11 and runs batted in with 34. Adkins tops triples with six and Jack McCall leads doubles with nine. Talbott is pushing McCall in two base hits with eight and Lawton Cowart of Clemson is a close second in RBIs with 30.

Randy London of Wake Forest is first in stolen bases with 11. Mike Fair of South Carolina is second with 10.

Tech Edges Heels, 15-14

The Tar Heels closed out the regular baseball season on a ferocious, but losing, note Wednesday when they were outslugged by Virginia Tech, 15-14.

The loss, the second in a row for Carlina, gave Walter Rabb's team a regular season record of 18-10. Wake Forest beat the Tar Heels, 5-4 in ten innings, Monday.

Even in losing, the Heels showed the never-say-die spirit that has characterized them all season. They rallied from a seven-run deficit and took a 14-12 lead into the bottom of the ninth.

Carolina couldn't hold the lead, though. Tech's Johnny Oates slammed a three - run homer to give the Gobblers the victory. Bud Cohoon took the loss for the Tar Heels.

Mike McLaughlin and Rodney Thompson homered for Carolina.

The next stop for Rabb's ACC champions in Gastonia and the NCAA District III playoffs. The Tar Heels face the Southern Conference pennant winner, East Carolina College, on June 2.

DU, Ehringhaus Win In IM Softball

By BILL HASS
DTH Asst. Sports Editor

DU Blue II and the Ehringhaus C Nubs captured the fraternity and residence hall intramural softball championships on Wednesday.

DU built up an early lead and defeated TEP for the fraternity crown, 11-9. DU did most of their damage in the second inning. Terry Henry led off with a home run. Jim Cutting walked, Pete Burgess singled, Randy Myer walked and Dennis Morgan doubled. Then Ted Edwards walked and Bob Tracy unloaded a three - run homer to cap the seven run outburst. The DU's led, 9-0.

In the third inning, Kleitman blasted a two - run homer to chop the TEP deficit to 9-5.

In the DU fifth, Burgess and Myer walked and came in on Morgan's single to increase the lead to 11-5. TEP scored four more times to finish the game.

NUBS TRIUMPH

Ehringhaus pitcher Gary Lail gave up only five hits to the Griffith House G--men from Morrison in a 4-1 victory. Jimmy Byrd led off the game with a home run to put the Nubs in front, 1-0.

In the third, Bob Knott slammed a home run and Tildern Martin followed with another one to move the Nubs up by 4-0.

TENNIS RESULTS

Lewis Blue defeated the Everett Rogah for the intramural tennis championship in residence halls and Law IV downed Med Blue for the title in the graduate division.

Jim Hough of Lewis won his singles match against Jim Hugenschmidt, 7-5. Tom Dail of Everett beat John Clemens of Lewis in number two singles, 6-0, 8-6. The Lewis doubles team of Woody Perrel and Rich Page won over Ron Michlelove and Steve Shelds, 6-2, 6-3.

Phi Delt beat KA for the fraternity championship.

Law IV defeated Med Blue for that title. Members of the winning team were Charlie Shaffer, number one singles, John McMillan, number two singles, and doubles team Larry McDevitt and Rich Gwalty.

Wins And Losses

Changing Horses

One old adage tells me not to change horses in midstream. Another says don't get off a winner. So I'm going to do both those things. Having successfully picked Kauai King to win the Kentucky Derby, I will now get off that winning horse in the middle of the Triple Crown stream and select another as the winner of the Preakness.

My choice to win the tomorrow's 91st running of this storied race is Advocator. This son of Round Table-Delta Queen, by Bull Lea has yet to win this year, but he is an improving horse. In his last four starts he has chalked up a third and three seconds. His best race, of course, was the Derby, in which he finished only a half-length behind Kauai King. The start before that, Advocator was second to Amberoid in the Wood Memorial.

Kauai King, without doubt, is the colt to beat. He won the Derby fairly, and he did it the hard way, leading all the way. The Maryland-bred son of Native Dancer will be a solid favorite tomorrow, perhaps odds-on. I don't think, though, that the King will be able to run the same kind of race tomorrow that he ran in Louisville. The other jockeys aren't likely to let Don Brumfield get away again.

Indulto, Kauai King and Stupendous should be in the first flight early, with Advocator not too far behind. The others should be farther back. At the finish, I'll call it this way—ADVOCATOR, KAUAI KING, STUPENDOUS, AMBEROID.

Duke Takes Track Meet

Duke won the first State Intercollegiate Track and Field Championships Wednesday, clinching the title in the final event of the day.

The Blue Devils edged North Carolina College, 47-45. UNC finished third with 36 1-2 points, and N. C. State was fourth with 28 1-2.

Carolina copped two first places in the meet. Bill Bassett won the mile run with a time of 4:21. Mike Williams took the 880-yard run in 1:53

Edwin Roberts of North Carolina College was named the meet's outstanding performer. Roberts won the 100 in 9.5 and the 220 in 21.4. Healso anchored the winning 440-yard relay team.

Mangum, Phi Delts Win 'Murals

Mangum and Phi Delta Theta were the overall winners in intramural competition for the 1965-66 school year.

Mangum displaced Everett as the residence hall champion. Everett was second, Ruffin third, Aycock fourth and Old East fifth. The next five were Graham, Lewis, Connor, Alexander, and Morrison C.

The Phi Delts won the fraternity championship for the third straight year, thus retiring the trophy. DKE finished second, DU third, Pi Kappa Phi fourth and Zeta Psi fifth. TEP was sixth, SAE seventh, Chi Psi eighth, St. A ninth and Lambda Chi tenth.

Graduate division totals have not yet been computed.

Bob Lewis Named MVP Of Tar Heel Cage Team

All-America Bob Lewis, junior from Washington, D. C., has been named Carolina's "Most Valuable Player" for the 1965-66 basketball season, according to Coach Dean Smith.

Lewis, who averaged 27.4 points per game and set a school record with a 49-point performance against Florida State last December, headed the list of players selected for special honors at the annual basketball banquet.

"Bob's tremendous scoring skill and his overall team effort made him a logical choice for the award," said Smith. The trophy is presented each year by E. Carrington Smith.

Other special honors went to seniors Jimmy Moore of Wilmington and Johnny Yokley of Mt. Airy.

Moore, a substitute who played in all but 11 games, provides a good example of athletic value although one is out of the limelight. He was tapped for the Foy Robertson Jr. Memorial Award as the player who "made the chief contribution to team morale and sportsmanship."

Yokley, a two - year starter, was voted the "Outstanding Senior" and earned the Educational Foundation Award, an engraved watch.

UNC notes with regret the passing on of 107.

Dwight Wait Receives AED Pre-Med Honor

Dwight W. Wait III, a junior from Glenshaw, Pa., has been named recepient of the Edward McGowan Hedgpeth Award given annually by Alpha Epsilon Delta, International Pre-medical and Pre-dental Honorary Society, to the outstanding member of the Beta chapter at U.N.C. Named for Dr. Edward McGowan Hedgpeth of the U.N.C. School of Medicine, the award consists of a medical dictionary and an engraved plaque. In addition, the recepient's name is placed on a permanent plaque in the Dean's office of the U.N.C. School of Medicine.

Executive officers for next year were elected Wednesday night as AED held its last meeting of the semester. Dwight Wait was re-elected president. Other officers include Noel Free, vice - president, Mary Susan Kirk, secretary, John Lawrence, treasurer, Efrain Zambrana, Scalpel reporter, and Mike Jones, historian.

The spring initiation banquet for AED was held April 26 at the Pine's Restaurant. The speaker for the banquet was Dr. David C. Sabiston, head of the Department of Surgery at Duke University. The U.N.C. chapter also received second place in the National Publicity category.

AED has also been named to receive a special award from the Heart Fund Association.

Dr. Wright Receives First Teaching Excellence Award

Dr. Charles D. Wright, assistant professor of English, has been named the first recipient of the Excellence in Teaching Award.

The award, established this year to be presented annually as the highest honor a faculty member can receive from the student body, carries with it a check for $1,000.

Dr. Wright was selected from a list of nominees by the six - member Excellence in Teaching Commission of Student Government because, in their opinion, he best demonstrated "excellence in teaching and a willingness in assisting individual students in the academic and intellectual search outside the classroom."

Charles McFadden, chairman of the commission, said this award is a way of "showing our appreciation to those men who are both competent teachers and are interested in students, their problems and activities."

Dr. Charles D. Wright

Dr. Wright, who teaches Victorian literature, modern English and American poetry and creative writing received his A.B. degree in English from Wayne University, Detroit, Mich., in 1953. He was awarded his M.A. degree from the University of Wisconsin in 1954 and his Ph.D. from the University of Iowa in 1961.

Between 1954 to 1960 he served in the U. S. Army in Alaska and studied German literature and political science at Tubingen University in Germany.

His poetry has been published in Harpers, Saturday Review, Kenyon Review.

The Personal Touch

Growth And Politics Bring New Problems

By WILLIAM JOSLIN

In 25 years the University's role in the life of our State has changed perceptibly and, to my way of thinking, to the detriment of the University.

(I use the term "the University" in the sense we always did —to mean the branch at Chapel Hill.)

The University's ties with both students and alumni have weakened as their loyalty to it has waned over the years. Sadly, the University has come under increasing political sniping, if not a frontal assault. Larger battles loom ahead.

What are the areas in which the University's role in the life of our State has changed most noticeably in 25 years?

1. BIGNESS, IMPERSONALITY

From an enrollment of 4,108 in 1941, the University has expanded to 12,419. The campus has spread in all directions. Our affluent students must have cars or motorcycles to get from one class to another within the allotted time.

The faculty has grown in proportion. More and more classes are taught in large sections with the professors lecturing by microphones and delegating all paper-grading and contact with the students to computers and to assistants.

Today's student is lucky if he lands in a class taught by one of the best known professors. He is even luckier if he is able to meet and know one of them. Perhaps the student who is determined to meet and know the great minds of the University faculty can still do so, but the obstacles are many.

We had smaller classes, a degree of choice in selecting profs at registration time, and open doors to after-hours visits.

Bigness and loss of intimacy seems to have had a levelling effect on the faculty, at least to an outsider.

Do you remember the giants we used to try to schedule—or to avoid? Bernstein in Money and Banking, Jim Fesler in Political Science, Dr. George Coffin Taylor for Shakespeare, Harry Wolfe in Labor Problems, and Rupert Vance in Sociology, etc. The giants are probably still at the University, but their heads are hard to spot in the crowd.

This tremendous growth has depersonalized students and faculty, with a loss of loyalty and commitment. The alumnus who formerly thought only of Chapel Hill for his boy, now ponders carefully before enrolling his son.

2. ATTACKS FROM WITHOUT

Twenty-five years ago the University had its legislative battles, largely over appropriations. The University had to fight for every cent, usually settling for less than it needed. But by and large the battles were limited to the legislative forum and were confined to the issue of appropriations.

Of course there were detractors, such as Mr. Dave Clark, who never missed an opportunity to attack Dr. Frank Graham, and there were attacks on individual University professors. But the University as a whole remained above the fray and was never the target of a major assault. Consolidation was an accepted fact.

But since then, we have somewhere, sometime, crossed a watershed. The University is now open to attacks on many fronts. Perhaps it was the 1950 Senatorial campaign, in which Dr. Frank was defeated after a bitter and divisive campaign that marked the end of the University's relative immunity from political wars.

Regardless of the reasons, the University has recently been embroiled in one controversy after another, including the fight over the composition and functions of the Board of Higher Education, the bitter fight over the name of our sister institution in Raleigh, formerly N. C. State and now known as North Carolina State University, and the recurrent fight over the Speaker Ban Law. These engagements have opened wounds that are slow in healing.

Now, while the University is still on the defensive a major fight is brewing over a proposal to give university status to East Carolina College, and also the related question of whether such status should be granted as an institution within or outside of the consolidated University.

The move to establish East Carolina College as a separate university poses serious questions. Can our State afford the luxury of parallel universities competing with one another for students, faculty and for legislative appropriations? Twenty-

Reunion Planners Vote on Speakers

Alumni attending the Feb. 6 reunion planning session approved of Communist speakers on the UNC campus—though not overwhelmingly.

The alumni were asked to fill out a questionnaire about themselves and an oral request was made that they add "yes" or "no" at the bottom in regard to admitting Communist speakers.

Results: 16 "yes"; 14 "no"; 17 abstained.

The poll was taken on the eve of Gov. Dan K. Moore's meeting with UNC trustees to decide on the appearances of two Communists who had been invited to speak at the University. They were Herbert Aptheker, head of the Marxist Studies group in New York City, and Frank Wilkinson, head of a committee seeking to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The trustees decided "no."

Dorsey Bands Were Big News

The April 3, 1941, edition of the Daily Tar Heel carried a one-column heading, "Yugoslavs United Against Nazi Invasion." The paper proclaimed in a six-column streamer:

"Pastor, Jimmy Dorsey Signed for Spring Dances."

Big bands were par for the major dance weekends, and big news. Tony Pastor played for the Junior-Seniors, Jimmy Dorsey for the Finals, and Bob Chester for Fall Germans. Tommy Dorsey headlined May Frolics.

"Dorsey's present group is considered his best," reported the paper. "Featured besides Tommy are such outstanding musical favorites as Frank Sinatra, baritone soloist, Connie Haines, sweetheart of swing, Buddy Rich, ace drummer, Ziggy Elman and his trumpet, and the Pied Pipers, harmony quartette." Jo Stafford was one of the latter.

Chatting with a DTH reporter at the Tin Can, Sinatra said "I'll Never Smile Again" was "a great number," but that it did get a little monotonous singing it two or three times a night.

For Mid-Winters, the German Club had Jack Teagarden's orchestra. He played a concert in Memorial Hall, a tea dance, and two evening dances. Cost for the set: $5.

Juniors on Moon

Seer Goes Into Orbit, Views UNC In 25 Years

By PETE IVEY

Students in Astrophysics at Chapel Hill in 1991 will be spending their next to last year in the University in the "Junior Year on the College of the Moon" project. JYCOM will be a joint humanities-science program financed by the United Nations. They will go on chartered space craft flying from the Carolina-Duke Universe Travel Center in the Research Triangle Park.

The University of North Carolina in 1991, only 25 years away, will be an oasis of landscaped campus with trees and shrubs and the Old Well and Davie Poplar intact, amid the Piedmont Crescent City, a megapolis of 10,000,000—still the longest city in the world as it was in 1966, and now one of the largest.

Piedmont Crescent City, of which the village of Chapel Hill will be limited to 100,000 population according to zoning for beauty and pastoral atmosphere, will contain also other universities within the framework of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, with units at Wilmington, Kinston, Manteo, Raleigh, Chapel Hill, Greensboro, Asheville, Charlotte, and the Astrophysics Extension Institution on the new-found planet Zovril.

The student body of 40,000 and the faculty of 3,500 in Chapel Hill will be confined on the greensward of some 4,000 acres.

A major problem of 1991, built upon traffic congestion dilemmas of the 1970's, will be one of space—inner space on the campus, as contrasted with outer space in new scientific exploration. The University, in 1991, will be underground as well as above ground. Subways will be connecting all segments of the campus, from the Old Graham Memorial to South Building, to the Library, to Kenan Stadium, to the Medical Center and on to the Mason Farm Modern Design Center of Near-Humanistic Studies of People from Outer Space and Exotic Planets.

Building beneath ground will be relatively less expensive, and much safer. Economy will be realized by combination parking garages (we'll still have modified automobiles) and associated fall-out shelters and snack bars. Classrooms and laboratories and student activity centers will also be below ground level. Air-conditioning and heating will be no real problem because of the low cost of atomic energy power owned by the University's utilities plants.

Students will be much smarter, aided by new discoveries in chemical strengthening of memory and other facets of the brain and nervous system, as well as the normal upward evolution of intelligence in succeeding generations.

Faculty will likewise be abler —with particular attention directed at a small contingent of super-brains. These super-brains will be young men—professors born and developed after 1975. They will be products of the successful exploitation of DNA, whereby the genes of men and women of genius can produce a superior number of teachers who will be from 20 to 25 years of age, but brainy as all get-out.

Students will go to classes, or they may tune in on lectures by Student Populations

UNC's enrollment of 13,130 in Chapel Hill looks big to the class of '41, but it's far below the leading state universities in size.

California, with almost 120,000 in its University system, is well known for its multitude of students. Some of the other leading universities in enrollment may be a surprise:

State University of New York, 78,000; Minnesota, 58,000; Wisconsin, 48,500; Illinois, 41,600; Indiana, 41,500; Michigan State, 41,300; Maryland, 38,000; Michigan, 34,500; New York University, 31,000; and Southern Illinois, 25,000.

Graham's Poetic Farewell

Sandburg Saw '41 Class As 'Bridge Generation'

(Reprinted from Raleigh News and Observer, June 11, 1941)

Chapel Hill, June 10 — Hard work, self-denial, and effective opposition to inroads of foreign propaganda will be necessary if America is to preserve its hard-won liberty, silver-haired Carl Sandburg, famous poet and biographer, told a record-breaking graduating class of more than 700 at the University of North Carolina here tonight.

Speaking quietly but effectively for less than half an hour before an audience of 7,000, Sandburg scored Charles Lindbergh's attitude toward the dictator nations and warned that this country must be ever vigilant against "constant propaganda operating from the continents of Europe."

CHANGED TUNE

Referring to Colonel Lindbergh without mentioning his name, Mr. Sandburg spoke of "a famous aviator who has quit flying and taken to talking. Thirteen years ago his picture was hung on college walls as symbol of youth ready to risk and adventure for the sake of great achievement.

"Now all of a sudden that same daring aviator has begun to talk the language of comfort and safety first and of breakfast at home with mother."

He said the graduates of today represent a "bridge generation—the children of a transition more furious in its tempo than any yet known — with one foot in the old and the other in the new America."

Discussing the danger of propaganda, he referred to a recent meeting of the America First Committee in Chicago, when elements in the audience hooted and howled when "God Bless America" was sung, saying that attitude indicated the propaganda of race oppression had reached across the sea from Berlin.

"If the British Isles go down, we will have one notice after another served upon us, and shame after shame piled upon us unless we fight a bloody war for the right to be a free people," he declared.

There is today, he said, "a great competition of propaganda for the good will of the masses of the people."

Mr. Sandburg scored the destruction of millions of books by bombs and fires on direct orders of dictators in Europe.

"Copies of many books prohibited have been shipped to America to be reprinted in their original language. So in a certain sense we have become an arsenal of the literature of political freedom as well as the arsenal for democracy.

Administrative Dean Robert B. House, whose son, Robert B., Jr.,

Warm Reunion Planned by 90 In Feb. Snow

By GRACE RUTLEDGE HAMRICK

Remains of a 10-inch snow storm greeted some 90 alumni and mates gathering Feb. 6 at Carolina Inn to plan a gala June 3-4 celebration for '41-ers who will match their anniversary with the silver in their hair—or in some instances, what's left of it!

Reunion chairman Hargrove "Skipper" Bowles, sporting some silver threads but lucky enough to have retained a full head of wavy hair, remarked that he had planned to sit up the night before to do a coloring job . . . to which bald-pated Rush Hamrick Jr., retorted, "I should have that problem!"

President Herb Hardy welcomed classmates with flashing smile and, like a pro, batted near - perfect in remembering names . . . a record of which no other could brag. The planning session over, Herb was asked if he'd recognized all present. He admitted only one had thrown him!

Herb's still-youthful face was framed by white curls in contrast to the black of 25 years ago. Now a successful Maury farmer, he serves on the board of trustees of UNC and Elizabeth City State College and is a three-term veteran of the N. C. State Legislature.

Happy faces, though more lined, reflected the camaraderie of the nostalgic and fun-filled Sunday afternoon when plans were laid for this momentous June '66 occasion. Alumni from throughout North Carolina were on hand. Out-of-staters included Stacy Crockett Scales, mother of four, of Martinsville, Va., and Paul Severin of Ashland, Va.

Insurance salesman Severin has six children, including 14-year-old twin boys. For the past seven years he has been a member of the Million Dollar Round Table, whose membership includes salesmen of $1 million or more in life insurance in one year. His latest sports acclaim was to be named club golf champion two years ago at Hermitage Club. (See Page 3).

Andy Gennett, general manager of Gennett Lumber Company in Asheville, probably traveled the greatest distance from the west. Walter L. Sheffield, Jr., sales agent for Bond Crown and Cork Division of Continental Can Co., and Dr. Frank Reynolds, pediatrician who after

Old Editors Try Again on DTH

This special issue of the Daily Tar Heel is being distributed to the Class of 1941 for its 25th reunion in Chapel Hill June 3 and 4.

By coincidence (or maybe a trend is indicated) three key editors of the Daily Tar Heel of 25 years ago now work in Washington, D. C. Don Bishop, Editor, is in the Office of the Secretary of Commerce. Charles Barrett, Managing Editor, is at Newmyer Associates, a consulting firm which reports and interprets government affairs for major companies. Leonard K. Lobred, Sports Editor, is Director of the Division of International Trade for the National Canners Association.

This editorial nucleus recruited assistance from several quarters (see masthead on Page 2), circulated a questionnaire with the help of the General Alumni Association, and began turning out copy. The paper was printed at the plant of the Cleveland Times in Shelby, with DTH staffer Grace Rutledge Hamrick serving as Associate Editor. Grace was former editor of The Times.

Circulation Manager Joseph E. Zaytoun of Raleigh took up his old position.

Car Population

Brick sidewalks were a big issue in 1941.

Now the University has registered 6,400 student's cars to park on the campus.

UNC has many more cars now than there were students in 1941.

Our Changing World--Or Life And Times Of The Honda Generation

By MARTHA CLAMPITT McKAY

"Tiger-trains" or busses, which will it be?

The question is red hot and was one of the top issues in the spring campaign for the UNC student body presidency. The University Party was for "tiger-trains," the Student Party for busses—but everybody was for shuttle transportation for South campus.

A "Tiger-train," in case you didn't know, is a tractor which pulls a string of trailers.

And South campus? It's a complex of buildings amid a sea of Hondas, where before long at least half of the student population will be living.

The location? Remember the lovely woods behind and beyond the stadium? The red earth there has opened up and spewed forth six men's dorms, a glass and concrete cafeteria, tennis courts, a new baseball field (Emerson will be the site of a new student union and a library addition), row upon row of apartments for married students, and literally acres of asphalt parking lots.

One of the dorms, Morrison, is a 10-story affair. Two, Craige and Ehringhaus, are seven, with a 12-story one on the way.

Craige Dorm is also known as Maverick House—and man, if you don't know the Mavericks, you haven't lived. They have their own government, newspaper, parties, escapades and Maverick brand esprit de corps. (Recently Maverick House residents won the "Stuff a Ford" contest. The 35—count 'em, 35—participants won free tickets to the Roger "King of the Road" Miller concert.

Of the 12,500 students, apparently not one would be caught dead at a formal dance. Certainly while they're in residence here, they don't even have to face the issue, for there is none. Big weekends consist of a concert by the Supremes, or some such group, and then myriads of small—or not so small — combo parties.

Fraternities and sororities don't mean as much as they used to. Maverick, Big Mo (Morrison) and other South campus dorms rock and roll in Chase cafeteria. And a simply mad, mad, mad time is had by all on Jubilee weekend. An outdoor concert on that weekend turns the mall between South building and the library into a sea of swinging cats. Holy administration! It's great!

The Bloody Bucket and the Alley have gone the way of all flesh since 1941, but Harry's is still around, still accepting chits. Some people never learn.

The place to eat lunch is "the Rat"—Danziger's Rathskeller to the uninitiated.

The place to buy records is Kemp's, who was here then and before a disastrous fire in May, was in Ab's old stand. He is, of late, "the Franklin Street Frenchman," serves egg nog at Christmas, goes mad at sale time (every day).

Ankle socks are out, as are Spaulding saddle shoes. (Janet Watson Carroll told the writer once that if a stranger who was wearing Spauldings spoke to her, she knew at once that everything

Class of '41 May Prefer UNC In Year That Was

BY CHARLES BARRETT

There's no doubt how the class of '41 feels about the Chapel Hill of 25 years ago; the love affair is still warm.

Chapel Hill today? Now you're moving into a bit of a debate. Some members of the class of '41 say UNC is bigger but fundamentally the same, with all the old virtues. Others say Carolina has become much too immense, an impersonal machine, a pressure cooker, with an excess of crackpots and agitators.

The fondly monolithic view of the old Chapel Hill, and the divergent views of the current model, were voiced in reply to questions distributed for this reunion issue of the Daily Tar Heel (with no apologies to Louis Harris, a mere junior when we were kings of the campus).

Forty-oners described Carolina in '41 as warm, friendly, relaxed, charming, broadening, sensibly liberal, an oasis of fun and culture and enlightenment. About 94 percent said if they were making the decision again, they would pick UNC; only 3 percent indicated regrets about their choice of Carolina, and 3 percent didn't know.

Would they enjoy Carolina as much if they were students today? A majority of 53 percent flatly said "no;" 38 percent still gave with an enthusiastic "yes;" and about 9 percent had varying degrees of doubt and indecision.

Many of the critics acknowledged they might get more education today, though they would enjoy it less.

That old pro, Alumni Secretary J. Maryon Saunders, gives the impression he has heard all this before, perhaps even at other 25th reunions. Glancing through some of the more than 150 replies, Maryon detected symptoms of "alumnitis — that normal and natural ailment identified by the feeling that Chapel Hill reached its high-noon 25 years ago and has been going down hill ever since."

His prescription, if you feel afflicted, is a perceptive sightseeing around the campus and a talk with those who are really familiar with Chapel Hill of 1966.

Sometimes it's all a matter of the point of view. Robert Cohn, now a trial examiner with the government in Washington, D. C., thought he might like the current UNC better because there are more coeds per boy. But Stacy Crockett Scales, now a housewife in Martinsville, Va., thought she might like the old UNC better because "the 500 girls and 3,000 boys was an excellent ratio—for a girl."

Following are some samples from the debate about the Carolina of 1966. First, those who feel they would not enjoy UNC as much today as in 1941:

SKEPTICS

Margaret Arnold Ball, housewife in McLean, Va., complains that "Students WORK today!"

William L. Beerman, former sports writer, now public relations director for Burlington Industries: "Too many students with too much nervous energy."

Marjorie Johnston McAfee, now of Hartford City, Indiana, says all schools today are subject to "frantic pressures" which take away "the relaxed joy of living we knew."

Gates Kimball, Skipper Bowles,

The Quote Seems Familiar But Is It 1941 or 1966?

All of the following appeared in the Daily Tar Heel—in 1941 or 1966. What was the year of each item? (See Page 2 for answers.)

1. Editorial: What are we to do about Communism? Are we to allow free debate?

2. Letter: Since "open discussion" has always been the cornerstone of our University life. . . .

3. News: The controversy over book prices has been raging for some years now. A student government Cooperative Committee is active to get reforms in the present book store policy.

4. Letter: On Feb. 4 I contracted some kind of food poison from something I ate at the cafeteria.

5. Letter: We need a sidewalk and we need it now.

6. Headline: National Poll Shows Majority of Students Drink.

7. Letter: A column appearing in a recent DTH made some misstatements of fact.

8. Letter: Kindly allow me, sir, to warn the students of the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill that they must take with a very large grain of salty suspicion anything that is printed in the Daily Tar Heel.

9. Statement of candidate: The Daily Tar Heel in the past has been not only the foremost college newspaper in the South, but also a respected molder of campus opinion. If elected editor, I plan to return the paper to its old position of prestige and prominence.

Phi Betes Don't Remember Grades

By BRADLEY LONG

The '41 Phi Beta Kappas have two things in common: They don't wear their key and they don't recall their scholastic average.

Certainly, none flunked Hugh Lefler's course in American history.

Tom Nash, an M.D. in Elizabeth City, recalls that he made the minimum for PBK membership. And Fred Cazel, visiting professor at the University of California, Berkeley, thinks he may have been fourth in the class.

Student body president David Morrison not only doesn't recall his average but recollects that one professor, in open class, called him "the dumbest Phi Bete that ever passed through Chapel Hill." Dave became director of production and engineering with White Laboratories (pharmaceuticals) in Plainfield, N. J.

Two PBKs almost remember their average. Sol Fligel, senior

Of Time and the Reunion

e we are—many but unfortunately —25 years later. Time has flown or sometimes both. A quarter-century corded itself on waistlines, hairlines lendars.

enty-five years: that's approximately ghth the time since the American lic was born, one-eighteenth the since Columbus discovered the New , and one-eightieth the time since walked on earth. Yes, we've lived e piece of modern man's history. ides chronologically, how far have me in 25 years? We've charted the o the moon—even if we've only be- e first faltering communication with eighbor whose color is different. filled fabulous supermarkets with et's delights—and joined the Metre- -lunch bunch. We've fought great wars to preserve freedom everywhere—and passed Speaker Ban Laws to kill it here.

Like all men of all eras, we've often taken one step backwards for each two forward. And in recent times, as the Ku Klux Klan spirit has flourised in cornfields and legislative halls alike, North Carolina sometimes has seemed to take one step forward and two backwards.

But Tar Heels by tradition are unafraid of free inquiry, of being out front, of leading instead of following. Our own bones may tire a little more quickly now than they once did, but our progressive springs run deep. Let's look to the next quarter-century and hope that—all things considered—we advance as much as we have in these past 25 years.

temptation is there for each of us— mptation, 25 years after graduation, tempt to determine to what exent classmates have been successes or es ,and how one stands in compari- ith his old friends. And the danger re, as it always is in our country, to nancial achievement, or lack of it, as ief criterion.

haps, for those of us who will be g backward over the years to that g when we received our diploma ort into the working world, and a g world, just perhaps, the essence them is to look long and hard and at oneself. Not how well Joe has compared with Charlie, or Sally with but "How well have I done against my own true potential? What have I achieved in comparison with what I might have done?" Not whether this classmate or that classmate or oneself is making the top salary, but maybe, just maybe, to ask oneself, "How much have I done for others? Is earth a little better off, even in its smallest corner, for my being here?"

Then, can we leave the past alone and concentrate again on the duties and opportunities of the present and the future? The collective accomplishments of our class, thus far, indicate amply that, as a group, we are a forward-looking lot. Yes, we can and will use the present and the future with at least a fair degree of wisdom. And when the status fanatics flock around us and want to compare salaries and honors, social standing and future prospects, well, let's remember the values which truly count, and quietly tell them, "Go Chase Yourself. I'm Racing Me."

Mr. Crowder put me to work as a "coordinator." His formal education was scant, but like any good public servant, he knew that word.

"You just birddog around headquarters," he said, "and coordinate things."

"Headquarters" was an abandoned farm storehouse which eventually would make way for a Marine barracks. One day he decided it needed "dressing up."

"You're a college graduate," he said, finally finding a use for such. "Write me some slogans to decorate the walls."

With dismay, I realized that Skipper Coffin, Phillips Russell and Walter Spearman — those word wizards in the Department of Journalism—hadn't taught me a single slogan!

That night, I brought down a volume of quotations containing the best of Benjamin Franklin's "Poor Richard's Almanac."

Next day, Mr. Crowder had his slogans, ready for posting.

"Early to bed and early to rise,
Makes a man healthy, wealthy, and wise."

"Never leave that till tomorrow which you can do today."

"Little strokes fell great oaks."

Ben Franklin would have been proud. Mr. Crowder certainly was. And I was too—even if he didn't give me a by-line.

The bound volume of Daily Tar Heels, so laboriously created by many hands, went into storage in a basement at home in New Bern. At one point, the neighborhood squirrels, sated by pecans growing all around, discovered this new treasure and made confetti of it.

A dead squirrel was found nearby about the time the damage came to light. Who would have thought a Daily Tar Heel editorial could be so lethal?

From a public relations desk at Fort Bragg I stepped before a board of Field Artillery colonels, seeking designation on the small quota of officer candidates being sent to Camp Davis, N. C., for Antiaircraft Artillery training.

"Amazing, Sergeant," clucked the senior colonel. "I don't understand it. You're a college graduate. You have a good record. The Field Artillery needs officers. We have a large quota. How could you possibly decide against going to Fort Sill, Oklahoma?"

Something about him suggested that he wouldn't take kindly to the response that Camp Davis was only 58 miles from New Bern, and not too far from Chapel Hill. So I tried this one:

"Colonel, ever since I was a little boy, I've had some kind of crazy idea that I would like to shoot at airplanes. This will make it possible to do it legally."

"Very good reasoning," said a

To Tell The Truth

BY ADRIAN SPIES

To Tell the Truth—I admit to having almost flunked Freshman Math, but I can't believe that the years since I wrote my last To Tell the Truth column for the Tar Heel add up to an awesome twenty-five . . .

Truly, I blush at some of the things I wrote then — I also blush, however, at some of the things I've written since . . .

A domestic truth—my thirteen year old daughter, the youngest of three, just interrupted this adventure in nostalgia to send me out for a pack of black bobby-pins . . .

(I have returned with the bobby-pins, I note in passing that Beverly Hills is pretty tonight, but never, never will it have the sweet glory of Chapel Hill) . . .

A bitter truth—I wonder if a certain redhead in a fair-sized Carolina city ever has a tinge of regret about having stood me up on a very late date . . . Which leads me to wonder if she's still a redhead and still fair-sized herself . . .

Still telling the truth, I wonder how many of you who knew me would believe that I only weigh 160 pounds these days—and what does Miss Perhaps Redhead think of THAT?

Equally truthfully, less facetiously, I wonder if graduates of many schools have had as many occasions across the years to be proud of a university and a borrowed home state as I have . . .

To tell some Hollywood truths —I hope movies ARE better than ever, because I've just finished one for M.G.M. . . .

There is on file at one of the studios here a Carolina Magazine from 1941, with a story by me. It was submitted by Paul Green in an attempt to get me a job then. The attempt failed, the story was a gaudy mishmash about a writer who ends up in Hollywood with a mortgage, a pool, an uncomfortable secret knowledge about the private lives of some public gods and goddesses. There are moments, dear Paul, when I feel that I am living my fantasies, and in spades . . .

But if Hollywood parties aren't so hot, the nicest one I recall was at my own house when Ed Rankin and Voit Gilmore and Hugh Morton and some others of you visited me during the 1960 Democratic Convention. I hope some others of you will look me up—and that some future convention can nominate as good a man as 1960 did . . .

Some reunion truths—I won't be there, and I'm sorry, and that's the truth, because I'll be getting ready to take my family to Paris, which I love as I love Chapel Hill, which is a double truth. And, though I confess I won't give up a Grand Marnier souffle at my favorite Left Bank restaurant or one more walk along my favorite stretch of the Seine to find out, I'd like very much to see if Bill Dees still is quietly on the beam, which I bet he is, if Lou Harris is still solid, which extrapolations tell me he is, if Paul Severin is still a very nice man, if Charlie Barrett still hides his toughness under a boyish smile—and, dammit, if that Redhead still—is . . .

Since I'll never know for sure, I'm going to assume it all turned out well for each of you, though we all have lived long enough now to know that couldn't be . .

In any event, I hope you have a wife (or husband) as good as mine, kids as generally satisfying as mine, work that all in all is as challenging and rewarding as mine. I hope most tenderly that the things you have are the things that matter to you—that what you have lost wasn't entirely just thrown away, that you haven't stopped looking for things still to be found . . .

Personally, to tell the truth, I seem to have misplaced Yesterday, our Yesterday, the one we shared. I really can't believe it's dead and gone like some of the people—my friends Harry Lasker and Wieder Sievers, our special Saturday hero George Stirnweiss, some of your friends, too. Since it seems to be a trick of life that we are 45 or 46 or 47, though we feel like 21 inside, I choose to hope that one more trick remains to be played and we'll yet run into our sweet Yesterday on some very young Tomorrow.

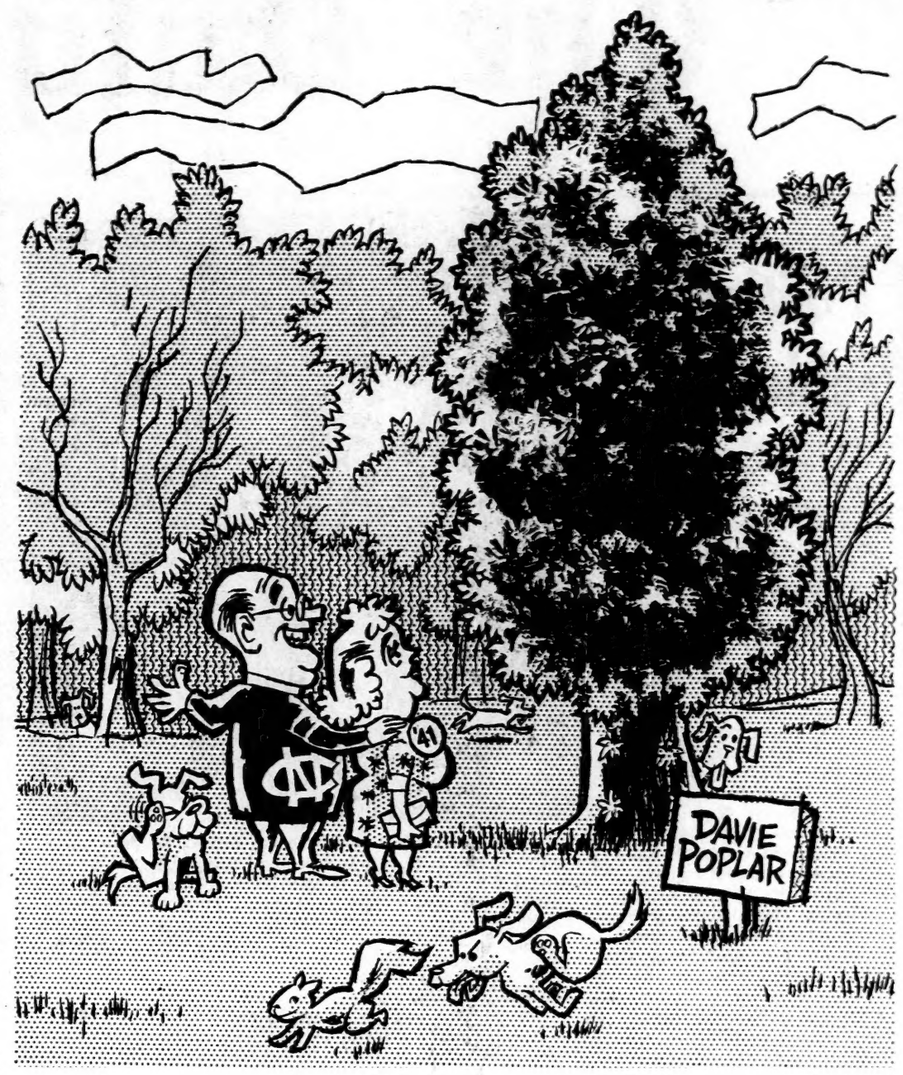
"Isn't It Wonderful? . . . Nothing Changed In 25 Years"



Creative Men

BY RICHARD ADLER

Yesterday was a very big day! But as usual, it began slowly with an 8 o'clock class. Then at the 10:30 break at the "Y" I ran into Sylvan Meyer. We were both ordering those super 10 cent malteds to keep us going through the morning.

Sylvan was busy with the Daily Tar Heel and talked rapidly about an idea for a sports feature on those three great stars of last year's team—Lalanne, "Stirny" and Severin — where they were now . . . what they were doing . . . It seemed important because a year ago is a long time.

I wandered outside and walked over to the steps at South Building. The "Big Four" were huddling again! Lou Harris, Henry Moll, Bert Bennett and Terry Sanford. Lou is behind-the-scenes analyst and statistician for Henry who wants Graham Memorial after he graduates in June. Law Student Sanford was giving Bert a few hints. Bert has his eye on the Student Body Presidency next year.

Interesting that these two devotees of student politics from different backgrounds (Lou from New Haven and Terry from Laurinburg) should be so often together . . . welded by a mutual love of government of any size or form.

Respectfully, I hung back from this important cluster of BMOC, and felt proud that I was allowed to be in the "neighborhood." Henry's open smile made me welcome. He introduced me to Lou and Terry. It was the first time I had met them! They were agreeable but were too deep in discussion to pay much attention to me. The bell rang and we broke up to go to our separate 11 o'clocks.

Bobby "Goat" Gersten said "hey!" He was walking with his great sidekick, All - American George Glamack. Bobby, five foot seven and George six foot five, were the Campus Mutt and Jeff. (I like Bobby's girl Libbie Izen from Asheville . . . So does Bob "Shuf" Shuford.)

After class I went to Graham Memorial for lunch. I was allowed to sit with some senior girls . . . all very pretty. Kate Lineback, Martha Clampitt, Marge Johnston, Mary Caldwell, and Margaret Rose Knight (she is my favorite, but she is Terry's girl). Bill Shuford, Manager of Graham Memorial, came and sat down. So did my roommate Charles Straus, who is also my best friend.

After lunch, I went upstairs to see Don Bishop, editor of the DTH. I had to turn in my review of Paul Green's "Native Son." I had been sent to New York to review the opening of the Orson Welles production starring Canada Lee. (I gave it a rave!) Don asked me to do a column of features called "Creative Men."

Later, I walked all the way to Greenwood (which is Paul Green's farm) to talk to Mr. Green. He is helping me plan the Carolina Workshop Festival for Performing Arts. Janet, his 10-year-old daughter, brought us in some hot gingerbread she had baked all by herself. I marveled at this little baker. Mr. Green said she was also a good writer. Nancy Byrd Green, seven years older, came in. I marveled at her, too!

I walked to the library to study. I checked an assignment with friend Paul Kolton, who was sitting with Morty Cantor and Jack "In Dubious Battle" Dube. At 5 o'clock Dube and I joined Stan Fuchs and walked over to the Playmaker Theatre for a rehearsal of "Bury the Dead." I'm playing the sixth corpse; Dube, a gravedigger; and Fuchs, the Captain.

After the rehearsal, I thought I'd treat myself to an especially extravagant dinner. I freshened up at the dorm and walked to the Carolina Inn cafeteria. While carrying my tray brimming with fried chicken, black-eyed peas, okra and tomatoes, I passed Lou Harris and Terry Sanford, still huddling.

Lou said, "Hey, Dick, how about joining us!"

That made it a very big day, yesterday . . . I mean 25 years ago . . . back in the Fall of 1941.

Lend An Ear

BY LOUIS HARRIS

A common experience of most people going back to a place of their youth is to have the sense that everything has shrunk. Stone walls are shorter, walks are narrower.

Oddly enough, this experience has never been true whenever I've returned to Chapel Hill.

To the contrary, the familiar land-marks of the late 1930's and early 1940's now seem more permanent, more solid, larger in their symbolism than they were back then.

This obviously is less a tribute to the maintenance of the old campus than to the roots of understanding so firmly planted in the minds of students.

The same Memorial Hall that heard Fascist Lawrence Dennis and Communist Earl Browder seems spacious and secure. The same Graham Memorial where meetings were held to seek admission of Negroes to the graduate school seems full and splendid.

Chapel Hill and the university campus of the pre-World War II era was big enough to house the most dissident of views, to absorb and to sift the most diverse expression of opinion.

The land-marks, as all inanimate objects, are only alive as the living make them.

I hope that 25 years hence, they will not be shrunken for the generation that now resides there.

Of Mice And Men

By SIMONS ROOF

During World War II there was a young fellow who finally managed to get through Pensacola flight training, and to graduate with the lowest passing grades on record.

He was assigned to an aircraft carrier squadron in the South Pacific. The squadron leader sent him aloft to show off his stuff. The squadron leader took a long look, gasped, and choked out to his assistant, "That guy's so bad he could get all of us killed. I hate to do it, but we'll have to put him in the hot spot."

The first time the squadron went out with its new pilot, the sky suddenly became black with Jap Zero fighters. And before anyone could fully realize it, the so-called poor pilot had zigged and zagged and zoomed his way to 19 Zeroes shot down. He inspected his guns. He had two bullets left. Glancing swiftly around, he spotted a Zero wobbling along and another trailing a wisp of smoke. In he went, with one bullet for each, and got both.

Then he raced back to the carrier, landed, and dashed up to see the Admiral in the con tower.

"Admiral," he said in a rush, "They said I was the stupidest guy ever to get through Pensacola! But you know what, Sir? I've just shot down twenty-one of those little so-and-so so-and-sos!"

* * *

May your successes be many, old classmate. And after each, may you have a happy and un-Ah-so landing.

Some Things Do Change; See 'Operation Match'

Today's Daily Tar Heel, while bearing out the premise that "the more things change, the more they are the same," also has some strange new language that was unknown 25 years ago. Some recent samples:

"Losing basketball and football teams are camp. Dean Long is camp. A two-month old umbrella is camp. Student Legislature is camp."

Advertisement: "Operation Match (The Computer Dating Service) is searching for a North Carolina District Manager. Send letter and resume to Operation Match, P. O. Box 72, Cambridge, Mass."

"The North Carolina Angel Flight has switched uniforms for the new semester. Instead of wearing the old blue ones every Thursday, they are now sporting red uniforms provided by the Fireside."

"Application of digital computers to literary and social-scientific research will be discussed at two UNC seminars Thursday and Friday at 3:30 p. m."

She Walks Alone... With Men

BY MARTHA CLAMPITT McKAY

Don Bishop, my editor and my friend, used to tell me he would print anything I wrote, as long as I signed my name to it. I assume the offer is still good.

Eunice "Panther" Patten Jones was unkind enough, not long ago, to drag out some of my old columns and make me read them. Heavens! What courage Bishop had!

I remember the feud Barnaby Conrad and I carried on in the Tar Heel—by agreement. And the one with Jane McMaster—not by agreement. (About what I know not.)

I remember . . . Sound and Fury . . . "One More Spring" . . . Sanford Stein, who was so bright, and who never got his due from any of us . . . Virginia Worth, singing "Tales My Mother Told Me" . . . "French" Gibson, dramatic and daring to be different . . .

Dolly "The Body" Erickson, followed around campus by a coterie of faithful slaves . . . Jo "Po," who madly loved Ace Brown . . .

"Droopy" Ewald ("My father is William G. Ewald, the most prominent younger man in Baltimore.") . . . "Droopy" ran one spring, or so she declared, for VICE president of the student BODY . . . Her platform included a promise of beer flowing from the Old Well . . . She greeted everyone with a sexy "Hey, Honey . . . (long pause) . . . How's your mother?"

She, Janet Watson, Tudie Hudson, Jo, Trudie Darden, Sallie Anna Evans and I, among others, no doubt drove poor Mrs. Cobb at No. One dorm to a premature grave. . .

I remember Ab, who never recorded what we charged or ordered, yet always knew exactly what we owed, the serial number of the record which was due in yesterday . . .

From him we bought "A Tisket, A Tasket," "Green Eyes," "Celery Stalks at Midnight," "Do I Worry?" and that Alvino Rey thing that all the sororities put on at 11 o'clock, and which ended with a throaty, whispered, "Goodnight" . . .

Then there was the "Lily of the Alley," where on occasion was seen one "Bat" Koonce, eating light bulbs and razor blades . . . and who was it who kept walking through the fire in the Bloody Bucket yard one night? . . . the "Count" maybe . . .

And Tommy Dorsey, who brought Connie Haines, Frank Sinatra, Jo Stafford and the Pied Pipers, Ziggy Elman and Buddy Rich for two years in a row to help celebrate the now extinct May Frolics . . . at which caper Bill Luke was last seen stretched out on the grass of Tenny's meadow . . . I might think him still there, except I have seen him gazing out at me from the pages of the New Yorker magazine, wearing a Countess Mara tie . . .

I remember (who present could forget) Ben Browning, minus his cigar, leaping from his post at first base and landing atop the press tables to catch a fly and claim an out . . . a real hero . . . and Jimmy Howard, and Bo Reynolds, and Popeye Jones . . . And Coach Bunn Hearn drawling, "Well, fellas, we gonna win a few . . . and lose a few . . . and a few will be rained out." . . .

And George Stirnweiss, great on the diamond and on the football field . . . The Carolina-Duke game, when we stood the entire second half, and won 6-3 . . . and on the side, we square danced, with Margaret Rose Knight Sanford leading the field . . .

Then there was politics with Bill Stauber dreaming up the Ramses party . . . a great manеuver . . . there were candidates . . . Bill Shuford, Herb Hardy, Lou Harris, Ike Grainger, Bill Dees, Stacy Crockett, the UP, the SP, the Student Legislature . . .

America First . . . Aid the Allies . . . and we had our speeches and marches (and tomatoes) too . . . We'd better not say too much when our kids take a stand . . .

I remember those who made us think for ourselves, and who inspired and encouraged . . . Rex Winslow, George Coffin Taylor, Hugh Lefler . . . Zimmerman, Bernstein, Harland, Mackie . . .

It was great . . . I loved it all, and I wouldn't go back . . . I like my present perch.

P.S. My column title referred to the Carolina Coed. Unfortunately, nobody ever figured this out—so 25 years later, for your information . . .

PLAYING THE GAME

BY LEONARD K. LOBRED

PLAYING THE GAME was the heading on a sports column in The Daily Tar Heel 25 years ago. If that heading had any connection with playing the game of life, it was intentional.

Comes now the occasion and the opportunity to measure how well the members of the Class of '41 are PLAYING THE GAME in their 25th year after graduation. A test, if you will, of our athletic skills, physical prowess, and mental alertness.

In the test which follows each member of the Class of '41 may determine his (or her) FLAB score in a subjectively unscientific manner. The only requisites for taking this test are complete honesty and a bad memory. When you have finished, your FLAB score will indicate whether you are a Forcefully Lively Athletic Body, a Fat and Lazy Apathetic Bum, and just plain FLAB.

At the start let's assume that none of the Class of '41 engages in contests of football, wrestling, boxing, lacrosse, or other robust, body contact sports of that kind, which we so much enjoyed during our sublime days as undergrads. If any of our Class of '41 still engages in any such activities, he (or she) should be getting paid for it, and as a professional is automatically ineligible to proceed further. He (or she) will have to go back to South Building and apply for a ticket to proceed.

Doubtless some members of the Class of '41 may still be able to participate in such athletic contests as softball games, touch football, or potato races, or other such muscular abuses which are so often planned as a feature of the Sunday School picnic. In the following questions and score sheet, you will be able to measure your own standing among the athletes and sportsmen of the Class of '41.

Have you, within the past 12 months, engaged in any of the following athletic endeavors?

- Touch football
- Softball
- Swimming
- Handball
- Tennis
- Dancing the Frug, Watusi, or Jerk
- Water-skiing
- Volley ball

For each such "engagement" score yourself 5 points.

Now for some milder forms of exercise. Within the last 12 months have you engaged in any of the following?

- Hiking
- Golf
- Horseback-riding
- Cycling
- Jacks
- Shoveling snow
- Archery
- Table tennis
- Playing catch with an offspring
- Changing a tire

For each time you've done something like this, score yourself 3 points.

The next set of questions. Have you engaged in any of these activities during the last 12 months?

- Fishing
- Flying a kite
- Standing up at the opening kickoff
- Emptying trash baskets at home
- Billiards
- Walking up the stairs when you could have ridden the elevator
- Riding in a convertible with the top down

Can you truthfully answer "yes" to any of these? If so, score yourself one (1) point for each "yes" answer.

This test was specially prepared for the Class of '41 to measure our adjustment to postgraduate living. It was tried out on a representative sample of our generation, who reported an average score of 86 proof.

GROWTH-POLITICS

five years ago the very idea of a separate university system would have died aborning because support of the Consolidated University was deep and wide-spread, and secondarily because North Carolina lacked the funds.

Today the issue is in doubt. Our State is wealthier. The growing pressure of students demanding enrollment is hard to meet. Old ties that bound alumni and friends to the University have loosened. Even if East Carolina College should be granted University status within the consolidated frame-work, other campaigns will arise aimed at the institution of the University, or at its influence within the State.

3. OUTLOOK FOR THE FUTURE

This summary of the University's political troubles points up mistakes that all of us have made. To citizens at large, the University too often has seemed to be caught up in a civil war. The name-change fight, the recent twist in the Speaker-Ban controversy in which the students and administration are at odds, and other issues have presented the picture of the University battling within iteself. Perhaps the pressures from without have been so great that internal dissensions inevitably would erupt. The fires of these conflicts have not been extinguished; they have only been banked and allowed to smoulder.

Both the name-change fight and the Speaker-Ban controversy may spring back to life, the one in the form of proposals to allocate members of the Board of Trustees of the Consolidated University to different member institutions and the second in the form of new teeth for the Speaker Ban Law.

As we return to renew acquaintance with the University, our girlfriend of 25 years ago, we find her in trouble. She is bulging so much in certain places that we hardly recognize her. A lot of old friends are cutting her now; they're paying attention to a young girl from the East. Others are gossiping about her. She is naturally a little sensitive, inclined to be defensive and even a little incoherent at times. Sometimes she just tries to flaunt her detractors.

What can we do to help her recapture that charm we used to know? She will never regain her girlish figure; we will just have to be reconciled to her new look. But underneath she still has her winning personality and style, if we can just help her to realize it.

We can restore her confidence by showing her we still love her. We can take up for her when we hear her good name slandered or her reputation abused. We can encourage her to persevere in times of trouble.

A letter to President Friday, to Chancellor Sitterson, or other administration friends on her behalf will help her to pull through her difficulties.

Finally, she needs a good word from each of us spoken directly to State Legislators who, after all, are her bosses. The girl doesn't need our money so much as she just needs love and support.

Does this report on our University seem too somber? Most of today's students, despite the handicaps, act about like the class that finished 25 years ago. They raise sand in fraternity houses, desert the campus on week-ends, denounce the Daily Tar Heel, put out torrid humor magazines and out-fox the Chapel Hill Police Department in the old tradition.

Maybe the University will survive despite all our worrying and declaiming!

The University of North Carolina Glee Club is going on a European concert tour in the summer of 1966.

Some At Least Haven't Slowed

Whether varsity star or reserve end on the fraternity touch football team, the average UNC sports-inclined member of '41 has diminished or eliminated his athletic activity in the intervening 25 years.

A few, however, have maintained or even stepped up their sports in contrast with college days.

Walter C. "Mickey" Wagner, of the '41 cross country and track teams, reports from the University of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif., that running keeps him in good shape.

Robert Cohn, who played intramural football, tennis and basketball in college, is high on the tennis ladder at Kenwood Club in Washington.

Mary Frye Kennedy, medical technologist in Bradenton, Fla., engaged in archery in 1941 and still practices it as a hobby.

Harry Dewey, a retired teacher and librarian in Beltsville, Md., swam at UNC. Today that interest had led him into sailing and canoeing. Swimming, he says, "has changed my whole life."

But basketballer Roy D. Asch, now vice president of Hanes Hosiery in New York, stopped that sport 10 years ago—though he still plays tennis doubles and has added golf to his regime.

Wrestler William G. Broadfoot, Jr., of Wilmington, confesses that he "sometimes wrassles my wife" in self-defense.

One '41-er—who may have been speaking for many — said his sport, then and now, was "girl-watching."

Lalanne Described As 'Most Colorful'

BY JIM KLUTTZ

It was a warm day in the spring of 1938 and Professor Ernest L. Mackie had just begun to lecture to his 12-1 o'clock freshman math class.

I had eaten an early lunch before going to class and that, combined with the warmth of the day, had begun to take effect and I was soon asleep, my head tilted back, mouth wide open. My snoring was barely audible.

One of our classmates four seats down the line couldn't resist the temptation.

Carefully he wadded a piece of paper into a shape similar to and slightly larger than a golf ball. He arched it high into the air and it plopped down dead center on target.

I awoke with a "ptui, ptui" sound, clearing my mouth. I straightened up and looked around sheepishly, then clumsily tried to find my place in the text book. Professor Mackie kept on lecturing without so much as looking my way.

Jim Lalanne was just as accurate with that paper ball as he was throwing a football on the Carolina gridiron during the next three varsity years as his exploits became a legend.

The class of 1941 had many great football players. There were All-American Paul Severin and Jim Mallory. There was Gates Kimball, gentle as a spring breeze but as wild as a wounded bull when riled on the football field or in the boxing ring. There was Bob Smith, and many others. But Jim Lalanne, perhaps, was the most colorful of them all.

Not before nor since, as a sports writer, have I seen a player who could run wide, leap high in the air, look and throw far down field as Lalanne did. He became one of the greatest passers in Tar Heel history.

His critics used to say, "Some day somebody's going to grab Lalanne by the ankles when he's up in the air and really cream him."

No one ever did.

When a yard or two was needed for a touchdown, Jim couldn't be stopped. He'd sail over the line of scrimmage for the score. Fans used to say, "He's going to get killed doing that."

He came out alive. And as far as I remember he never got hurt on one of those plays.

One of my most vivid recollections of those years was the afternoon in 1939 when Carolina played Tulane in New Orleans. Someone had rigged up a gadget called a "grid-graph", I believe, on the stage of Memorial Hall.

It was built in the form of a football field, and as the radio report came in the movement of the teams on the field would be shown by the movement of a light behind the screen.

At halftime Tulane led by 14-0 and seemed well on the way to a big victory. Lalanne, who had seen little action in the first half, went into the game in the third period, began to connect on his passes. With the ball on the 30 or 40-yard line at one point, the light behind the grid-graph moved all the way into the end zone and the crowd went wild. Lalanne had thrown a touchdown pass to Severin, the extra point was good and the score was 14-7.

In the fourth period Dick White pounced on a Tulane fumble in Greenie territory. The light behind the grid-graph once more moved into the end zone and the fans really were in a frenzy. Lalanne had thrown another touchdown pass and the score was tied at 14-all and that's the way the game ended.

One of the most heartbreaking games I can remember was the Tulane game of 1940. A much heavier, highly favored Tulane team came to Chapel Hill to smash the Tar Heels, who weren't having their best season.

Instead they ran into a fired-up team that scratched and clawed and made things miserable for them all afternoon. With less than two minutes to go the Tar Heels had the ball and led by 13-7 after outplaying their opponents for more than 58 minutes. With the ball on the Tulane 40 and fourth down, a punt was called.

The kick was blocked and the ball bounded into the arms of the Tulane left end who was loafing on the play. He streaked goalward with the ball, the extra point was kicked and Tulane won by a 14-13 score. I can still see Lalanne stretched out after making a futile dive for the runner at the goal line.

In addition to the entire team playing a great game, it was also one of Lalanne's best. He recovered a fumble and intercepted a pass to set up two of three big drives the Tar Heels made. He led two of those for touchdowns, then on the third carried the ball on almost every play for a first down on the Tulane seven.

Two passes fell incomplete and Coach Ray Wolf sent in a substitute with a pass play. The pass was intercepted and that ended what could have been the winning touchdown drive. The Tar Heels that day took every honor except the score, and that, unfortunately, is what games are judged by.

Bricks Are Meaningful To Former Grid Star

Quarterback Jim Lalanne had cleats on his shoes to help his footing when he was blazing trails of glory on the football field for UNC. The Daily Tar Heel's editorial campaign for more brick sidewalks on campus was remote from his world.

Today he's very much interested in the subject. Lalanne makes bricks. His Triangle Brick Company, he reported, has "furnished the brick on every major building and project at the University since we started production in 1960."

PHI BETES

partner in the CPA firm of Hertz, Herson & Co., Charlotte, had a B-plus or A-minus. CPA David Wurreschke, income tax specialist with the Southern Company in Atlanta, thinks he was high in the School of Commerce with only one B in four years.

Several felt the key had little to do with landing a job.

Irwin Zuckerman, president of the '41 chapter, is positive it did. Irwin, former executive vice president of Hudson Pulp and Paper Corp., New York, feels that "man's intellect and competitive capability has too far outgrown his humanity."

Two feel the key helped get the first job: James H. Toy of Spartanburg, S. C., and Wurreschke. Toy, an executive at Deering Millikan textiles, says it helped him as a symbol that some people recognized him as a success. Jim didn't wear his key until 1956—when he was teaching a group of new employees the ropes. He thought it might make a constructive impression on them.

Attorney Bill Joslin of Raleigh, doesn't believe his achievement necessarily spurred him to greater scholastic effort. But, he says, having earned the key helps him work harder at the task before him. Like most, Bill would try for PBK again.

Holt Haywood, Jr., president of Arden Farms Packing Co. of Clemmons, and Haywood Metals Co., New York import-exporters, holds that "membership . . . was the most meaningful achievement at UNC . . . it carries universal prestige and establishes a member as a person of high ability."

Harry Billica would try again, too. He's research manager for DuPont's textile fiber department in Kinston.

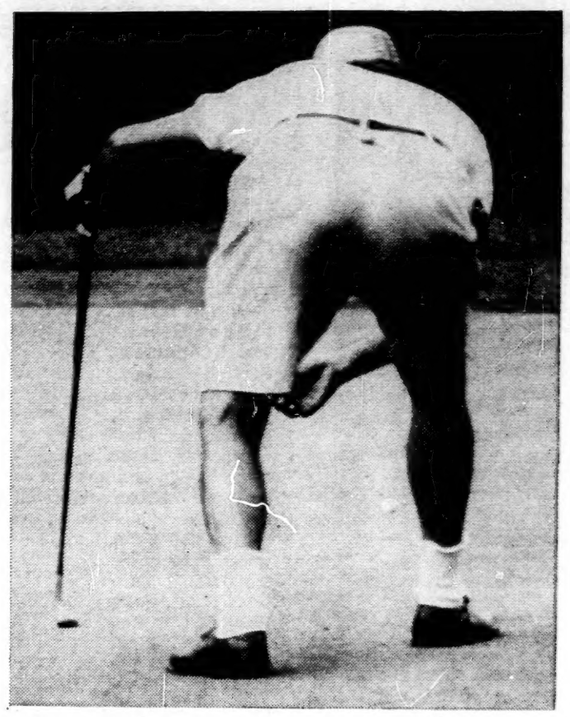
Bill Bruner is president of the First National Bank in Columbia, S. C. A former CPA and associated with the bank for 18 years, Bill likens PBK to bank advertising: "It's good . . . essential, but its specific results often are difficult to measure." He, as well as others, looks on membership not as a means to an end but rather recognition of the student's diligence.

Nash doesn't wear his key; his wife does—on a charm bracelet. Wurreschke hasn't worn his since vests went out 15 years ago. But vests seem to be coming back, don't they?

Louis Harris, the polling expert, has donated data in his polling practices to the Political Science Department at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill. The University has begun a "Harris Polling Center."

The Davie Poplar still stands. The tree was a grown tree offering substantial shade when a party seeking to establish a site for the University of North Carolina stopped there in 1793. The tree is a North Carolina shrine, named for General William Richardson Davie, called "the father of UNC".

The University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill has had 10 football stars named to the All-American list.



PAUL V. SEVERIN, who loomed large as a football player at UNC, still does. The star end of the Class of 1941 is shown in characteristic pose as a golfer in a city tournament in Richmond, Va., where he is in the insurance business.

This Will Shake the Republic—

Sports Editor Finds Sports a Bore

Mr. Don Bishop, Editor
Ye Ole Tar Heel
Dear Don:

In our initial discussions on articles to be prepared for our 25th Reunion Edition you suggested I write a piece on " a sports editor's view of sports 25 years later." I had to confess, as you will recall, that I just can't stand to sit through athletic contests any more, I don't know the names of today's athletes, nor the names of the teams. Well, this brought forth a jolly laugh from you and a full measure of agreement, and we exchanged our assurances on that point. "Well, that is so interesting," you said, and you suggested I write a sports column for the 25th Reunion Edition revealing this awful truth. It could be "humorous," you said.

Frankly, Don, I lack the courage. Do you think our contemporaries will understand? Won't they think we're square, or far out, or something? Have their interests changed, too?

All I can say on the subject is, I've lost touch. To me, the Buffalo Bills sounds like a department store, the New York Knickerbockers sounds like bock beer, the Clemson Tigers something to do with petrol, the Houston Astros must be our nation's third set of astronauts, and the Los Angeles Rams something out of a discarded astrology book.

I've seen only two football games during the last 10 years, and about three baseball games. Something about being a "good father," you know, but my heart's not in it anymore.

I hope you'll understand, I just can't write that item you suggested.

Sincerely,
Leonard K. Lobred

CLASS OF '41

Grace Rutledge Hamrick, Jim Kluttz, Bill Conley, Cameron MacRae, Junius Fox, and many others join in a chorus that Carolina has become so large there is less "warmth, closeness, friendliness, togetherness".

As Dr. David Citron of Charlotte put it, "the tremendous expansion has caused the inevitable deterioration of personal identification." And Collins (Bull) Dawson, businessman in Derby, Conn., and Oscar Zimmerman, businessman in Atlanta, speak of the "factory system" in turning out today's students.

Among those who have gone to careers in higher education, George Simpson, Chancellor of the University System of Georgia, says in 1941 "UNC was more alive, more hopeful, more a part of the world than today." And Fred A. Cazel, professor of history at the University of Connecticut, sees today's campus marked by "terrific pressures of competition and conformity—there is not the same freedom to think, or to hear, new ideas."

But Richard (Scoop) Morris, Asheville Citizen-Times sports writer, says UNC is "a little too liberal and radical now;" Helen Holt Morrison, housewife in Warrenton, N. C., says she dislikes "all the political ferment and student unrest;" and Aubrey Moore, treasurer of Capital Broadcasting (WRAL-TV) says "various groups (of students) are more belligerent toward each other and less tolerant of the other's views. Protest groups and demonstrations create dissension. . . "

David Blalock, Wadesboro businessman, says there are now "too many odd-balls on campus;" Bill Cobb, farmer and tobacco warehouseman Pinetops, says there are too many "crackpots;" Seymour Brown, Goldsboro businessman, is skeptical about the "political factions, beatniks."

Chris Siewers, Fayetteville surgeon, was the only one to confess that while UNC is too large, "I'm too large, too!"

STILL ENTHUSIASTS

Among those who feel they would enjoy the current Carolina, long hair and all, as much as UNC in 1941:

Ott Burton, lawyer in Milton, N. C. "Then, a bike . . . now, a honda . . . no difference."

Frank Fatell, New York City businessman: "No reason to believe that UNC did not improve with age."

Three in close agreement were Thad Moser, Asheboro attorney: "It is larger but has not changed in fundamentals;" Harry R. Billica, a chemistry researcher in Kinston, "basically the atmosphere has not changed;" Porter L. Fortune of Toledo, national executive secretary of the National Exchange Club, "Basically, the attractions of being a student at Chapel Hill are the same now as they were then."

Alexander Carver, with Playbill in New York City, says he would enjoy UNC MORE today than in 1941 because the university now pays more attention "to those elements which would be of greater benefit later in life."

Butler P. Crittenden of Beaumont, Texas, describes UNC as the "most enlightened and qualified school — then and now. I haven't changed a lot and the university doesn't seem to have either."

Ella-Keen Steel Gunster of Arlington, Va.: "The same fabulous atmosphere is still there, academic standards are still high, and Carolina is progressive."

Army Col. Rusk G. Henry, Memphis: "I really am not any older, and attitudes have not changed."

Roy L. Ingram, professor of geology at UNC: "The main enjoyment of college is the freedom in which to grow up, the freedom to succeed, the freedom to fail. Those basic freedoms still exist at Carolina—almost . . . . the Speaker Ban law gives the students something to think about, something to fight for."

Jim Lalanne (see page 3) came out with a cryptic and philosophical: "Everything is relative."

Arthur S. Link, Edwards Professor of History at Princeton University: "I assume I would enjoy it more now . . . we have no depression and World War such as we faced."

Thomas A. (Jitterbug) Wright, Chicago advertising man: UNC has kept abreast of the times, appears "equally as dynamic and exciting in today's times as it was 25 years ago."

A final thought: what would the class of '16 have said about our Chapel Hill of 1941?

More than 100 alumni of Carolina have been elected to the United States House of Representatives and seven are now serving there.

Remember Those Great Carolina Teams of Yesteryear (1937-41)

1937-38, Our Freshman Year

Football in shirt-sleeve weather . . . the football team one of the University's all-time best, with a 9-1 record . . . Co-captains Andy Bershak and Crowell Little . . . Coach Ray Wolf . . . Frisby Selling Doors In Down Under Firm

No question about it, George Frisby, '41, of Elizabeth City, has gone a long way in life—all the way to St. Peters, New South Wales, Australia.

Frisby served in World War II on Admiral Barbey's staff, 7th Amphibious Force, located at Brisbane, Australia. While there he met and married his wife.

After the war, they lived 2½ years in San Jose, California, then returned to Australia. Frisby is sales director for Corinthian Joinery Pty. Ltd., manufacturers of doors and laminated plastics.

"We are the largest door manufacturers in Australasia, producing some 3,000 doors per day," he reports.

Daughter Janine, 18, is a freshman at the University of New South Wales. But Bobby, 10, is being conditioned for UNC.

Warm Reunion

attending UNC medical school in '41-'43 was graduated from the University of Pennsylvania Medical School in 1944, vied for travel miles from the east. They came from Wilmington.

The session brought together two classmates, each unaware the other was a professor at UNC! Roy L. Ingram has been professor of geology since 1947 and was chairman of the department from 1957-65. Ingram and Dr. William T. Burns, dentist, had much in common to find each other living in Chapel Hill and associated with their alma mater. Classmate Ralph C. Patrick, anthropologist, is a UNC associate professor.

While many '41-ers chatted about offspring attending the University, two doting fathers of six-month-olds were present. Mr. and Mrs. Tom Hackney, Jr., of Wilson proudly announced their six-month-old daughter is Virginia Jennings Hackney who arrived to keep company with two older children, Ann and Thoms. The Walter Lambeths not only spoke with pride of their six-month-old baby — they're also grandparents!

The Hackneys and Lambeths were unaware that Phil Carlton, Jr., of Greensboro could crow even louder. The Carltons expected their fourth bundle in March, joining Mary Freeman, 12, Elizabeth White, 9, and Phil III, 7. Executive vice president of Phil R. Carlton, Inc., a 50-year-old general insurance agency, Phil has served as president of the Greensboro Association of Insurance Agents, national trustee of Sons of the American Revolution, and nine years on the Greensboro City Board of Building Appeals.

While the baby talk proceeded, someone added that the Fish Worleys had become new parents. Details were not available.

Carroll McGaughey of Charlotte, WSOC-TV personality and news director, planned to attend the February session but at the last minute wired: "There must be some mistake—I'm not that old." Others indicating they would be present but failing to show included Bill Beerman of Greensboro, Bill Broadfoot of Wilmington, "Sis" Clinard Flinn of Chapel Hill, George Shipp of Winston-Salem and Bill Snider of Greensboro.

Sam Teague, Jr., of Morganton, visited his Morehead scholar son, George Major Teague, 20, class of '69. He and the former Mary D. White of Edenton also have a daughter, Mary Hart, 13. Sam has been associated with Drexel Furniture Co. since being discharged from USNR Lt.-Commander in 1946. He is administrative sales director.

Dr. James M. Zealy of Goldsboro worked as a DuPont chemist from 1941 to 1943 before entering the University of Louisville School of Dentistry.

Pharmacist Calvin S. Oakley of Mebane visited a son, Chuck, as did Steve Forrest, president of Justice Drug Co. in Greensboro, whose son is a UNC freshman. Ike Grainger, now vice-president of Kayser-Roth Hosiery Co., has a son, Ike, III, who is a UNC sophomore; Donald W. McCoy, Fayetteville lawyer, pointed to Donald W., Jr., a junior; B. C. Smith, Pittsboro lawyer, has a sophomore son at UNC; the Rush Hamricks, Jr. (Grace Rutledge) visited Rush III, UNC freshman.

Joe Zaytoun moved from New Bern in 1962 to Raleigh, where he is vice president of Associated Insurers, Inc., and has been tapped for the Million Dollar Round Table. Active in Gov. Terry Sanford's campaign, Joe was appointed to the N. C. State Board of Elections in 1961-65.

Tall, gray-headed G. B. Lamm, who took pictures for the Buccaneer and DTH, after stumping old friends for a few minutes, started covering his identification tag and asking "Remember me?" G. B. served as principal of Ellerbe High School for nine years after principalships at Lilesville, Peachland, Biscoe and Creedmoore. He received his M.A. from UNC in 1952 and attended Duke, University of Redlands (Calif.), Marshall University in West Virginia ,and Highland University in New Mexico.

Bill Joslin received congratulations for winning the Outstanding N. C. Citizen Award in 1965. He is the father of six children.

Dr. Charlie Barker, New Bern dentist, and Cam MacRae, Jr., of Concord, gathered suggestions as co-dorm managers for the reunion., Cam, manufacturers' agent for MacRae Sales Co., figured "lights out" rules may be relaxed from those of 25 years ago. Asked what dorm would probably house reunion couples, someone answered "Morrison, the one between here and Raleigh."

J. Oliver Ranson attended with wife Catherine, R. N., who served on the Defense Advisory Commission for Women in Service under Secretary of Defense McNamara.

Eunice Patten Jones of Chapel Hill was present with husband Dr. J. Kempton Jones, who was student body president at "Dook." Now a housewife, Eunice is a graduate of the medical record librarian course at Duke.

Martha Clampitt McKay, tired of volunteer work, claimed she now has a paying position though she's called a "lady fink"! She is a consultant for the Office of Inspection of the Office of Economic Opportunity. Duties take her throughout the South. Martha served on the Democratic National Committee (1960-64), the executive committee of the national committee between 1962-64, the N. C. Good Neighbor Council (1963-65), and the National Citizens Committee of the Community Relations Service. Sons Alexander and Bryan are in the U.S. Navy and a UNC freshman, respectively. Daughter Katherine is a star basketball player at Chapel Hill High.

Jack Menius, Asheboro orthodontist, told of returning to UNC for his M.S. in Orthodonics in 1960. Dr. Albert Stewart, Jr., of Fayetteville boasted of five sons. Another M. D. is Charles O. Humphries of Durham. Dr. Britt Beasley, Kinston dentist, received the D.D.S. degree from Medical College of Virginia in 1949. Dr. Kenan B. Williams is with Pediatric Associates in Winston-Salem.

Bill Conley, Statesville cost accountant, called his greatest blessing since 1941 the fact that he's "still living." Married to Mary Lillian Jones, he said he's the father of two "mean" boys, Billy, 15, and David, 11.

Ott Burton, Asheboro lawyer since 1945, laughed that he was married to Ruby Brown Burton, '45, and that she's "mean and hard to handle — sings, yells—typical coed."

Erwin Jones, president and general manager of Erwin Jones & Co., in Charlotte, ventured kinder words for wife Macy Ross Jones, Converse alumna, and credited her with activity in community affairs. Erwin is chairman of the Mecklenburg Opportunity School and president of the Society for Advancement of Management.

Noting that wife Shirley is noteworthy for putting up with him was Luther C. Hodges, who owns a heating and air conditioning business in Winston-Salem. Luther, who has three children in the gifted student program, has published two books of poetry.

Attorney Louis W. Gaylord, Jr., drove from Greenville. On the local board of directors of Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., he was Greenville Young Man of the Year in 1952 and has served on his city's school board.

Two '41 bachelors much in evidence were William M. "Bill" Shuford, personnel director of N. C. Memorial Hospital in Chapel Hill, and David J. Sessoms, Jr., director of institutional studies and fiscal aid officer for Catawba College in Salisbury. David was director of Graham Memorial and superintendent of recreation in Chapel Hill before going to Catawba.

Bill Wall, owner of Home Builders Supply Co., of Siler City, and wife Marie hurried home following the meeting to check on 15-year-old daughter, Patricia. Philip W. Haigh had four boys, ages 9 to 19, in Fayetteville where he is a certified public accountant; and Ralph T. Isley, with the Gastonia Industrial Commission, called on daughter Margaret at St. Mary's Junior College before returning home.

N. Clayton Lee, executive vice president of United Securities Co., and Grover C. Godwin, owner of Godwin Insurance Agency, both of Greensboro, were others who braved snow and ice to attend the reunion.

Here's looking to the 50th in 1991!

Reunion Planners Photo Dies On Pad

An important item on the agenda when reunion chairman Hargrove "Skipper" Bowles called a large committee meeting last February was the setting up of a group photograph of its full membership.

The project required 45 minutes. But who could object when his picture was going to appear in the 25th reunion edition of the Daily Tar Heel?

Then came the report from Alumni Secretary J. Maryon Saunders:

"After a very successful luncheon yesterday and after a splendid pose had been arranged, the University's Photo Lab tells me today that the group picture failed. It's sorta like a multi-million dollar moon rocket diving into the Atlantic. Next to the capable photographer who 'took' the picture, I am sure I feel worst!"

SEER GOES INTO

their 82-channel television receivers from wherever they may be, with two-way communication between professor and students.

Of the 40,000 students on the campus, about 60 per cent will be women. However, only about 50 per cent of the faculty will be female. There will be co-chancellors, a man and a woman.

The University will be in session the year around, although the class and laboratory attendance work will only be 10 hours a week. There will be 99-hour weekends, and quickie sabbaticals. The leisure-time projects will be for travel around the earth and inter-planetary, and students studying for higher degrees will be required to bring back viable data from any spot on earth when class convenes at 8 o'clock on Monday mornings.

There will be a squabble between the football coaches of Carolina and Duke, because of mutual accusations of unfairness in using electronic computers in a devious manner in violation of Atlantic Coast Conference rules. Coach Danny Talbott will accuse the Duke coach of delaying the game by using an old-fashioned computer in calling and diagnosing plays. Carolina and Duke will be practically one campus and separated only by a wall at a juncture near what is now the Howard Johnson Restaurant on the Durham-Chapel Hill Boulevard.

The University's Medical Center will be pre-eminent in the nation, chiefly because of the all-purpose pill that operates like a thermostat. As long as you're on the pill, you won't become ill physically or mentally, and you can indulge in alcohol and other vices without a hangover or other disastrous consequences.

The planet Zovril, discovered by the Cosmic Ray Center at Chapel Hill, is 400 million miles away, but communication is maintained by new discoveries enabling human beings on earth to keep in touch with the beings on Zovril who live in a civilization at least 10 million years in advance of ours. The main UNC science project will be, in 1991, to utilize the knowledge coming from Zovril, to develop our own civilization and advance it at least by four or five million years in public improvements, education, etc.

This venture, of course, will be opposed by campus activists, who hate their great grandfathers, because they want Chapel Hill and the entire earth to remain quiet, calm, unawakened and unshaven.

In 25 Years—

Ambitions Change Slightly . . . By One Word

What a difference one word makes!

Or so it is indicated by responses of several '41 alumni when questioned about their ambition "then" and "now."

William D. Van Dyke, advertising manager of Universal CIT Credit Corp. in New York, yearned 25 years ago "to get away from Memphis," his home city. Today his big urge is "to get back to Memphis."

Robert Z. Lerner of Long Island, N. Y., has even greater one-word difference in ambition. In 1941 he wanted "to be President of the U.S.A." In 1966 he wants "not to be President of the U.S.A."

Marjorie Johnston McAfee of Hartford City, Ind., reports that her college days ambition was "to learn a lot and play a little." Today it's "to learn little and play a lot."

War and atomic fallout of the past 25 years notwithstanding, a sense of humor repeatedly shines through as '41-ers reexamine their ambitions a quarter century later.

Hamilton Polk Underwood, Jr., of Fayetteville, wanted no more than "to get an education" 25 years ago. Today he aspires "to make enough money to support the 'Great Society.' "

Cameron MacRae, Jr., owner of MacRae Sales Co. of Concord, who as a college graduate aspired "to be a Navy pilot because he didn't want to walk to war, cites this ambition: "To pay bills and taxes."

Alexander H. "Zan" Carver, Jr., with Playbill, the theatrical program published in New York, seeks to "keep overhead down."

William Tate Conley, office manager for J. P. Stevens and Co. at Turnersburg, near Statesville, had an objective to earn $500 a month in 1941. Now he's upped it to $5,000 per month.

But William E. Cobb, Jr., farm operator and tobacco warehouseman of Pinetops, once a seeker of "fame and fortune," now aims "to live and let live."

J. Harry Hoffman of the Doylestown, Pa., Trust Co., hopes only to "pick the right stocks on the New York Stock Exchange."

Idealism and determination also stand out when members of '41 are asked about their dreams.

IDEALISM: "To be a physician," said Byrd Merrill, editor of the '41 Yackety Yack. "To be a good physician" is now the objective of the Western Electric staff physician in New York.

"To make sound and lasting contributions to geological and paleontological science," hopes Robert B. Neuman, now of the U.S. Geological Survey in Washington, D. C.

"To do something of lasting value for North Carolina," is the ambition of Hargrove "Skipper" Bowles, Jr., Greensboro businessman who served as director and chairman of the North Carolina Department of Conservation and Development from 1961-65.

"To put four children through any college," answers idealist-realist Margaret Arnold Bell, of McLean, Va.

DETERMINATION: "To excel at being a certified public accountant" is the ambition of William Salowe, Director of Professional Development at the American Institute of CPAs in New York.

"Sales in stainless steel and exotic metals," replies John W. Parker, who, predictably, is in that business in Bristol, Tenn., as Blackman-Uhler Industries.

"To improve my golf," writes insurance man Grover C. Godwin of Greensboro, with a decided note of determination.

Of a sample 100 members of '41 replying to a questionnaire, nine mentioned "retirement" as their ambition.

How's Your Recollection?

'1:30 Class' Repeated on TV

Remember your 8:30 a.m. classes of 25 years ago?

Then how's your recollection memory of "The 1:30 Class"—taught at the Carolina and Pick theatres by "Professor" E. Carrington Smith?

They were the Chapel Hill movie houses. The Carolina is now the Varsity; what was the Pick is the Carolina. Mr. Smith still presides over both citadels of culture.

Asked to list films of 1940-41, Mr. Smith reeled off "Fighting 69th," "Northwest Mounted," "Rebecca," "Mark of Zorro," "Grapes of Wrath," "Northwest Passage," "Abe Lincoln," "Gunga Din," "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," and "Young Tom Edison."

He could have mentioned "Horror Island," with Dick Foran, Leo Carrillo, Peggy Foran and Fuzzy Knight—but mercifully didn't.

"Gone With the Wind" returned to the Pick at 40 cents (until 4 p.m.) for adults, advertising "Nothing Cut But the Price."

"How Green Was My Valley" won the Academy Award in 1941. Gary Cooper was "best actor" for "Sergeant York." "Best actress" was Joan Fontaine for "Suspicion." "Best song" was "The Last Time I Saw Paris" from "Lady Be Good."

Other hits of 1941 included "One Foot in Heaven," "Citizen Kane," "The Man Who Came to Dinner," "High Sierra," "Meet John Doe," and "Kings Row."

Reflections On Re-Reading Yackety Yack

Reflections while re-reading the Yackety Yack 25 years later:

Everything written or said by Dr. Frank P. Graham, including his message to the class of '41, has a poetic beauty . . . Dean House's harmonica playing gave a special flavor to our student days; wonder if the youngsters have anything like it now?

There's Terry Sanford, just another member of the Student Legislature—but there's the far-off look of the governorship in his eye . . . And Bill Cochrane, speaker of the Student Legislature, who did so much to reshape student government for the needs of an enlarged student body. . .

Did anyone have a more impressive name than Sydenham Benoni Alexander? . . . . Who would have thought campus politician Martha Clampitt (now McKay) would some day become a Democratic National Committeewoman? Why just about everybody, of course. . .

How many questions have been raised by spouses about that girl (or guy) pictured with you in your Yackety Yack? . . . Dig those wide lapels on the men's jackets . . . Whose picture is seen most frequently in the Yackety Yack? The roundtable in the Grail meeting room at Graham Memorial, of course. . .

The Daily Tar Heel was a good training ground for just about everything. One staffer became a bullfighter in Spain (Barnaby Conrad), one became a top-flight pollster (Louis Harris), another became No. 2 man at the American Stock Exchange (Paul Kolton, nee Komisaruk). . .

Irwin A. Zuckerman, last man in his class alphabetically, was first scholastically . . . Golden Fleece, the vintage honor society, had no page in the '41 Yackety Yack. Couldn't afford it . . . . Why was it that some fraternities, although composed of readily distinguishable individuals, somehow looked alike when seen together costumed in their homogenized slacks and sweaters?

Have you ever wondered what the "13" Club was? Or, since you were a member of it, did you ponder the place in campus society of Gorgon's Head?

What would have been the reaction at May Frolics in '41 if some clairvoyant member of the class had suddenly started doing the Watusi? . . . Alumni resistance was finally overcome in our generation and girl cheerleaders were accepted at UNC. How stuffy can alumni be? . . .

Pleasant memories of the long-gone past: the S. H. Kress ad identifying itself as the 5c, 10c and 25c store. . .

OUR CHANGING

would be all right).

Boots, leather sandals, levis, long hair, and shirt-tails OUT, are IN.

There are 1,000 faculty members prepared to help launch junior on a career, and they have the run of 137 buildings. Forty-oners managed with 66 buildings and 321 teachers. It was cheaper then, too. The yearly budget in the good old days was $3,320,000; now, its over $32 million. Then the state put up $644,000, now it's $16½ million.

If necessary, one can be hospitalized at Chapel Hill and have the best of care. The Division of Health Affairs includes Medicine, Dentistry, Nursing, Public Health and Pharmacy, all of which are in new buildings.

Construction now going on adds up to $58 million, with $60 million more coming. Zoology, botany, geology, languages, art, music, physics, education and the Institute of Government will get new or expanded facilities.

Many existing buildings will be renovated, research space will be provided, the lower quads will be converted to women's dorms. And there's to be a huge new computer in the Research Triangle area which will be programmed from UNC, Duke and State. The Research Triangle is a large area about equidistant from each of the three schools. Chemstrand and others are there. IBM and a huge government environmental health center are coming.

It's overwhelming! But the greatest part is that a Morehead scholar is just as big on campus as a football hero—maybe bigger.

University students recently completed a drive to send blood to American soldiers in Viet Nam. Collected during the two-day drive were 535 pints of blood for our servicemen.

SANDBURG SAW

received a diploma, presided over the exercises which were held on beautiful Memorial Stadium at twilight. A light shower that fell just before the program opened threatened to send the vast audience into Woollen Gymnasium, as last year.

Herb Hardy of Sanford spoke words of farewell for the seniors, and President Frank P. Graham responded.

Before presenting diplomas, Governor J. Melville Broughton, attending his 17th commencement this Spring, expressed the hope the graduates from other states would remain in North Carolina.

"We want thoes who cannot remain with us to carry a message to their folks that the Old North State remains true to the faith, that we are united in our sentiments, that we are supporting the President, the Constitution and the flag, that we have accepted our defense assignments without complaint or strikes.

The Governor said he hoped funds would be found to supplement a conditional gift of $150,000 by the Rockefeller Foundation for the establishment of a great department of dramatic art at the University.

President Graham, in a farewell address of poetic beauty said: "At this time, when millions of American youth stand ready at the call of their country to pledge their allegiance, their lives and their most sacred honor to the most precious things for which America stands, we of the staff of the University, I take it, have no hesitation to the call of our board of trustees in pledging our allegiance to the Constitution of the United States and its historic Bill of Rights, under which stand the freedom of the individual, the freedom of the University, and the freedom of America.

"The charges of subversive activities against members of the staff of the University of North Carolina break down in the presence of the Constitution and its bill of rights.

"We of the overwhelming majority of Americans who support the President's foreign policy of all-out aid to the democrats should not withdraw the guarantees of the Bill of Rights from the isolationists who include many sincerely patriotic Americans. We should also recall the Constitution's guarantee of equal protection of the laws includes requirements for equal public facilities regardless of race, color, or economic position."

"Moreover," he said, "it is well to remind ourselves that our American tradition of human liberty includes at the birth of the republic the rights of man and collective separation in the declaration of independence and in the present maturity of an industrial nation the rights of labor and collective bargaining in the National Labor Relations Act.

"To be truly American in the great American tradition is sometimes miscalled un-American. To stand by our historic American Bill of Rights is not a subversive activity. It is unfair to our religion and our Americanism to call the most decent, humane, and spiritual hopes communistic. The more Americans who understandingly and sincerely subscribe to the Constitution and its Bill of Rights, the better for the University, America and the world."

FORMER FIRST LADY — Campus politics at UNC led to much bigger fields for Margaret Rose Knight, '41, above, and Terry Sanford, '39. She became Mrs. Sanford and they campaigned for his election as Governor of North Carolina in 1960. Asked in the DTH questionnaire why she again would attend UNC, she answered: "Met Terry."

These Foolish (And Serious) Things Remind Class of '41

Football games . . friends . . professors . . dance weekends . . frat and dorm bull sessions . . the over-all "spirit" of the place . . the sense of intellectual stimulation and growth . . these are the things, some foolish and some serious, that the class of '41 remembers most about Carolina.

Are forty-oners nostalgic about UNC? You bet. Mary Louise Wilson Edmonds, now a housewife and theatrical director in Lincoln, Mass., rapturously described her most memorable recollection as follows: "Spring . . spring . . spring . . roses and the perfumed night air, moist and heavenly!" Many others answered in similar vein in a Daily Tar Heel survey.

Less romantic were Al Stewart, now a Fayetteville physician, whose most vivid memory was "being broke;" and several gentlemen, perhaps best unidentified for the benefit of their offspring, who listed "all-night poker games," and Charles Mashburn, Marshall attorney, who cited "Friday night at Harry's."

Do graduates remember their commencement speaker? Bob Lerner, Fred Cazel, and David Citron all cited the commencement address by Carl Sandburg.

Do professors have a lasting influence on students? More than 10 percent of the replies listed professors among their most prominent recollections.

At least four had the memorable experience of meeting their spouse at Carolina: Bill Allen, Charlotte advertising man; Blanche Cook Scott of Norton, Va.; Jean Littell Winslow of Wilmington, Delaware; and Faye Riley Branca of Newark, Delaware.

Jack Menius, orthodontist in Asheboro, remembers "being lost the first few weeks." Bill Gilliam, estate tax consultant in Virginia Beach, and a number of others, listed "just graduating."

Jerome Schack, New York City physician, recalls "the intellectual tone—liberal, doubting, alive." Walter Wagner, now with the University of the Pacific in Stockton, Calif., remembers "the honor system." And several others cited the atmosphere of freedom, including Leonard Lobred of Washington, D. C., Helen Holt Morrison of Warrenton, John Parker of Bristol, Tenn., and Harry Dewey of Beltsville, Md.

Two businessmen, Alexander Carver of New York City and Johnny Carver of Derby, Conn., recalled a "chewing out" by their deans as their most memorable experience.

Marjorie Davis Grier of Due West, S. C., summed up the feelings of many as she recalled "the friendly, easy-going (at times) informality of life in a small southern college town."

Numerically, the most-mentioned memory was of football games; next came friendships made at Carolina; and next, in about equal proportions, were the beauty of the campus, dances, professors, and bull sessions.

lieutenant colonel, though he looked a little perplexed.

U-N-C

In September 1960, Miss America 1961 was about to be chosen in Atlantic City. As publicist for the Miss America Pageant telecast, I regarded it as my solemn duty to watch the girls rehearse their entrances.

Even in hair curlers and wearing slacks, there was something about the girls that caught one's attention. Especially Miss Connecticut, a tall brunette with flashing dark eyes. No question about it, she was worth a study of the biographical sheets issued by my office for each of the girls.

Then the crushing discovery: She was born June 10, 1941—the day the Class of '41 received diplomas.

Thought For The Day

In common with many college seniors, the editor of this newspaper 25 years ago thought that collegians had as many of the answers as their elders. Little that he has seen since has altered that view.

UNC Facts

More than half of North Carolina's 61 governors have been alumni of the University at Chapel Hill.

A $17 million national center for testing wonder drugs and toxic drugs, as well as other pharmacological research, will be established in Chapel Hill, as an adjunct to the UNC Medical School. The vanguard is now housed in a trailer.

The University of North Carolina maintains the state's educational television system, with four broadcasting stations — at Raleigh, Greensboro, Chapel Hill and Columbia. Six more stations will be established to set up a statewide network.
